The government controls the media in Cameroon via the state run Cameroon Radio-Television Corporation (CRTV) which operates national television and radio networks as well as provincial stations. Newspapers are also subject to government controls. There are two private television stations and numerous private radio stations.

CULTURE

Cameroon is characterised by an extraordinary geographical, cultural and linguistic diversity that is reflected in the work of Mongo Beti (1932–2001) and Ferdinand Oyono (b. 1929), two of Cameroon's most celebrated writers.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Canada occupies the whole of the northern part of the North American continent, with the exception of Alaska. In eastern Canada, the most southerly point is Middle Island in Lake Erie. The six main physiographic divisions are: the Appalachian-Acadian region, the Canadian shield, which comprises more than half the country, the St Lawrence–Great Lakes lowland, the interior plains, the Cordilleran region and the Arctic archipelago.

The climate of the eastern and central portions presents greater extremes than in corresponding latitudes in Europe, but in the south-western portion of the prairie region and the southern portions of the Pacific slope, the climate is milder. The tornado season is May to September, peaking in June and early July in southern Ontario, Alberta, south-eastern Quebec and southern Saskatchewan and Manitoba through to Thunder Bay. The interior of British Columbia and western New Brunswick are also tornado zones. Elevation extremes range from 5,959 m (Mt Logan) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Canada was discovered by Sebastian Cabot (1474–1557) in 1497 and the French took possession of the country in 1534. The first permanent settlement at Port Royal (now Annapolis), Nova Scotia, was founded in 1605, and Québec was founded in 1608. In 1759 Québec was captured by British forces under General Wolfe and in 1763 the whole territory of Canada became a possession of Great Britain by the Treaty of Paris (1763). Nova Scotia was ceded in 1713 by the Treaty of Utrecht, the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island being subsequently formed out of it. British Columbia was formed into a Crown colony in 1858, having previously been a part of the Hudson Bay Territory, and was united to Vancouver Island in 1866.

The constitution of Canada has its source in the British North America Act of 1867 which formed a Dominion, under the name of Canada, of the four provinces of Ontario, Québec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. To this federation the other provinces and territories have subsequently been admitted: Manitoba and Northwest Territories (1870), British Columbia (1871), Prince Edward Island (1873), Yukon (1898), Alberta and Saskatchewan (1905) and Newfoundland (1949). In 1982, the constitution was patriated (severed from the British parliament) with the approval of all provinces except Québec. In 1985, the federal Prime Minister and the provincial premiers concluded the Meech Lake Accord which provided for Québec to be recognised as a distinct society within Canada. However, two provincial legislatures withheld approval and the accord did not come into force. In Québec, a referendum calling for sovereignty and a new political and economic partnership was defeated in October 1995. In September 1997 Québec was recognised as having a 'unique character' by leaders of the other provinces and territories. A new territory, Nunavut, which means 'our land' in the Inuit language of Inuktitut, was created on 1 April 1999 by partitioning the Northwest Territories.

In the federal election of 28 June 2004 the Liberal Party won a fourth consecutive term of office. The state of parties in the House of Commons following the election was Liberals 135, Conservative Party of Canada 99, Bloc Québécois 54 and New Democratic Party 19.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in a Governor-General appointed by the Sovereign on the advice of the Prime Minister.

Parliament consists of a Senate and a House of Commons. The Senate consists of 104 members, nominated by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister, the seats being distributed between the various provinces. Senate members serve until the age of 75. The House of Commons has 301 members directly elected for a five-year term. Representation is proportional to the population of each province.

The judicature is administered by judges following the civil law in Québec province and common law in other provinces. Each province has a Court of Appeal. All superior, county and district court judges are appointed by the Governor-General, the others by the Lieutenant-Governors of the provinces.

The highest federal court is the Supreme Court of Canada, which exercises general appellate jurisdiction throughout Canada in civil and criminal cases. There is one other federally constituted court, the Federal Court of Canada, which has jurisdiction on appeals from its trial division, from federal tribunals and reviews of decisions and references by federal boards and commissions.

DEFENCE

The Canadian armed forces are unified and organised into three functional commands: Land Force Command; Maritime Command; Air Command.

The Army (Land Forces) has 114 main battle tanks and 1,218 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy (Maritime Forces) has two submarines, four destroyers, 12 frigates and 14 patrol and coastal vessels. The Air Force has 140 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.1 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 41,800: Army 19,300, Navy 9,000, Air Force 13,500; Paramilitaries 9,350

ECONOMY AND TRADE

About 68 million hectares of land is farmed, around 7.3 per cent of the total land area. Over 60 per cent of this is under cultivation, the remainder being predominantly classified as unimproved pasture. More than 80 per cent of the cultivated land is in the prairie region of western Canada. The country is one of the world's leading food producers and in 2002 agriculture accounted for 2.1 per cent of GDP and employs about 3.7 per cent of the labour force.

Almost half of Canada's land area is forest, making it the world's largest exporter of timber, pulp and newsprint. The fishing industry employs 120,000 Canadians and contributes C$5,000 million a year to the economy, but Atlantic fish stocks are under restriction orders.

Canada is one of the world's largest exporters of minerals, including potash, nickel, asbestos, cadmium, zinc, elemental sulphur and uranium (Canada is the world's largest single producer of uranium, meeting 28 per cent of world demand). The country is also rich in gold, copper, lead, molybdenum, platinum group metals, gypsum, cobalt, titanium concentrates, and aluminium. The total value of mineral production in 2003 was C$20,200 million.

Canada's second diamond mine opened in the Northwest Territories in 2003, bringing total production value to C$1,700 million. Canada ranks third in the world in terms of diamond production value.

The services sector contributed to 68.2 per cent of GDP in 2001 with finance and real estate generating the most revenue at 16.1 per cent.

There were 20 million foreign visitors in 2002 and four out of five tourists were from the USA.

Canada had relatively high growth in GDP during 2002 at 3.3 per cent and this allowed for an increase of 11.5 per cent in federal expenditure for 2003–4.

The main exports are automotive products, including cars, trucks and parts, machinery and equipment, industrial products and raw materials, forestry products, including wood, wood pulp and paper products, agricultural products (chiefly wheat and meat products), fishery products, and energy products, including crude petroleum and natural gas.

Trade with the USA accounts for about 88 per cent of Canada's exports and 62 per cent of its imports.

GNI – US$681,600 million (2001); US$21,930 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

In 2002 there were 1,408 million km of roads, of which 497,306 km were paved, including 16,900 km of national highways. The 7,300 km Trans-Canadian Highway links all ten provinces. There are about 50,000 km of railway track in operation.

The bulk of the 3,000 km of canal shipping in Canada is handled through the two sections of the St Lawrence Seaway, which provide access to the Great Lakes for ocean-going ships. There are 1,390 airports in Canada, 507 of which have surfaced runways.

EDUCATION

Education is under the control of the provincial governments, the cost of the publicly controlled schools being met by local taxation and aided by provincial grants. Education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 15 or 7 and 16. There are 100 universities and 200 technical institutes and community colleges.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (2002); secondary 100 per cent (2002); tertiary 88 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The public broadcaster, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC), was established in the 1930s and transmits programmes in English and French. Societe Radio Canada is the French-language public broadcast service. There are several commercial TV channels. The CBC also operates four radio networks, and television channels and radio services for indigenous peoples in the north of the country. There are 2,000 licensed radio stations in Canada. The broadcasting regulator enforces quotas of Canadian material (30–35 per cent) on Canadian radio and television.

CULTURE

Canada is a multicultural society with British (28 per cent of people claim British descent), French (23 per cent claim French descent), aboriginal (2 per cent), Asian, German, Ukrainian, Dutch, Greek, Polish and Italian influences most dominant. Ninety per cent of the population lives within 200 km of the southern border with the USA.

Notable Canadians include the Nobel laureate Saul Bellow (b. 1915), the poet and novelist Margaret Atwood (b. 1939), the novelist Michael Ondaatje (b. 1943), the classical pianist Glenn Gould (1932–82) and the composer Howard Shore (b. 1946).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Cape Verde comprises ten main islands of volcanic origin lying 600 km off the West African coast. The climate is hot and dry. Elevation extremes range from 2,829 m (Mt Fogo) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The islands were uninhabited when they were first discovered and colonised c.1460 by Portugal. Cape Verde achieved independence from Portugal on 5 July 1975 under the Partido Africano da Independência da Guiné e Cabo Verde (PAIGC), a unified party with Guinea-Bissau. A federation of the islands with Guinea Bissau was planned but this was dropped following the 1980 coup in Guinea Bissau.

The republic was a one-party state under President Aristides Pereira and his African Party for the Independence of Cape Verde (PAICV), until the constitution was amended in 1990. Multiparty elections, held in 1991, were won by the opposition Movement for Democracy (MPD). A new constitution was introduced in 1992 which reduced the power of the President and increased the powers of parliament. The MPD, was re-elected in the legislative elections of December 1995 with a landslide victory. President António Mascarenhas Monteiro of the MPD was elected in 1991 and re-elected, unopposed, in 1996. The general election of 2001 returned the PAICV to power with 40 of the 72 seats in the National Assembly. The MPD won 30 seats and the Democratic Alliance for Change won two seats. Pedro Pires of the PAICV narrowly won the second round of the presidential election. The MPD candidate, Carlos Veiga, appealed to the Supreme Court, citing irregularities in the conduct of the elections; the court upheld some of the appeals, which reduced Pires's winning margin to just 12 votes.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Power is vested in a unicameral National Assembly (Assembleia Nacional) of 72 seats. Members are elected by popular vote to serve five-year terms. The Council of Ministers (Cabinet) is appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is nominated by the National Assembly and appointed by the President.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The islands have little rain and agriculture is mostly confined to irrigated inland valleys. The chief products are bananas and coffee (for export), maize, sugar cane and nuts. Fish and shellfish are important exports. Salt is obtained on Sal, Bôa Vista and Maio; volcanic rock is also mined for export.

The economy is heavily dependent on services, with tourism, commerce and public services accounting for 70 per cent of GDP.

Around 700,000 Cape Verdeans live outside the islands, particularly in the USA and Portugal. The remittances sent home provide an important source of revenue and investment in the economy. Cape Verde has been a member of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) since 1977. The country is also a member of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries (CPLP).

The main ports are Praia, Mindelo and Tarrafal, and there is an international airport on Sal. There is a network of internal flights between the islands with daily flights between Praia, Mindelo and Sal. Within the islands there are no railways or waterways. There are 1,100 km of road, 242 km of which are unpaved.

CULTURE

Cape Verdeans have more in common with Portuguese culture than with African culture. The islands are famed for their rich traditions of literature (in both Portuguese and Crioulo) and distinctive musical styles such as the funana, dance music and morna, a slow, atmospheric song style, accompanied by clarinet, accordion, violin and caraquinho, a Portuguese stringed instrument.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

This central African state is a plateau between the Chad and Congo river basins. The main river is the Oubangui and at 335 m it is the lowest point of elevation. The climate is tropical with a wet season in the north from June to September and from May to October in the south. The north can reach a temperature of 40°C between February and May and the humidity can be extreme. The south has a more equatorial climate. The highest point of elevation is 1,420 m (Mount Ngaoui).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In December 1958 the French colony of Ubanghi Shari elected to remain within the French Community and adopted the title of the Central African Republic. It became fully independent on 17 August 1960. The first President, David Dacko, was overthrown in 1966 by the then Col. Bokassa, who in 1976 proclaimed himself Emperor and renamed the country the Central African Empire. In 1979 Bokassa was deposed by Dacko in a bloodless coup and the country reverted to a republic. President Dacko surrendered power in 1981 to Gen. André Kolingba, who instituted military rule until 1985, when a civilian-dominated Cabinet was appointed. In November 1986 a referendum was held which approved a new constitution and the establishment of a one-party state.

President Kolingba formed a coalition government in February 1993. Ange-Félix Patassé of the Central African People's Liberation Party (MLPC) won the presidential elections of 1993 and 1999. A multiparty coalition government was formed after the legislative elections of 1998.

A coup took place in March 2003, in which François Bozizé took power, declared himself President, suspended the constitution and dismissed the Cabinet. A broad-based transitional government was formed on 31 March.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Constitutional reforms were passed in a national referendum in December 1994 which created a constitutional court, introduced elected local assemblies, extended the presidential mandate to a maximum of two six-year terms and subordinated the government to the President. Following the March 2003 coup, President François Bozizé established a 63-member National Transitional Council to assist the President with legislation, draft a new constitution and prepare for elections which were scheduled to take place in December 2004/January 2005.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are no railways. Most travel takes place on the 23,810 km of roads, of which only 643 km are paved. There are 50 airports.

MEDIA

The most balanced media output is from the UN-sponsored radio broadcaster Radio Ndeke Luka. Central African Republic's other radio and television stations are operated by the state via Television Centrafricaine, (TVCA). There are a number of privately owned newspapers but low literacy levels mean that they have little influence.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The population of Chad is concentrated in the fertile lowlands of the south, away from the arid central and northern desert areas. The highest point of elevation is 3,415 m (Emi Koussi) and the lowest is at 160 m (the Djourab Depression). The north is almost rainless, the south is tropical and the central plain is hot and dry with a wet season from June to September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Chad became a member state of the French Community in 1958, and was proclaimed fully independent on 11 August 1960. The constitution was suspended in 1975 when President Tombalbaye was killed in a coup by Gen. Félix Malloum; following a succession of further coups, Idriss Déby came to power in 1990 and announced the adoption of a multiparty system, allowing the legalisation of political parties in 1991 and 1992. A Higher Transitional Council (CST) was elected in 1993 to serve as the transitional legislature and appointed a transitional government in conjunction with President Déby. The CST has twice extended the transitional period by one year to allow sufficient time to organise elections. A new constitution, establishing a unified, democratic state, was confirmed by a referendum held in March 1996. Déby won the first multiparty presidential elections in 1996 and was re-elected in the presidential elections held in 2001. Elections to the 154-member National Assembly in 2002 were won by the pro-Déby Patriotic Salvation Movement (MPS).

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution makes provision for a bicameral system, consisting of a National Assembly of 155 members elected by popular vote to serve four-year terms, and a Senate. The Senate serves a six-year term of office with one-third of membership renewable every two years. At June 2004 the Senate had not yet been established.

INSURGENCIES

Three rebel movements, the Movement for Unity and the Republic (MUR), the Movement for Democracy and Justice in Chad (MDJT), and the Democratic Revolutionary Council (DRC), announced that they had formed an alliance in February 2000.

In January 2002 the government signed a peace accord with the MDJT and on 9 January 2003 an agreement was signed between the government and rebels of the National Resistance Army (ANR), which provided for an immediate cease-fire and a general amnesty. However, the agreement was rejected by at least one of the eight different movements within the ANR.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

About 90 per cent of the workforce is occupied in agriculture, fishing and forestry. Salt is mined around Lake Chad, but the most important activities are cotton growing and animal husbandry. Raw cotton (accounting for 40 per cent of total exports in 1999), meat and groundnuts are the main exports. Chad's main trading partners are France, Portugal, Germany, Thailand, Costa Rica, South Africa, Nigeria and Cameroon.

In July 2003 Chad began piping oil from the Doba basin in the south of the country. This oil is piped into Cameroon and onwards to international markets. It is estimated that this new industry could bring US$2,000 million into Chad over the next 25 years. The pipeline is expected to increase government revenues by 45–50 per cent during 2004–5.

In January 2000 the IMF approved a loan facility of around US$49.9 million to support the government's 1999–2002 economic programme. In October 2002 Chad's request for an extension of the commitment period under the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility (PRGF) arrangement was approved by the IMF.

GNI – US$1,504 million (2000); US$230 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 6.0 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 3.8 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$1,116 million (2000)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£4,438,000	£3,383,000
Exports to UK	119,000	1,144,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are no railways in Chad. There are 33,400 km of roads, 267 km of which are paved. There are 2,000 km of waterways and 50 airports, seven of which have surfaced runways.

MEDIA

Low levels of literacy make radio the most important news media. Radiodiffusion Nationale Tchadienne is the state controlled radio station. There are private radio stations but they are closely monitored by the government. There is only one television station, Teletchad, and it is state owned and controlled. Privately owned newspapers circulate in the capital.

CULTURE

Chad is made up of 200 ethnic groups, three major religious groupings (Islam, Christianity and traditional faiths), three different climatic zones and many differing lifestyles (from the urban to rural). For some peoples (the Maba) pre-Islamic social structures are still in place, while others (the Toubou) are nomadic, their territory defined by wells and oases.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Chile lies between the Andes (1,524 m to 4,572 m above sea level) and the shores of the South Pacific, extending from the arid north around Arica to Cape Horn. The length of the country is about 4,480 km, with an average breadth, north of 41°, of 160 km. Elevation extremes range from 6,880 m (Nevado Ojos del Salado) at the highest point to 0 m sea level (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Chile was discovered by Spanish adventurers in the 16th century and remained under Spanish rule until 1810, when the first autonomous government was established. Full independence was consolidated in 1818 after a revolutionary war.

A Marxist, Salvador Allende, was elected President in 1970 as the candidate of the Popular Front alliance, but was overthrown and killed in a military coup in 1973.

Gen. Pinochet, who led the coup, assumed the presidency until presidential and congressional elections were held in 1989, beginning the transition to full democracy.

Gen. Augusto Pinochet was arrested in London in October 1998 following a request by the Spanish government for his extradition, but extradition proceedings were dropped on the grounds of poor health in March 2000, and Pinochet was freed and allowed to return to Chile. The Chilean Supreme Court lifted his immunity from prosecution in August 2000 and in December he was put under house arrest pending trial on charges relating to the kidnapping and murder of more than 70 political opponents. The charges were dismissed by the Court of Appeal, but formally reinstated in January 2001 after it had been determined that Gen. Pinochet was fit to stand trial. In March the charges were reduced to conspiracy to conceal the actions of military death squads. In May 2004 a Chilean appeal court stripped Gen. Pinochet of his immunity leading to speculation that he may soon stand trial for human rights atrocities committed during his time in office.

Ricardo Lagos Escobar of the Party for Democracy (PPD) won the presidential election of January 2000. In the legislative elections held in December 2001, the Coalition of Parties for Democracy (CPD) remained the largest group in the Chamber of Deputies but lost its majority in elections to the Senate.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is held by the President who is advised by a cabinet of unelected Ministers. Legislative power is exercised by a Congress which comprises a Senate of 48 senators (38 elected and ten appointed) and a Chamber of Deputies of 118 elected members. Senators serve eight-year terms and deputies serve four-year terms. The presidential term is six years with no possibility of re-election.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Economic reforms during the late 1970s and the 1980s, with large-scale privatisation and deregulation, have made Chile one of the most successful economies in Latin America. Cereals, vegetables, fruit, tobacco, hemp and vines are grown extensively and livestock accounts for nearly 40 per cent of agricultural production. Sheep farming predominates in the extreme south. Agriculture employs about 12 per cent of the workforce. There are large timber tracts in the central and southern zones which produce timber, cellulose and wood for export. Fishing is also a major industry.

Chile is rich in copper-ore (around 20 per cent of global reserves), iron-ore and nitrates, and is the only commercial producer of nitrate of soda (Chile saltpetre) from natural resources in the world. There are large deposits of high-grade sulphur. Oil and natural gas are produced in the Magallanes area, but domestic production is now declining.

The principal exports are minerals, timber and metal products, fish products and vegetables. The principal imports are food products, industrial raw materials, machinery, and equipment and spares. The main trade partners are Japan, the USA, Argentina, the UK and Brazil; in 1996 Chile joined the Mercosur Free Trade Zone, and in March 1998 signed an extension to a free trade agreement with Mexico. In January 2004, a free trade agreement was signed between the United States and Chile.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

With the improvement of the roads an increasing share of internal transportation is moving by road and rail, although shipping is still important. The road system is about 80,000 km in length, of which 15,484 km is paved.

There are 6,585 km of railway track. A railway line runs from Valparaíso through La Calera and Santiago to Puerto Montt. With the completion of a section of 696 km from Corumba, Brazil, to Santa Cruz, Bolivia, the Trans-Continental Line will link the Chilean Pacific port of Arica with Rio de Janeiro on the Atlantic. A line runs from Antofagasta to Salta (Argentina).

Domestic air traffic is carried by Línea Aérea Nacional (LAN) and LADECO, which also operate internationally, and smaller regional carriers.

EDUCATION

Elementary education is free and compulsory. There are 25 state universities and 45 private universities.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 4.1 per cent; (f) 4.5 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 75 per cent (1997); tertiary 32 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Television is a combination of national and local, private and state run, cable and terrestrial channels. Radio is the country's most important news medium with 800 stations country-wide. In 2004 there were 3.5 million internet users.

CULTURE

Chile is the most 'European' of the Latin American countries with a vibrant arts culture. Chilean Nobel Prize winners for Literature include the writers Gabriela Mistral (1889–1957), who won in 1945, and Pablo Neruda (1904–74), who won in 1971. There are numerous art galleries, museums and theatres and Chilean art, architecture and music have considerable international influence.

Island possessions include the Juan Fernández group (three islands) about 576 km from Valparaíso; one of these islands is the reputed scene of Alexander Selkirk's (of Robinson Crusoe fame) shipwreck. Easter Island, about 3,200 km away in the South Pacific Ocean, contains stone platforms and hundreds of mysterious stone figures.

Among the largest are the Zhuang of Guangxi, the Hui of Ningxia, the Miao of southern China, the Manchu of Heilongjiang, the Uygurs and Kazakhs of Xinjiang, the Tibetans and the Mongols. The indigenous religions are Confucianism, Taoism and Buddhism. There are also Muslims (officially estimated at about 12 million) and Christians (unofficially estimated at about 50 million). The official language is Mandarin Chinese; of the many local dialects the largest are Cantonese, Fukienese, Xiamenhua and Hakka. The autonomous regions of Mongolia, Tibet and Xinjiang have their own languages

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

China is twice the size of Western Europe and represents a vast range of landscapes and climates within its borders. Two-thirds of the country is hilly or mountainous. The highest mountains are on the Tibetan plateau, in the west of the country, where the highest elevation is 8,850 m (Mount Everest) and the lowest is -154 m (Turpan Pendi). The southern plains and east coast have the most fertile land and are the most heavily populated. There are seven climate zones. The north-east has cold winters, fierce winds, hot and humid summers and erratic rainfall. The south-west has mild winters and warm summers. Inner Mongolia has cold winters and hot summers. Central China has hot and humid summers with the occasional tropical cyclone. South China is partly tropical with heavy rainfall. Xizang is a high plateau surrounded by mountains that is subject to harsh winters. Xinjiang and the west have a desert climate, cold winters and year-round rain.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

China was ruled by imperial dynasties for over 20 centuries until revolutionaries led by Sun Yat-sen forced the Emperor to abdicate on 12 February 1912. Neither the new nationalist Party (Kuomintang (KMT)) government nor the emergent Chinese Communist Party (CCP) were able to unify China, or to agree on the basis for further reform. Warlord infighting rendered China weak, enabling Japan to occupy Manchuria and all the important northern and coastal areas of China by 1939. Japan's occupation was ended by its defeat by the allies in 1945.

The Communists established control over large areas of China in the early 1940s, seizing the territory abandoned by Japan in 1945. Civil war lasted until 1949 when the CCP, led by Mao Zedong (Mao Tse-tung), inaugurated the People's Republic of China (PRC), and the KMT under Chiang Kai-shek went into exile in Taiwan. The USA continued to recognise the Chiang Kai-shek regime as the rightful government of China until 1971, when the PRC took over China's membership of the United Nations from Taiwan.

Under Mao Zedong China was ruled on the basis of four 'cardinal principles': Marxist-Leninist-Maoist thought, the Socialist Road, the dictatorship of the proletariat, and the leadership of the CCP. Mao's 'Great Leap Forward' (1958–61) was an attempt to industrialise rural areas which resulted in a famine in which 30–40 million people died. China was plunged into chaos during the Cultural Revolution (1966–70) when the Red Guards were used to rid the country of 'rightist elements'.

Following the death of Mao Zedong in 1976, the disgraced Deng Xiaoping was recalled. In 1977 he was elected Vice-Chairman of the CCP, becoming the dominant force within the party by eliminating leftist influence, rehabilitating fallen leaders and promoting an 'open door' policy of economic liberalisation. The Congresses of 1982 and 1987 reaffirmed Deng's policies, and in 1987 most of the revolutionary generation was replaced in the top posts by younger, more liberal supporters of reform.

Student-led pro-democracy demonstrations in April and May 1989, centred on Tiananmen Square in Beijing, ended on 3–4 June when the army took control of Beijing, killing thousands of protesters. This strengthened the position of hardliners within the leadership, who readopted policies of centralisation based on Marxist ideology. Deng retired from his last official post in November 1989 but retained effective control until late 1994.

At Deng's instigation during 1992 the emphasis switched back to economic reform and the power of the hardliners waned. The 14th Party Congress in 1992 endorsed Deng's calls for faster, bolder economic reforms and his 'socialist market economy'. Deng died on 19 February 1997 and Jiang Zemin assumed the mantle of leader. Jiang continued the economic reforms and also sought to improve China's standing in the international community.

At the 16th Party Congress in 2002 vice-president Hu Jintao was elected general secretary of the CCP. On 15 March 2003 Hu Jintao was elected by the National People's Congress as the new state president replacing Jiang Zemin who retained his position as head of the Central Military Commission.

INSURGENCIES

Separatists from the Uygur Muslim minority group in Xinjiang Autonomous Region have demonstrated against Han rule. They have claimed responsibility for bomb attacks in the provincial capital, Ürümqi, and in Beijing. Two Muslim separatists were executed in 1999 as part of an effort to tighten control of the region and in 2001, the death sentence was passed on the founder of an underground Islamic party.

The government banned the Falun gong cult in 1999, which had claimed to have 70 million followers, after it was revealed that a large number of Chinese Communist Party officials and senior officers in the People's Liberation Army had joined the cult. Tens of thousands of Falun gong members have been arrested since the ban.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1982 constitution, the National People's Congress is the highest organ of state power. It is elected for a term of five years, has 2,979 members and is supposed to hold one session a year. It is empowered to amend the constitution, make laws, select the President and Vice-President and other leading officials of the state, approve the national economic plan, the state budget and the final state accounts, and to decide on questions of war and peace. The State Council is the highest organ of the state administration. It is composed of the Premier, the Vice-Premiers, the State Councillors, heads of Ministries and Commissions, the Auditor-General and the Secretary-General. Command over the armed forces is vested in the Central Military Commission.

Deputies to Congresses at the primary level are 'directly elected' by the voters 'through a secret ballot after democratic consultation'. This is now extended to county level. These Congresses elect the deputies to the Congress at the next higher level. Deputies to the National People's Congress are elected by the People's Congresses of the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, and by the armed forces.

Local government is conducted through People's Governments at provincial, municipal and county levels. Autonomous regions, prefectures and counties exist for national minorities and are described as self-governing.

DEFENCE

All three military arms are parts of the People's Liberation Army (PLA). China has at least 30 intercontinental and 110 intermediate range land-based, and 13 submarine-launched nuclear ballistic missiles. The Army has some 7,180 main battle tanks and over 4,500 armoured personnel carriers and armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

The Navy has 69 submarines, 21 destroyers, 42 frigates, 368 patrol and coastal vessels, 700 shore-based combat aircraft and 45 armed helicopters. The Air Force has more than 1,900 combat aircraft and some armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 4.1 per cent of GDP (2002)

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Economic liberalisation in the early 1980s reduced central planning and broadened the role of the market, which led to an increase in manufacturing, concentrated in China's coastal regions. Foreign direct investment, especially from Hong Kong and Taiwan, enabled the construction of a significant industrial base and transport infrastructure. In the coastal regions the economy has become a free market in all but name, with several stock markets and Shanghai's emergence as a financial centre. Since 1980, special economic zones have been established in Guangdong, Fujian and Hainan provinces. In addition, there are free trade and development zones throughout the country, designed to stimulate both foreign trade and internal economic development. The reforms have enabled the economy to grow more than five-fold since 1980. China has become the third-largest beneficiary of foreign investment in the world, primarily into its export industries.

Agriculture remains of great importance, employing half the working population and accounting for about 15 per cent of GDP in 2002. Cereals, with peas and beans, are grown in the northern provinces, and rice, tea and sugar in the south. Cotton (mostly in valleys of the Yangtze and Yellow rivers), tea (in the west and south), with hemp, jute and flax, are the most important crops. Livestock is raised in large numbers. Sericulture is one of the oldest industries. Cottons, woollens and silks are manufactured in large quantities.

Coal, iron ore, tin, antimony, wolfram, bismuth and molybdenum are abundant. Oil is produced in several northern provinces, particularly in Heilongjiang and Shandong but China desperately needs access to greater supplies of oil if economic expansion is to continue at the present rate (China has now overtaken Japan as the world's second-largest importer of oil after the United States). Plans for a 2,400-km oil pipeline from Russia's east Siberian reserves to Daqing in China were first announced in 2001 and in May 2003 a co-operation pact was signed between Russia and China. The agreement has since run into difficulties as the Japanese government has offered Russia large financial incentives to construct an alternative pipeline that would bypass China and directly supply Japan. Economic analysts predict that this need for oil will lead to tensions within the region in the coming years and may have an effect on annual growth rates.

In June 2003 the sluice gates on the Three Gorges dam above the Yangtze river in central China were closed to allow the reservoir to fill up and the first generator went into operation in July. The world's largest hydroelectric power project, costing US$25,000 million, will supply electricity to power grids in central and eastern China. More than one million people have been displaced since construction began in 1993. The dam is due to be completed in 2009.

Overcapacity in some of the traditional industries is being tackled, with the closure of 26,000 coal mines and 2,500 steel smelters. There are long-term plans to privatise all corporations except those in sectors considered essential to national security.

Tourism has become a major industry, with over 91 million foreign visitors in 2003. An outbreak of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) virus between November 2002 and June 2003 resulted in a decline in overseas visitors in early 2003.

Foreign trade and external economic relations have grown enormously since 1978. In 1995, import tariffs were cut to an average 23 per cent in line with China's attempts to join the World Trade Organisation to which China was formally admitted as a member in November 2001. The principal exports are clothing, electronics, machine plant, yarns and fabrics, chemicals, footwear, travel goods, and iron and steel. The principal imports are machinery, electronics, raw materials, yarns and fabrics, plastics and motor vehicles. The main trading partners are Japan, the USA, Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan and Germany.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 70,058 km of railway lines, of which 18,668 km are electrified, and approximately 1,402,698 km of roads, 314,204 km of which are paved and 16,314 km are motorways. In addition, internal civil aviation has been developed, with routes totalling more than 1,506,000 km. Thirty new airports were due for completion by 2005.

In the past the principal means of communication east to west was by the rivers, the most important of which are the Yangtze (Jinsha Jiang) (5,440 km), the Yellow River (Huang He) (4,160 km) and the West River (Xi Jiang) (2,640 km). These, together with the network of canals connecting them, are still much used but their overall importance has declined. Coastal port facilities are being improved and the merchant fleet expanded.

EDUCATION

Primary education lasts six years and secondary education lasts six years (three years in junior middle school and three years in senior middle school). In 1998 there were 1,022 universities and colleges.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 8.3 per cent; (f) 23.7 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 6 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

China's media industry is huge – it has 25,000 newspapers and magazines, 750,000 journalists and 12,000 radio and television stations. In 2002 Communist Party officials stated that China has a domestic television audience of 1,100 million. subscription services are expected to have a market of 128 million by the year 2010. The Communist Party has always maintained a firm grip on the nation's news reporting but with the installation of a new president, Hu Jintao, a more liberal approach seems to have been adopted. Market reforms are also being introduced into the media with the closure in 2004 of hundreds of state-funded publications that relied on government departments for their readership. Despite these reforms journalists still exercise a significant degree of self-censorship and the Communist Party still attempts to restrict access to foreign news media by blocking news websites and radio broadcasts and limiting the distribution of overseas newspapers. It is estimated that there were 68 million internet users in China as at mid-2003, the second highest in the world after the USA.

CULTURE

The Chinese language has many dialects, notably Cantonese, Hakka, Amoy, Foochow, Changsha, Nanchang, Wu (Shanghai) and the northern dialect. The Common Speech or putonghua (often referred to as Mandarin) is based on the northern dialect. The Communists have promoted it as the national language and it is taught throughout the country. As putonghua encourages the use of the spoken language in writing, the old literary style and ideographic form of writing has fallen into disuse. Since 1956 simplified characters have been introduced to make reading and writing easier. In 1958 the National People's Congress adopted a system of romanisation known as pinyin.

Chinese literature is one of the oldest in the world. Paper has been employed for writing and printing for nearly 2,000 years. The Confucian classics, which formed the basis of traditional Chinese culture, date from the Warring States period (fourth to third centuries BC), as do the earliest texts of Taoism. Histories, philosophical and scientific works, poetry, literary and art criticism, novels and romances survive from most periods.

TIBET

AREA – 1,199,164 sq. km
POPULATION – 2,610,000 (2001 estimate)
CAPITAL – Lhasa

Tibet is a plateau seldom lower than 3,000 m, which forms the northern frontier of India (boundary imperfectly demarcated), from Kashmir to Myanmar, but is separated therefrom by the Himalayas.

From 1911 to 1950, Tibet was virtually an independent country though its status was never officially so recognised. In 1950 Chinese Communist forces invaded eastern Tibet. In 1951 an agreement was reached whereby the Chinese army was allowed entry into Tibet, and a Communist military and administrative headquarters was set up. A series of revolts against Chinese rule culminated in 1959 in a rising in Lhasa, the capital. Fighting continued for several days before the rebellion was crushed and military rule was imposed. The Dalai Lama fled to India where he and his followers were granted political asylum and established a government in exile.

In 1964 the Dalai Lama and the Panchen Lama were dismissed, marking the end of co-operation between the Chinese government and the traditional religious authorities. Tibet became an Autonomous Region of China in 1965. Martial law was declared in Tibet in 1989 and sporadic outbursts of unrest continue.

The Panchen Lama died in 1989. China rejected the Dalai Lama's choice of successor, who is believed to have been executed, and enthroned its own candidate.

In December 1997, the International Commission of Jurists issued a report declaring that Tibet was 'under alien subjugation' and called for a UN-managed referendum to decide its future status. China contested that the report failed to acknowledge its historical claims to the region.

The 17th Karmapa Lama, the first reincarnation of a living Buddha to be recognised by both China and the Dalai Lama, defected from Tibet in late December 1999 and fled to India, where he appealed for political asylum. On 16 January 2000, the seventh Reting Lama was ordained in Tibet; the Dalai Lama had refused to recognise him as the reincarnation of the previous Reting Lama. Representatives of the Dalai Lama visited China in September 2002, in an attempt to improve the situation, but relations remain tense.

In May 2001 the government published details of a modernisation programme for Tibet which aimed to improve the low standard of living by promoting market reforms and extensive public construction projects.

SPECIAL ADMINISTRATIVE REGIONS

HONG KONG

AREA – 1,092 sq. km
POPULATION – 6,725,000 (2001)
CURRENCY – Hong Kong dollar (HK$) of 100 cents
FLAG – Red, with a white bauhinia flower of five petals each containing a red star
LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 81 (2001)
MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 6.19 (2003)
INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 6 (2001)
HIV / AIDS ADULT PREVALENCE – 0.1 per cent (2001)
POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.9 per cent
POPULATION DENSITY – 6,158 per sq. km (2001)
URBAN POPULATION – 93.1 per cent (2000 estimate)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Hong Kong, consisting of more than 230 islands and of a portion of the mainland (Kowloon and the New Territories) on the south-east coast of China, is situated at the eastern side of the mouth of the Pearl River. Hong Kong Island is about 18 km long and from three to eight km broad. It is separated from the mainland by a narrow strait. Elevation extremes range from 958 m (Tai Mo Shan) at the highest point to 0 m (South China Sea) at the lowest.

The climate is subtropical, tending towards the temperate for nearly half the year. The mean monthly temperature ranges from 16°C to 29°C. The average annual rainfall is 2,214 mm, of which nearly 80 per cent falls between May and September. Tropical cyclones occur between May and November, causing high winds and heavy rain.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Hong Kong Island was first occupied by Great Britain in 1841 and formally ceded by the Treaty of Nanking in 1842. Kowloon was acquired by the Beijing Convention of 1860 and the New Territories, consisting of a peninsula in the southern part of the Guangdong province together with adjacent islands, by a 99-year lease signed on 9 June 1898.

On 19 December 1984 the UK and China signed a Joint Declaration in which it was agreed that China would resume sovereignty over Hong Kong on 1 July 1997. In the run-up to the 1997 handover, the Chinese government's insistence on a greater say in the running of the colony and Governor Patten's plan for an extension of democracy prompted acrimonious disputes. The Chinese government refused to accept the reforms and replaced the Legislative Council.

On 1 July 1997, Hong Kong became a Special Administrative Region (SAR) of the People's Republic of China.

The Joint Declaration, which took effect in May 1985, guarantees: the free movement of goods and capital; the retention of Hong Kong's free port status, separate customs territory and freely convertible currency; the protection of property rights and foreign investment; the right of free movement to and from Hong Kong; Hong Kong's autonomy in the conduct of its external commercial relations and its own monetary and financial policies; and judicial independence. Hong Kong's constitution is the Basic Law, which was passed by China's National People's Congress in 1990 and guarantees that the SAR's social and economic systems will remain unchanged for 50 years.

A Legislative Council election was held in 2000. The Democratic Party, a pro-democracy opposition party, remained the largest party in the legislature with 12 seats and the pro-China Democratic Alliance for the Betterment of Hong Kong won 11 seats; 20 seats were won by independent candidates.

Following mass pro-democracy demonstrations in July 2003 against a proposed anti-subversion law, the government announced that public consultation on the controversial bill would re-open in September. The bill has since been shelved indefinitely. Protestors also demanded direct elections for Hong Kong's leader and all members of the Legislative Council.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Hong Kong is administered by the Hong Kong SAR Government, headed by the Chief Executive, who is appointed by a 400-strong selection committee and aided by an Executive Council and a Legislative Council. The Executive Council consists of 15 Principal Officials and five non-officials. The Chief Executive serves a five-year term.

The Legislative Council consists of 60 members, of whom 20 are directly elected. Thirty members are elected by functional constituencies composed of professional and business groups and ten are elected by an election committee composed of 800 representatives of the community.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The main economic sector is the services industry, especially financial services, insurance and real estate. It employed 19.5 per cent of the workforce and contributed 85 per cent of GDP in 2002. Principal exports are clothing, electrical machinery and apparatus, and textiles.

Diversification in terms of products and markets continues to be the main feature of recent industrial development, as are industrial partnerships with overseas companies. The economy is based on export rather than the domestic market. Tourism is very important to the economy; 15.54 million people visited Hong Kong in 2003. The spread of the SARS virus to Hong Kong in March 2003 had a detrimental effect on the economy, especially the tourism industry, with a 70 per cent reduction in the number of visitors in April 2003 compared with the previous year. The World Health Organisation removed Hong Kong from its list of SARS-infected areas in June 2003.

In 2003 imports totalled US$230,300 million and exports US$225,900 million. Hong Kong's principal customers for its domestic products, in order of value of trade, were China, USA and Japan. China was Hong Kong's principal supplier.

GNI – US$170,300 million (2001); US$25,330 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 10.5 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 3.7 per cent (2000)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£2,430,799,000	£2,500,875,000
Exports to UK	5,766,795,000	5,640,490,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Hong Kong has one of the world's finest natural harbours, and it is the busiest container port in the world, with eight terminals, as well as large modern cargo and liner terminals. Dockyard facilities include eight floating drydocks, the largest being capable of docking vessels up to 150,000 tonnes deadweight. An international airport built on reclaimed land at Chek Lap Kok opened in July 1998.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory for children up to the age of 15. Post-secondary education is provided by six universities and one college. The Open Learning Institute of Hong Kong provides university education. There are also seven technical institutes and the Hong Kong Institute of Education.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 3.5 per cent; (f) 9.8 per cent (2000)

AREA – 24 sq. km

POPULATION – 460,000 (2001)

CURRENCY – Pataca of 100 avos

FLAG – Green, with a white lotus flower above a white stylised bridge and water, under a large gold five-point star and four gold stars in crescent

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Macao, situated at the mouth of the Pearl River, comprises a peninsula and the islands of Coloane and Taipa and is 64 km from Hong Kong. The climate is subtropical. Elevation extremes range from 172.4 m (Coloane Alto) at the highest point to 0 m (South China Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first Portuguese ship arrived at Macao in 1513 and trade with China commenced in 1553. Macao became a Portuguese colony in 1557; in a Sino-Portuguese treaty of 1887 China recognised Portugal's sovereignty over Macao. An agreement to transfer the administration of Macao to the Chinese authorities was signed on 13 April 1987. Macao became the Macao Special Administrative Region (MSAR) of China when power was transferred by the outgoing Portuguese governor Vasco Rocha Vieira to the new chief executive on 19 December 1999. The final session of the Macao SAR Basic Law Drafting Committee was held in Beijing in January 1993 and approved the Basic Law that has served as Macao's constitution since 1999.

In April 1999 a 200-member committee of Macao residents was established to determine the composition of the first government of the Macao SAR. They elected Edmund Ho Hao Wah to be its first chief executive. The chief executive serves a five-year term of office. The chief executive announced in September 1999 that he had appointed the ten members of his Executive Council, a body intended to assist the chief executive in policy-making. In addition, he appointed seven legislators to the 23-member MSAR First Legislative Council, which included 15 members of the previous 16-member Legislative Assembly; a replacement was chosen for the member who had not wished to continue.

Edmund Ho Hao Wah was to finish his first term of office on 19 December 2004. The election of the next chief executive must take place no more than 60 days before the current office-holder's five-year term expires.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The service industries comprise the greatest part of the economy, providing 87 per cent of GDP in 2002. In 2003, gambling provided 40 per cent of GNP and there were 6.9 million foreign visitors. Gaming taxes accounted for about 70 per cent of government revenues in 2002. In 2002 imports totalled US$2,356 million and exports US$2,530 million.

The main trading partners are the EU, the USA, China, Hong Kong and Japan.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Colombia lies in the extreme north-west of South America, having a coastline on both the Caribbean Sea and Pacific Ocean. Elevation extremes range from 5,775 m (Pico Cristobal Colon) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest.

The country is divided by the Cordillera de los Andes into a coastal region in the north and west and extensive plains in the east. The eastern range of the Colombian Andes is a series of vast tablelands. This temperate region is the most densely peopled portion of the country. The principal rivers are the Magdalena, Guaviare, Cauca, Atrato, Caquetá, Putumayo and Patia. The climate is predominantly tropical but the Caribbean coastline is typically drier than the rest of the country.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Colombian coast was visited in 1502 by Columbus, and in 1536 a Spanish expedition penetrated the interior and established a government. The country remained under Spanish rule until 1819 when Simón Bolívar established the Republic of Colombia, consisting of the territories now known as Colombia, Panama, Venezuela and Ecuador. In 1829–30 Venezuela and Ecuador withdrew, and in 1831 the remaining territories formed the Republic of New Granada. The name was changed to the Granadine Confederation in 1858, to the United States of Colombia in 1861 and to the Republic of Colombia in 1866. Panama seceded in 1903.

From 1957 to 1974 the country was governed under the 'National Front' agreement with an alternating presidency and equal numbers of ministerial posts. The alternation of the presidency ended in 1974 and parity in appointments in 1978.

Elections to the legislature took place in 2002. In the House of Representatives the Liberal Party (PL) secured 54 seats, while the Social Conservative Party (PSC) won 21, leaving the balance of power in the hands of minor parties. In the Senate, the Liberal Party won 28 seats while some 38 minor parties collectively secured 49 seats. The 2002 presidential election was held in May and was won by Álvaro Uribe Vélez.

INSURGENCIAS

Colombia is dogged by insurgency from left-wing guerrillas. The main active guerrilla factions are the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) and the National Liberation Army (ELN). Formal peace talks began in November 1998, but fighting continued. The peace process was terminated in 2002 by President Pastrana Arango after the ELN and FARC carried out joint actions against the right-wing paramilitary United Self-Defence Forces of Colombia (AUC), who had attacked civilians in towns and villages thought to be pro-FARC in December 2000.

FARC explosions in August 2002 prompted a state of emergency, which was extended for a further 90 days in November. An indefinite cease-fire was declared by the AUC in December 2002. There were further FARC bomb attacks in early 2003. In April 2003 Colombia signed agreements with Panama and Venezuela to enhance border security and place tighter controls on drug trafficking. In June 2003 President Uribe unveiled a government security plan to end the civil war and combat the drugs trade. The plan aimed to establish police forces in all parts of the country and to eradicate all drugs crops. In July the government and the AUC agreed to start formal talks aimed at disarming all the paramilitary group's 10,000 gunmen by the end of 2005.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Congress is a bicameral legislature. The lower house (the House of Representatives) has 165 members directly elected for a four-year term. The upper house (the Senate) has 102 members, directly elected for four years; two seats are reserved for representatives of indigenous people. The President, who appoints the Cabinet, is directly elected for a single four-year term.

The Army has 12 light tanks and 204 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has four submarines, four corvettes, 27 patrol and coastal vessels, eight aircraft and four helicopters at nine bases. The Air Force has 57 combat aircraft and 23 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 3.7 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 200,000: Army 178,000, Navy 15,000, Air Force 7,000; Paramilitaries 121,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12–18 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Coal, natural gas and hydroelectricity resources remain largely unexploited, although development of coal is now being given priority. The hydrocarbon sector accounts for over half of the mining output, precious metals (gold, platinum and silver) and iron ore accounting for the remainder. Other mineral deposits include nickel, bauxite, copper, gypsum, limestone, phosphates, sulphur and uranium. Colombia is also the world's largest producer of emeralds. Mining generates five per cent of GDP.

Major cash crops are coffee, sugar, bananas, cut flowers and cotton. Cattle are raised in large numbers, and meat and cured skins and hides are also exported.

The government has encouraged diversification to reduce dependence on coffee as the major export and this has led to the growth of new export-orientated industries, particularly textiles, paper products and leather goods. Services account for around 56 per cent of GDP, industry 30 per cent and agriculture 14 per cent (2002). The IMF approved a two-year standby facility of US$2,100 million in January 2003 to underpin government policies designed to reduce the fiscal deficit. Colombia also received a loan of US$3,300 million over three years from the World Bank for economic reform.

In 1996 and 1997 Colombia was blacklisted by the USA for failing to sufficiently curb levels of drug production. These sanctions were ended in 1998. Under US$7,500 million 'Plan Colombia', the USA pledged military aid to train Colombian armed forces to control the rebel-dominated coca-growing regions which supply the bulk of the cocaine used in the USA.

Principal trading partners are the USA, the EU and Latin America.

GNI – US$81,600 million (2001); US$1,890 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.8 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 9.5 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 20.5 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$34,081 million (2000)

DIRECT FOREIGN INVESTMENT – US$12,505 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$12,738 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$12,001 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Exports to UK	218,734,000	227,945,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 1,052 airports, 96 of which are surfaced. There are daily air services between Bogotá and all the principal towns, as well as frequent services to other countries. The road network consists of more than 110,000 km of roads, of which around 26,000 km are surfaced. There are 3,304 km of railways and 18,140 km of waterways.

EDUCATION

Elementary education is free of charge and compulsory for five years. Most primary schools are run by the Roman Catholic church and courses in Roman Catholicism are compulsory. There are some Protestant church schools (mainly in the capital). The government finances secondary and university level education. There are 235 institutions of higher education in Colombia.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 8.2 per cent; (f) 8.2 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 67 per cent (1997); tertiary 17 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

There are state owned television (Inravisión) and radio stations (Radiodifusora Nacional de Colombia) as well as private commercial networks. There are five main daily newspapers including El Espacio, La Republica and El Tiempo.

CULTURE

Colombia's culture reflects its indigenous Indian, Spanish and African backgrounds. Pre-Colonial art, primarily stone sculpture, pottery and gold, has influenced Western art and contemporary Indian art fuses these roots with modern techniques. Colombian music is also international and widely exported. Gabriel García Márquez (b. 1928) is Colombia's most famous writer (winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1982).

THE COMOROS

L'Union des Comores – Union of the Comoros

AREA – 2,235 sq. km. The Comoro archipelago includes the islands of Njazidja (formerly Grande Comore), Anjouan (also known as Nzwani), Mayotte and Moheli (also known as Mwali) and certain islets in the Indian Ocean

POPULATION – 651,000, mostly Muslim. French and Arabic are the official languages; the majority of the population speak Comoran, a blend of Arabic and Swahili

CAPITAL – Moroni (population, 30,365, 1991 census), on Ngazidja

CURRENCY – Comorian franc (KMF) of 100 centimes.

The Franc CFA of 100 centimes is also used

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Udzima Wa Ya Masiwa (The Union Of The Islands)

NATIONAL DAY – 6 July (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Four horizontal stripes – gold, white, red, blue; a green triangle based on the hoist containing a white crescent and four white stars, horns towards the fly

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 5.63 (2003)

HIV / AIDS ADULT PREVALENCE RATE – 0.12 per cent (2001)

DEATH PENALTY – Yes

POPULATION BELOW POVERTY LINE – 60 per cent (2002)

POPULATION DENSITY – 302 per sq. km (1999)

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 33.5 per cent; (f) 47.2 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 52 per cent (1993); tertiary 0.6 per cent (1995)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Comoros are a group of islands located in the Mozambique Channel between Africa and Madagascar. Njazidja, Anjouan and Moheli are volcanic. Njazidja has an active volcano, Karthala, which last erupted in August 2003. Elevation extremes range from 2,360 m (Karthala) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. There is a tropical climate with a dry season from May to October and a hot season from November to April. The average temperatures range from 20°C to 28°C. Regular cyclones afflict the islands between January and April.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The islanders voted for independence from France in December 1974 and three islands became independent on 6 July 1975. The island of Mayotte opposed independence and has remained under French administration.

An election in 1993 brought President Djohar's National Rally for Development party (RND) to power. Djohar was temporarily ousted in a coup in 1995 that was thwarted by French troops. While Djohar was abroad for medical attention, Prime Minister Caabi el-Yachrouout declared himself interim President and refused to acknowledge Djohar's authority, resulting in the formation of a rival government. Djohar returned to the Comoros in January 1996 but was prohibited from contesting the March 1996 presidential election, which was won by Mohammad Taki Abdoukarim of the National Union for Democracy in the Comoros. Taki dissolved the National Assembly and legislative elections were held in December 1996 although they were boycotted by the opposition Forum for National Recovery party (FRN).

President Taki died in office on 6 November 1998 and Tajiddine Ben Said Massonde took over as interim President. His government was deposed in a coup on 30 April 1999 by Col. Assoumani Azali, who was sworn in as President on 6 May. On 2 September 1999, an unsuccessful coup was launched while Col. Azali was overseas. He announced that he would retain power until a presidential election was held, which was due to take place by April 2000. The election did not take place and Col. Azali declared that he would not restore civilian rule due to the issue of Anjouan separatism. However, in March 2001, he announced that the country would be restored to civilian rule in 2002 and that he would not contest the presidential election. However, he resigned as President on 21 January 2002 in order to stand in the April presidential election. The presidential elections were held in March, April and May 2002. Elections to the Union parliament were postponed indefinitely in March 2003.

INSURGENCIES

In August 1997 separatists on the islands of Anjouan and Moheli demanded independence from the Comoros and a return to French rule. Following a failed attempt to resolve the situation by force, President Taki assumed absolute power and established a State Transition Commission to function as a Cabinet. In a referendum in October 1997, the inhabitants of Anjouan voted overwhelmingly for independence. Talks mediated by the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) began in December 1997 and an agreement drawn up with OAU support, which would have given each island considerable autonomy, was signed by Njazidja and Moheli, but was rejected by Anjouan. Anjouan citizens voted by a large majority against re-incorporation into the Comoros in a referendum held on 23 January 2000.

In 1998, Anjouan's self-proclaimed President Abdallah Ibrahim appointed a prime minister and cabinet, though their legitimacy has not been recognised internationally. Fighting broke out between President Ibrahim's forces and those of a previous Anjouan prime minister, Chamassi Said Omar, in December of that year. On 1 August 1999, President Ibrahim resigned and transferred most of his powers to Col. Said Abeid. A general election was held in Anjouan in August 1999.

President Azali and the leader of Anjouan, Lt.-Col. Aberemane, signed an agreement on national reconciliation on 17 February 2001, which would have given Anjouan considerable autonomy. The Anjouan government withdrew from the reconciliation process in April, alleging that the conditions of the agreement had not been met. In February 2003, security officials confirmed they had foiled a coup aimed at removing the Union government of Col. Assoumani Azali.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new constitution which would create a federal structure for Njazidja, Anjouan and Moheli and give greater autonomy for the islands was approved, in outline, by referendum on 23 December 2001. The final version was accepted by referendum in March 2002 on Moheli and Anjouan but was not accepted by the voters of Njazidja until a second vote in April. Under the new constitutional arrangements each island has its own President, constitution and legislative assembly. Island Presidents rotate the role of President of the Union with Njazidja taking the first turn. Each island President can appoint eight Ministers to deal with local issues while foreign affairs, finance, defence, judicial and religious matters are to be dealt with by the Union authorities. There are still areas of dispute, principally over security, budget control and customs revenue. Legislative elections for a new Parliament to define the powers of the various authorities are yet to be held.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The principal exports are vanilla, copra, cloves and essential oils; cacao, sisal and coffee are also cultivated. Njazidja is well forested and produces some timber. Agriculture accounts for 40 per cent of GDP, service industries 56 per cent and the manufacturing industry 4 per cent. The Comoros are heavily dependent on foreign aid. The islands are a potential haven for tourists but political instability undermines the tourist industry.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Democratic Republic of Congo is Africa's third largest state. Elevation extremes range from 5,110 m (Mount Ngaliema, also known as Mount Stanley) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The central region has an equatorial climate with high humidity and an average temperature of 26°C. The northern and southern regions have different climatic cycles with the dry season in the north taking place from December to February and the dry season in the south taking place from May to September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The state of the Congo, founded in 1885, became a Belgian colony in 1908 and gained its independence in 1960. Mobutu Sésé Seko came to power in a coup in 1965 and was elected president in 1970. Legislative power was vested in a unicameral National Legislative Council, with candidates proposed by the sole legal political party, Mouvement Populaire de la Révolution (MPR).

The government began moves towards a multiparty system from the end of the 1980s onwards but progress was hindered by army revolts and political disagreements.

In October 1996 fighting broke out between Zaïrean Tutsis (Banyamulenge) and the Zaïrean army in North and South Kivu provinces which had received an influx of Hutu refugees from Rwanda. The pro-Hutu army attempted to expel the Tutsis from the region but found themselves outgunned by the rebels, under the leadership of Laurent Kabila, who were backed by the Rwandan and Ugandan governments. Kabila's Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaïre (AFDL) captured Kinshasa in May 1997 and President Mobutu fled. Zaïre was renamed the Democratic Republic of Congo.

A rebellion against the government of Laurent Kabila began in Kivu in August 1998 and by the end of the month the rebels had seized large areas in the east and west of the country. Angola, Chad, Kenya, Namibia and Zimbabwe promised President Kabila military support. The Angolan army quickly recaptured several towns in the south-west, but the rebels maintained their grip on the eastern regions. The rebel movement, the Congolese Democratic Rally (RCD), was supported by Uganda and Rwanda. On 17 May 1999, Ernest Wamba dia Wamba, the RCD leader, was ousted, splitting the movement into two distinct factions, that led by Wamba dia Wamba being called the Congolese Democratic Rally-Liberation Movement (RCD-LM). A cease-fire signed on 31 August 1999 between the government and the two rebel groups has remained largely intact, although localised clashes have been frequent. The main rebel groups, the RCD, the RCD-LM and the Congolese Liberation Movement (MLC) reached agreement on 20 December 1999 to form an umbrella organisation to defeat the government. A new rebel group, the Congolese Democratic Rally-National (RCD-N), was founded in October 2000 and in January 2001, the RCD and the RCD-LM were reunited as the Congolese Liberation Front (FLC).

By December 2000, an agreement between the government and the rebel groups was signed to withdraw troops from the front line. All parties to the civil war had withdrawn their troops 15 km from their frontline positions by 26 March 2001.

President Laurent Désiré Kabila died on 18 January 2001, having been shot by his bodyguard. His son, Maj.-Gen. Joseph Kabila, was sworn in as President on 26 January. No elections have been held since.

UN-sponsored peace talks began in South Africa in February 2002 and on 16 December the government and the main rebel groups signed a power-sharing agreement. A transitional government including the political opposition as well as representatives of the RCD and FLC was to hold power for two years, after which elections would be held. On 16 March 2003 a draft constitution was agreed whereby incumbent President Joseph Kabila would be supported during the two-year transition period by four vice-presidents. On 7 April Joseph Kabila was sworn in as President of the transitional government and in July he named the transitional government cabinet. The four vice-presidents and most of the cabinet members were sworn in in July. However the ministers representing the RCD and the FLC refused to take the oath of allegiance to President Kabila as head of the transitional government. The last Ugandan troops left eastern Congo in May 2003 but clashes between rival militias led to the deployment of French peacekeepers in Bunia as part of a UN rapid reaction force in June. By July 2004, there remained in the region over 10,000 UN troops from over 50 countries.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A 300-member Transitional Constituent Assembly was established in August 2000. The members of the Assembly were appointed by former President Laurent Kabila.

There are 11 regions, each under a Governor and provincial administration: Bas-Zaïre (provincial capital, Matadi); Bandundu (Bandundu); Equateur (Mbandaka); Haut-Zaïre (Kisangani); Kinshasa (Kinshasa); Maniema (Kindu); North Kivu (Goma); South Kivu (Bukavu); Shaba (Katanga) (Lubumbashi); East Kasai (Mbuji-Mayi); West Kasai (Kananga).

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Coffee, rubber, cocoa and timber are the most important agricultural exports but the production of cotton, pyrethrum and copal is steadily increasing. Copper is widely exploited, and industrial diamonds and cobalt are also produced. Oil deposits are exploited off the Zaïre estuary and reef-gold is mined in the north-east of the country.

The main industrial products are foodstuffs, beverages, tobacco, textiles, leather, wood products, cement and building materials, metallurgy, small river craft and bicycles. There are reserves of hydroelectric power and the Inga dam on the river Zaïre supplies electricity to Matadi, Kinshasa and Shaba.

Whilst the country has many natural resources, civil war has led to the collapse of the economy, with total debt amounting to more than twice the GNI.

In July 2003 the IMF announced that US$10,000 million of debt relief would be granted to the Democratic Republic of Congo under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative. In addition, the World Bank approved a US$120 million loan to boost investment and support public enterprises in key economic sectors.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are approximately 157,000 km of roads, including 30 km of expressway. The expressway is surfaced and 20,500 km of roads are unsurfaced. There are 6,000 km of railways. The country has four international and 40 principal airports.

MEDIA

The state controlled media (Radio-Television Nationale Congolaise (RTNC) and La Voix du Congo) has the greatest influence and broadcast reach. There are some eight other private and commercial television stations and ten radio stations (some run by the Catholic church, some by the UN). Around 15 newspapers are published regularly in Kinshasa.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Republic of Congo is covered by grassland, mangrove and dense rainforest. Elevation extremes range from 903 m (Mount Berongou) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The main rivers are the Sangha and Alima in the north. The climate is equatorial. The annual daily temperature in Brazzaville is between 28°C and 33°C. The dry season is June to September. The country is prone to flooding during the wet season (March to June).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The French colony of Middle Congo, now the Republic of Congo, became a member state of the French Community on 28 November 1958 and fully independent on 17 August 1960.

In 1968, a National Council of army officers took power and created the Parti Congolais du Travail (PCT) and the People's Republic of the Congo. After popular pressure, the PCT abandoned its monopoly of power and renounced Marxism in 1990. In 1992 the country adopted a new multi-party constitution with a directly elected president and a bicameral parliament.

The lack of a parliamentary majority forced President Lissouba to call fresh elections in 1993. These were won by the Pan-African Union for Social Democracy (UPADS) but the results were disputed by opposition groups and violence broke out between rival parties. A new UPADS-dominated government was appointed in January 1995. In June 1997, fighting broke out between forces of President Lissouba and followers of former President Sassou-Nguesso, who was re-installed as President in October 1997. Elections scheduled for July 1997 were called off and a National Forum for Unity and Democracy was set up to schedule legislative elections. It declared a three-year transition period after which democratic elections would be held. A constitutional committee was inaugurated in November 1998, charged with drafting a constitution to be approved by referendum in 1999.

In April 1999, supporters of former Prime Minister Bernard Kolelas formed themselves into a political party, the Patriotic Union of Ninja Forces. Following a period of intense fighting, negotiations between the government and the rebels began in November 1999; an accord was reached in which the two sides agreed to an unconditional end to hostilities and the demilitarisation of political parties.

A 'non-exclusive national dialogue' was held between 17 March and 14 April 2001. Rebel leaders and the government adopted a draft constitution, which aimed to establish a directly elected executive presidency and bicameral legislature. The new constitution was approved in a referendum in January 2002. A presidential election held in March 2002 was won by Denis Sassou-Nguesso who secured nearly 90 per cent of the vote. The Congolese Labour Party (PCT) won an overall majority in elections to the National Assembly held in May and June 2002. There was heavy fighting throughout 2002 but two agreements were signed between the government and the Ninja fighters in March 2003 to end hostilities and restore free movement and the rule of law.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Republic of Congo has its own oil deposits, producing about nine million tonnes annually. These deposits make up over half of The Congo's economy. It also produces lead, zinc and gold. The principal agricultural products are timber, cassava and yams. Imports are mainly of machinery. Agriculture accounts for about 10 per cent of GDP.

In 2000 the government, the World Bank and the IMF agreed a Post-Conflict Assistance Programme which provided US$14 million for post-war reconstruction and economic development.

37 per cent of imports come from France, making it the Republic's biggest trading partner.

Pointe Noire is the main port and is the centre of the offshore oil industry. It is linked to Brazzaville by rail and road. There are 894 km of railways and 12,800 km of roads, 1,242 km of which are surfaced. Four of the 31 airports have surfaced runways. There are 1,120 km of commercially navigable waterways on the Congo and Ubango rivers.

MEDIA

Brazzaville is at the centre of the print media industry with five privately owned newspapers regularly published there. TV Congo is the only television station and it is state owned and controlled by Radiodiffusion Television Congolaise. Radio Congo is also state controlled.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Cordillera de Guanacaste, (north-west) Cordillera Central, and Cordillera de Talamanca form the series of volcanic mountain ranges that split the country from north to south. Elevation extremes range from 3,180 m (Chirripó Grande) to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with an average annual temperature of 26°C to 28°C. The wet season runs from May to November. The area is subject to occasional earthquakes, hurricanes, flooding and landslides.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

For nearly three centuries (1530–1821) Costa Rica was under Spanish rule. In 1821 the country obtained its independence, although from 1824 to 1839 it was one of the United States of Central America.

The main political parties are the Social Christian Unity Party (PUSC) and the National Liberation Party (PLN). In the legislative elections held in 2002 none of the main parties won the required 40 per cent of the vote.

In a second round of elections in April the PUSC won against the PLN by a margin of 58 per cent to 42 per cent. The presidential election of the same period was won by the PUSC candidate Abel Pacheco.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President, who is head of state and government, with legislative power vested in the 57-member Legislative Assembly (Asamblea Legislativa). Under the constitution both the President and the members of the Legislative Assembly are elected for a single four-year term and may not be re-elected.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Tourism is the largest single industry, and with one third of the country as national parkland or nature reserve, 'ecotourism' is on the increase. Abundant flora and fauna, such as macaws, toucans and over 1,000 species of orchid, attract large numbers of visitors. In 2002, there were 1,113,359 tourists. The manufacturing industry accounts for around 30 per cent of GDP, the principal products being computer components, foodstuffs, textiles, plastic goods and pharmaceuticals. The principal agricultural products are coffee, bananas, sugar and cattle (for meat).

The chief exports are manufactured goods, bananas, coffee, fish and shellfish, machinery and tropical fruits. The chief imports are raw materials for industry, consumer goods, capital equipment, and fuel and mineral oils. The USA is Costa Rica's largest trading partner and accounts for around 36.7 per cent of imports and 31.5 per cent of exports. Other major trading partners are Japan, the UK, Mexico and the Netherlands.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The chief ports are Limón on the Atlantic coast, through which passes most of the coffee exported, and Caldera on the Pacific coast. LACSA is the national airline, operating flights throughout Central and South America, the Caribbean and the USA, besides internal flights to over 100 local airports. There are 950 km of railways and 35,892 km of roads, 7,896 of which are surfaced. There are 151 airports, 30 of which have surfaced runways.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Costa Rica has nine major newspapers, at least 18 television stations and over 35 radio stations. It is one of the most peaceful and prosperous countries in Central America. The city of Escazú is home to several contemporary artists including Dinorah Bolandi (b. 1968) and Mirta Castro (b. 1967). Costa Rican music is diverse, reflecting its African, Pre-Colombian and Spanish roots.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The climate is equatorial in the southern and western forest areas; tropical in the central and eastern savannah regions and dry and tropical in the north. Elevation extremes range from 1,752 m (Mount Nimba) at the highest point to 0 m (Gulf of Guinea) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures range from 24°C in August to 27°C in March.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Although French contact was made in the first half of the 19th century, Côte d'Ivoire became a colony only in 1893 and was finally pacified in 1912. It decided in 1958 to remain an autonomous republic within the French Community; full independence outside the Community was proclaimed on 7 August 1960.

After having been President since independence in 1960, President Houphouët-Boigny died in 1993 and was replaced by the parliamentary speaker Henri Konan-Bédié. The President was deposed by Gen. Robert Guéi in a military coup on 24–25 December 1999 and a transitional government was announced in January 2000.

A referendum on a new constitution was held in July 2000, which was approved by 86.58 per cent of those who voted.

In October 2000 a presidential election was held. President Guéi dissolved the electoral commission following early results which indicated that Laurent Gbagbo of the Ivorian Popular Front (FPI) was leading, and it was announced that Guéi had won. Demonstrations and mounting violence led to Guéi fleeing the country on 26 October and Gbagbo was inaugurated as President.

In elections to the National Assembly held in December 2000 and January 2001, the FPI won 96 seats and the Democratic Party of Côte d'Ivoire (PDCI) won 94 seats. The election was boycotted by the Rally of Republicans (RDR), the strongest party in the north of the country.

Fighting broke out between government forces and rebel forces in September 2002 during which Guéi was killed. A short-lived cease-fire in October gave way to further clashes. France deployed hundreds of troops in December after many civilians had been killed. In March 2003 the government agreed to include nine members from rebel ranks. A cease-fire was signed between the armed forces and rebel groups in May but sporadic outbreaks of violence continued until December.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Côte d'Ivoire has a presidential system of government and a single-chamber National Assembly of 225 members, directly elected for a five-year term. It has been a multiparty system since 1990. The President's term of office is five years, renewable once only.

It was proposed that a Senate should be created in the next general election which is due to take place in 2005.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In the late 1980s the economy contracted considerably. Exports began to lose value as the currencies of neighbouring states deteriorated. The situation worsened as the franc CFA remained pegged to the value of the French Franc. An economic reform and stabilisation programme began in 1989 under IMF auspices and has brought down inflation, increased investment and led to GDP growth. The devaluation of the CFA franc in January 1994 increased exports considerably and restored a trade surplus. In February 1998 a further economic reform programme began. Agriculture accounts for 29 per cent of GDP, the manufacturing industry for 22 per cent and the service industries for 49 per cent. Côte d'Ivoire's main trading partner is France. Agriculture employs around 68 per cent of the workforce.

The principal exports are coffee, cocoa (Côte d'Ivoire is the world's largest producer, supplying 40 per cent of global demand), timber, palm oil, sugar, rubber, pineapples, bananas, and cotton. There are some deposits of diamonds and minerals including manganese and iron. Oil and gas deposits have been exploited since 1995.

GNI – US$10,300 million (2001); US$630 per capita (2001)

Imports from UK	£40,481,000	£43,745,000
Exports to UK	92,981,000	108,618,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Côte d'Ivoire has 660 km of railways and 50,400 km of roads, 4,889 km of which are surfaced. There are 980 km of navigable rivers and canals and the main ports are Abidjan, Aboisso, Dabou and San-Pedro. There are 36 airports, seven of which have surfaced runways.

MEDIA

The state broadcaster is Radiodiffusion Television Ivoirienne (RTI). RTI operates two national radio stations (La Chaîne Nationale and Frequence 2) and two television channels (La Première and TV2). There are no private terrestrial television stations although subscription services are available. Radio is the most popular medium for news with around 30 non-commercial community radio stations located throughout the country. The print media is represented by two government-owned daily newspapers and around 20 privately owned newspapers.

CULTURE

The wooden mask carvings of the Baulé, the Dan (Yacouba) and the Senoufo are highly accomplished and the art of these ethnic groups is internationally acclaimed. The people of Côte d'Ivoire are also famous for their music (village entertainers, griot, create music with instruments made from local materials such as gourds and skins).

CROATIA

Republika Hrvatska – Republic of Croatia

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Croatia is divided into three major geographic areas: the Pannonian region in the north, the central mountain belt, and the Adriatic coast region of Istria and Dalmatia which has 1,185 islands and islets and 1,778 km of coastline. Elevation extremes range from 1,830 m (Dinara) at the highest point to 0 m (Adriatic Sea) at the lowest. The climate is continental on the Pannonian Basin with average temperatures ranging from  $-1^{\circ}\text{C}$  to  $19^{\circ}\text{C}$ . The climate is Mediterranean on the Adriatic coast with average temperatures from  $6^{\circ}\text{C}$  (January) to  $24^{\circ}\text{C}$  (July).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Croatia was part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire from 1526 to 1918. On 29 October 1918 the Croatian parliament declared Croatia independent and soon after Croatia joined with Slovenia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Serbia and Montenegro to form the 'Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes' (renamed Yugoslavia in 1929). From 1941 to 1945 Yugoslavia was occupied by the Axis powers, with Italy and Hungary annexing parts of Croatia and a pro-Nazi Croat puppet state being established in the remainder of Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina. The armed extremists of this state (Ustaše) engaged in fierce fighting with Serbian royalists, Communist partisans and pro-Allied Croat partisans.

At the end of the war Yugoslavia was re-established as a federal republic under Communist rule but gradually disintegrated following the death of the wartime partisan leader Josp Tito (b. 1892) in 1980.

In April and May 1990 Croatia's first free, democratic elections were won by the Croatian Democratic Union (HDZ) of Dr Franjo Tudjman. War broke out in September 1991 between Croatia and Serbia after the ethnic Serb minority in Croatia rejected Croatia's independence from Yugoslavia, which had been declared on 30 May. The war in Croatia continued until January 1992 when a cease-fire was declared. The Federal Yugoslav Army (JNA) and Serb forces had secured control of virtually all ethnic Serb areas in Croatia.

Despite the cease-fire sporadic violence continued. Croatian troops recaptured the Straits of Maslenica in January 1993. In May 1995 operation Flash, a sudden military offensive, was launched by Croatian forces and resulted in the recapture of Western Slavonia. In August of the same year operation Storm regained control of the Krajina, leaving Eastern Slavonia as the only Serb-controlled area within Croatia's territory.

The Parliamentary elections of October 1995 maintained the HDZ's power. In December 1995 President Tudjman signed the Dayton Accord. President Tudjman was re-elected in 1997, but was temporarily replaced by Vlatko Pavletić on 26 November 1999 after he fell ill; he died on 10 December. In the general election held in January 2000, the opposition coalition of the Social Democratic Party of Croatia (SPH) and the Croatian Social Liberal Party (HSL) scored a decisive victory, winning a total of 68 seats. Stjepan Mesić was elected in presidential elections held in February 2000.

Croatia submitted an application for EU membership in February 2003 which is currently under consideration.

SECESSION

Croatia's ethnic Serbs voted to establish a Republic of Serbian Krajina (RSK) in 1993.

The Croatian government seized Western Slavonia in May 1995 and the whole of Krajina in August 1995 prompting the withdrawal of 10,000 UNCRO peacekeepers and the flight of 150,000 Serbs. The last Croatian Serb-held area of Eastern Slavonia agreed in November 1995 to its eventual re-integration into Croatia, which took place on 15 January 1998.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Croatia was sworn in as a member of the Council of Europe in November 1996. There has been a dispute with Yugoslavia spanning around ten years, over the Prevlaka peninsula, which lies within Croatian territory, yet controls access to Kotor Bay, Yugoslavia's most important deep water port. A temporary protocol was signed between the two governments in December 2002 which gave Croatia full sovereignty, although the area must remain demilitarised and have joint maritime police patrols.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in a President and Government. The President is directly elected for a five-year term. Legislative power is vested in the 153-member Chamber of Representatives, whose members are directly elected for a four-year term.

The constitution was amended in November 2000 to reduce the powers of the presidency. A further amendment was agreed in March 2001, when the Chamber of Representatives voted to abolish the Chamber of Counties, the upper house of the legislature.

DEFENCE

The Army has 287 main battle tanks, 28 armoured personnel carriers and 104 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Air Force has 24 combat aircraft and 10 armed helicopters. The Navy has one submarine and seven patrol and coastal combatants at five bases.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 2.4 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 18,850: Army 14,050, Navy 2,500, Air Force 2,300; Paramilitaries 10,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Six months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Industrial production was severely hampered during the conflict in 1991–5; damage to the infrastructure was estimated by the government to be US$27,000 million, with the loss of over 13,000 lives. Large areas of farmland were destroyed and the tourist industry, which provided one third of total foreign exchange earnings in 1990, was decimated. However, Croatia has seen a rise in tourism since 2000.

The manufacturing industry accounts for 33 per cent of GDP. Shipbuilding and fishing are major industries on the Adriatic coast. Inland there is a light manufacturing sector, food-processing industries, bauxite deposits, thermal mineral springs, hydroelectric potential, and agriculture (nine per cent of GDP) based on grain, horticulture, livestock and tobacco. The textile industry is one of the most important, employing more than 17 per cent of the population. The service industries account for 58 per cent of GDP. In February 2003 the IMF approved a 14-month standby credit of around US$145.5 million to support Croatia's economic and financial programme. GNI – US$19,900 million (2001); US$4,550 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 2,296 km of railways and 28,123 km of roads, 23,792 of which are surfaced. There are 59 airports, 16 of which are surfaced, and one heliport.

MEDIA

Croatia's constitution guarantees freedom of the press. Croatian Radio-Television (HRT) is the national state owned broadcaster and is the main source of news. Nove TV is the country's first national private network. There are four main news publications: Vecernji List (daily), Feral Tribune (weekly), Vjesnik (daily), Nacional (weekly).

CULTURE

Before the conflicts of recent years Croatia was one of Europe's most popular tourist destinations (ten million visitors a year visited the Adriatic shoreline prior to 1991).

Twentieth-century cultural figures include sculptor Ivan Mestrovic (1883–1962), whose work can be seen in public squares all over Croatia, and the novelist Miroslav-Krleža (1893–1981).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Cuba, the largest island in the Caribbean, is part of an archipelago which also includes Isla de la Juventud and 1,600 other islets and cays. The island of Cuba itself has three mountainous ranges running from east to west (the Oriental, Central and Occidental ranges). Cuba has a subtropical climate with an average annual temperature of 25°C. Elevation extremes range from 2,005 m (Pico Turquino) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The island was visited by Columbus in 1492. Early in the 16th century the island was conquered by the Spanish, and for almost four centuries remained under Spanish rule. Separatist agitation in the closing years of the 19th century culminated in open warfare. In 1898 the USA intervened and demanded the evacuation of Cuba by Spanish forces. The Spanish-American war led to the abandonment of the island, which came under American military rule from 1899 until 1902, when an autonomous government was inaugurated with an elected president, and bicameral legislature.

A revolution led by Dr Fidel Castro overthrew the government of Gen. Batista in 1959. In 1965 the Communist Party of Cuba (PCC) was formed to succeed the United Party of the Socialist Revolution; it is the only authorised political party. A new Socialist constitution came into force in 1976 and indirect elections to the National Assembly of People's Power were subsequently held. The first direct elections to the National Assembly were held in 1993; all candidates were officially approved by the Communist Party and ran for election unopposed. The 14 provincial assemblies were elected in the same manner. At the election of deputies to the National Assembly held in 2003, all 609 unopposed PCC candidates received the required 50 per cent of the vote, and on 6 March the National Assembly confirmed Dr Castro as President for a further five-year term.

In June 2003, the European Union imposed restrictions in its political and cultural contacts with Cuba over its poor human rights record.

DEFENCE

The Army has about 900 main battle tanks and 700 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has five patrol and coastal vessels at seven bases. The Air Force has 130 combat aircraft (of which only some 25 are operational) and 45 armed helicopters.

The last former Soviet combat personnel left Cuba in 1993, but 810 Russian military advisers remain to operate military intelligence facilities. In January 2002 Lourdes, Russia's last military base, closed down. The United States has 2,039 personnel at Guantánamo Bay Naval Base, which has been leased since before the 1959 revolution. Suspected al-Qa'eda prisoners taken in the 2001 war in Afghanistan were flown to Guantánamo Bay for interrogation in early 2002.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 3.9 per cent of GDP (2002)
MILITARY PERSONNEL – 46,000: Army 35,000, Navy 3,000, Air Force 8,000; Paramilitaries 26,500
CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Two years

ECONOMY AND TRADE

After the revolution virtually all land and industrial and commercial enterprises were nationalised. Following the curtailing of Cuba's privileged trading relationships with the Soviet bloc in 1989, the economy deteriorated sharply and it became necessary to introduce rationing of energy, food and consumer goods. GDP fell by 75 per cent between 1989 and 1994, and the government was forced to introduce reforms. Since 1993, the government has legalised the holding of US dollars by private individuals, permitted private enterprise, cut subsidies to loss-making state industries, allowed prices for some goods and services to rise, and introduced income tax. State farms have been transformed into co-operatives run by private individuals and permitted to sell 20 per cent of produce on the open market, but remain relatively unproductive. In 1995, foreign investors were permitted to buy property and own Cuban-based companies, with British and Canadian firms becoming involved in the oil and mining industries.

Sugar is still one of the mainstays of the economy but is subject to fluctuating world prices. Sugar exports generated US$441 million in 2002 and the industry employs 327,000 workers. In June 2002 the government announced that it would be closing 70 of its 156 sugar cane mills and switching 14 of the remaining mills to the production of honey and/or turning them into tourist attractions. Nickel production fell in 2002 but the world price rose to bring the economy an estimated US$512 million in revenue. Lack of external finance has been a major obstacle to economic recovery, as has the long-standing trade and economic embargo imposed by the USA, which has been criticised repeatedly by the UN and was condemned by the European Parliament in November 1998. In November 2002 the UN General Assembly voted in favour of a non-binding resolution calling for an end to the US trade embargo.

In 2003 1.9 million tourists visited Cuba.

Trade between Cuba and the former socialist economies of Europe has declined since 1989, although Russia is Cuba's second largest export partner (after the Netherlands at 18.5 per cent), taking 17.5 per cent of exports in 2002. The US trade embargo was relaxed in March 1998 to allow food and medicine into the country. Principal exports are sugar, nickel, seafood, citrus fruits, tobacco and rum.

GDP – US$23,901 million (1998); US$2,384 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.2 per cent (1999)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£11,333,000	£17,372,000
Exports to UK	8,088,000	9,074,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 3,442 km of railways, with an additional 7,742 km of track used exclusively by the sugar plantations. There are 60,858 km of roads, 29,820 km of which is surfaced and 638 km of which is expressway. In March 1998 the ban on direct flights between Cuba and the USA was lifted, although the only air connection with the USA is a weekly charter service between Miami and Havana.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory at all levels. In some rural areas children attend boarding schools where agricultural tasks are compulsory in addition to schoolwork. After basic education students can choose to go to a pre-collegiate school or a technical school. The pre-collegiate school is free to graduates.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 2.8 per cent; (f) 3.1 per cent (2003)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 81 per cent (1997); tertiary 12 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Private ownership of electronic media is prohibited. The official Communist Party newspaper is Granma. The main television stations are Cubavision, Tele-Rebelde and CHTV, a subsidiary of Tele-Rebelde. The main radio stations are Radio Rebelde and Radio Reloj. Radio-TV Marti is a US government backed station that targets Cuban listeners from its transmitting base in Florida.

CULTURE

Cubans are perhaps most famous for their music – a vibrant mix of Spanish traditional guitar melodies and African rhythms. Rumba, mambo, bolero, salsa and cha-cha-cha all evolved from son, a type of Cuban music that originated in the hills of Oriente at the turn of the 20th century.

Cuba has produced writers of international standing such as José Martí (1853–95), Cirilo Villaverde y de la Paz (1812–94), Alejo Carpentier (1904–80), Nicolás Guillén (1902–89) and Guillermo Cabrera Infante (b. 1929).

CYPRUS

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Cyprus is the third largest island in the Mediterranean. It has two mountain ranges, the Pentadaktylos range along the north coast, and the Troodos range (which includes Mount Olympus) in the central and western areas of the island. Elevation extremes range from 1,952 m (Mount Olympus) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is Mediterranean.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Cyprus came under British administration from 1878, and was formally annexed to Britain in 1914 on the outbreak of war with Turkey. From 1925 to 1960 it was a Crown Colony. Following the launch in 1955 of an armed campaign by the National Organisation of Cypriot Fighters (EOKA) in support of union with Greece and against British rule, a state of emergency was declared which lasted for four years. An agreement was signed on 19 February 1959 between the United Kingdom, Greece, Turkey, and the Greek and Turkish Cypriots which stipulated that Cyprus would become an independent republic.

The island became independent on 16 August 1960. The constitution provided for a Greek Cypriot president and a Turkish Cypriot vice-president but this system proved unworkable and led to intercommunal trouble. The UN Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) was set up in 1964.

The Progressive Party of the Working People (AKEL) became the largest party in the House of Representatives following the election of 2001, winning 20 seats with the Democratic Coalition (DISI). Tassos Papadopoulos of the Democratic Party (DIKO) won the presidential election of 2003 with 15.5 per cent of the vote.

A peace plan to re-unify the island was presented to Cyprus by the UN in November 2002 stipulating a federation with two constituent parts (one Greek, one Turkish) with a loose central government and a rotating presidency. Following four years of accession talks, in December 2002 Cyprus was invited to join the EU providing the two communities agreed to the UN plan by March 2003. The deadline passed without agreement and the EU stated that without re-unification only Greek Cyprus would be granted membership. On 30 April the Greek Cypriot Government announced confidence-building measures designed to end the isolation of Turkish Cypriots.

On 24 April 2004 a referendum was held on the UN plan for repatriation. The plan was rejected by 75.8 per cent of Greek Cypriots but accepted by a 64.9 per cent majority by Turkish Cypriots.

The Greek sector of Cyprus joined the European Union on 1 May 2004.

BRITISH SOVEREIGN BASE AREAS

The UK retained full sovereignty and jurisdiction over two areas of 253 sq. km in all: Ayios Nicolaos and Dhekelia. The British Administrator of these areas is appointed by The Queen and is responsible to the Secretary of State for Defence. The combined total of army and RAF personnel stationed in the areas is 3,500.

Administrator of the British Sovereign Base Areas, Air Vice-Marshal T. W. Rimmer, OBE

DEFENCE

The National Guard has 145 main battle tanks, 43 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 310 armoured personnel carriers. Turkey has about 36,000 troops in northern Cyprus.

In January 1998, a military airfield in Paphos was completed. It is intended to provide a base for Greek military aircraft, as Cyprus does not possess its own air force.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In Greek Cyprus, the service industries accounted for 75.5 per cent of GDP in 2000; the manufacturing industry 13.1 per cent, construction 6.9 per cent and agriculture 4.5 per cent. In Turkish Cyprus, services accounted for about 74 per cent of GDP in 1998. Main products are citrus fruits, grapes and other vine products, meat, milk, potatoes and other vegetables. Manufacturing, construction, distribution and other service industries are additional major employers. Tourism is the main growth industry with around 2.5 million visitors every year. Tourism earns more than US$2,000 million annually and represents 20 per cent of GDP. Twenty per cent of the world's ships are Cypriot registered. The accession of Greek Cyprus to the EU in 2004 is expected to have a detrimental effect upon the economic future of the Turkish community.

The UK was the main export market for Cyprus in 2003 with 28.2 per cent of all exports going to Britain. Russia was the main import partner and provided 17.9 per cent of imported commodities.

CULTURE

European and Middle Eastern cultures have been converging in Cyprus for over 9,000 years. Cyprus is a country of ancient castles (built during the crusades), Greek temples, monasteries (still inhabited by the Greek Orthodox monks of the south) and elaborate mosaics (left by the Romans). Osman Turkey (1927–2001), a Turkish Cypriot poet, was nominated for the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1988.

TURKISH REPUBLIC OF NORTHERN CYPRUS

In 1974, mainland Greek officers under instructions from the military junta in Athens launched a coup and installed a former EOKA member, Nikos Sampson, as president. Turkey invaded northern Cyprus and occupied over a third of the island. In 1975 a 'Turkish Federated State of Cyprus' under Rauf Denktaş was declared in this area and in 1983 a 'Declaration of Statehood' was issued which purported to establish the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'. The declaration was condemned by the UN Security Council and only Turkey has recognised the new 'state'. In 1985, Denktaş was elected president and a general election was held. Denktaş was re-elected in 1990, 1995 and on 15 April 2000. A UN plan for the re-unification of the island was formally rejected by him on 31 August 1998. On 6 December 1998, elections to the 50-seat Republican Assembly resulted in a coalition government between the National Unity Party, who gained 24 seats, and the Democrat Party, who gained 13 seats. UN-sponsored proximity talks were held on 3–14 December 1999 between representatives of the Greek and Turkish communities, but no agreement was reached. In March 2003 President Denktaş rejected a UN re-unification plan. Recent confidence-building measures instituted by both governments have improved relations between the two communities.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Czech Republic is composed of Bohemia and Moravia. Bohemia is surrounded by mountain ranges while Moravian land stretches to the Danubian basin. Roughly a third of the country is covered by forest. Elevation extremes range from 1,602 m (Snezka) at the highest point to 115 m (Elbe River) at the lowest. The climate is continental with warm, humid summers and cold, dry winters. The average temperature in Prague ranges from 2°C in January to 19°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area came under the rule of the Habsburg dynasty in 1526 and remained part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire until 1918. The rise of Czech nationalism in the late 19th century led to Czechoslovakia's independence on 28 October 1918 following an amalgamation of Bohemia, Moravia, Slovakia and Ruthenia and was confirmed by the Versailles Peace Conference in 1919.

Czechoslovakia was forced to cede the ethnic German Sudetenland to Nazi Germany in 1938 after the Munich Agreement. German forces invaded the Czech Republic in 1939 and incorporated it into Germany while Slovakia became a puppet state. The Czech Republic was liberated by Soviet and American forces in 1945. The pre-war democratic Czechoslovak state was re-established in 1945, having ceded Ruthenia to the Soviet Union. The Communists took power in a coup in 1948 and remained in power until 1989.

In 1968 the Communist Party under Alexander Dubček embarked on a political and economic reform programme (known as the Prague Spring). The reforms were suppressed following an invasion by Warsaw Pact troops on the night of 20 August 1968, and were abandoned when Gustáv Husák became leader of the Communist Party in 1969.

Mass protests in November 1989 led to the resignation of the Communist Party Central Committee. The Party was forced to concede its monopoly of power and on 10 December a new government was appointed in which only half the ministers were Communists. Husák resigned as president and was replaced by the dissident writer Václav Havel. Free elections were held in June 1990 in which the Communist Party was defeated.

In late 1992 the leaders of the Czech and Slovak republics agreed to dissolve the federation and form two sovereign states, this took effect on 1 January 1993.

The general election of June 2002 produced no outright winner. Vladimír Špidla, leader of the Czech Social Democratic Party (ČSSD) formed a coalition government on 15 July. The ČSSD lost its majority in the Senate following elections held in October and November 2002. President Havel left office in February 2003 but parliament failed to elect a successor and Prime Minister Vladimír Špidla became acting president. On 28 February, Václav Klaus of the Civic Democrat Party (ODS) was elected president and took office in March.

The Czech Republic became a full member of the EU on 1 May 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution vests legislative power in the bicameral parliament, comprising a 200-member Chamber of Deputies elected for a four-year term and an 81-member Senate elected for a six-year term, one-third being renewed every two years. The President is elected by Parliament for a five-year term. Executive power is held by the Prime Minister and Council of Ministers. The Council of Ministers is appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is appointed by the President. A two-thirds majority in parliament is necessary to amend the constitution, and federal laws remain in place unless superseded by Czech ones. A Constitutional Court has been established comprising 15 judges nominated by the President for ten-year terms with Senate approval.

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Under Communist rule industry and most agricultural land was state-owned. An economic reform programme began in 1990 to produce a free-market economy. This has necessitated a restrictive monetary policy to stem inflation and a restructuring of industry to be competitive, and these were major reasons for the break with Slovakia. As a result, foreign investment (about US$8,500 million in 2002) and private enterprises have grown, over 90 per cent of the economy has been privatised, and reliance on trade with the former Soviet bloc countries has ended.

A customs union between the Czech and Slovak Republics is in place but separate currencies were introduced in February 1993 following speculation. The Koruna was made fully convertible in October 1995.

Principal agricultural products are sugar beet, potatoes and cereal crops; the timber industry is also very important. Having been the major industrial area of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, the country has long been industrialised, and machinery, industrial consumer goods and raw materials are major exports. Industry accounts for 41 per cent of GDP compared to 3.8 per cent for agriculture. Services account for 55.2 per cent of GDP. The country's principal trading partner is Germany, which accounts for 40.2 per cent of exports and 39.1 per cent of imports.

GNI – US$54,300 million (2001); US$5,310 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.0 per cent (2002)

INFLATION RATE – 4.1 per cent (2001)

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory for all children from the age of six to 15. Primary education lasts for nine years, divided into two stages of five and four years respectively. Secondary education comprises three main types of school: general schools, technical schools and vocational schools. There are nine universities of which the oldest and most famous is Charles University in Prague (founded 1348).

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 99 per cent (1997); tertiary 24 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The public broadcaster is Česká Televize (CT) and it runs two channels. There are several private television stations. Czech public radio, Český Rozhlas (CRO), operates three national networks and local services alongside over 70 private radio stations throughout the country.

CULTURE

Prague is famous for its Art Nouveau architecture, cobbled streets and squares and a thriving cultural life (particularly its contemporary jazz scene). Some of the most famous Czech composers are Antonin Dvorak (1841–1904), Bedrich Smetana (1824–84) and Leos Janacek (1854–1928). Important writers include Franz Kafka (1883–1924), Milan Kundera (b. 1929), Ivan Klima (b. 1931) and Václav Havel (b. 1936).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Denmark is a low-lying country indented by lagoons and fjords along its shoreline (which consists of the bulk of the Jutland peninsula). Denmark also comprises 406 islands, many of them in the Baltic Sea and some of the North Frisian Islands in the North Sea. There are cold winters and warm summers. Temperatures range from 0.5°C in January to 17°C in July. Elevation extremes range from 173 m (Yding Skovhoej) at the highest point to –7 m (Lammefjord) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Danes were at the forefront of Viking expansionism and briefly united England and Scandinavia under Cnut (Canute) (995–1035).

The Union of Kalmar (1397) brought Norway and Sweden (including Finland) under Danish rule. Danish power waned during the 16th century, however, enabling Sweden to re-establish its independence in 1523. In the 19th century Norway was ceded to Sweden under the Treaty of Kiel (1814) and both Schleswig and Holstein, which had been subsumed in 1460, were surrendered to Germany.

Denmark remained neutral during the First World War, and in a plebiscite held in accordance with the Versailles Treaty (1919), northern Schleswig voted to return to Danish sovereignty. In 1939 Denmark signed a non-aggression pact with Germany but was invaded in 1940 and coerced into contributing to the German war effort. Iceland declared its independence from Denmark in 1944 and the Faroe Islands were granted home rule in 1948. Greenland, which had had the status of a colony, was integrated into Denmark in 1953 and granted home rule in 1979. Social Democrat-led coalitions dominated the post-war era until 1982 when a right-wing government was elected. Denmark joined the European Community in 1973.

A referendum was held on 28 September 2000 on membership of the European single currency. Membership was rejected by 53.1 per cent of those who voted.

The most recent legislative elections were in 2001 and the Liberal Party became the largest party in Parliament. A coalition government was formed by Anders Fogh Rasmussen between the Liberal Party and the Danish People's Party (DPP).

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The legislature consists of one chamber, the Folketing, of 179 members, including two for the Faroes and two for Greenland, which is elected for a four-year term. The voting age is 18 with an electoral system based on proportional representation and a 2 per cent threshold for parliamentary representation.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The largest sectors of employment are professional services and administration (71 per cent of GDP); manufacturing (26 per cent of GDP) and agriculture (3 per cent of GDP). The chief agricultural products are fish, pigs, dairy products, poultry and eggs, seeds and cereals; in the main imported raw materials supply the manufacturing industry but there are also considerable imports of finished goods. Denmark is self-sufficient in oil and natural gas and in 2000 became a net energy exporter through exports of natural gas to Sweden.

The principal imports are industrial raw materials, consumer goods, construction inputs, machinery, raw materials, vehicles and textile products. The chief exports are manufactured articles, windmills, chemicals, fish, ships and agricultural and dairy products. Germany and Sweden are Denmark's main trading partners.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

In 2002, the Danish mercantile fleet numbered 282 ships of more than 100 gross tonnage. There are 3,164 km of railway, of which 595 km are electrified. An additional network of 526 km is operated by private companies. A rail tunnel and bridge linking the islands of Sjælland and Fyn were opened in 1997, and a road and rail tunnel and bridge across the Øresund, linking Copenhagen with the Swedish city of Malmö, were opened on 1 July 2000. There are 71,591 km of roads, including 880 km of expressways.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory. Specialist schools are numerous, with commercial, technical and agricultural predominating. There are universities at Copenhagen (founded in 1479), Århus (1928), Odense (1966), Roskilde (1972) and Ålborg (1974).

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 48 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The public broadcaster is Danmarks Radio (DR). DR operates two television networks and national and regional radio stations. Private television stations can be obtained via satellite and cable. There are some 250 local commercial and community radio stations in operation. Some 38 newspapers are published in Denmark; eight daily papers are published in Copenhagen.

CULTURE

Denmark is a small country but has made significant contributions to the world of science. Nobel laureates include atomic physicist Niels Bohr (1885–1962) and medical researcher Niels Finsen (1860–1904). Notable contributions have been made in music: Carl Nielsen (1865–1931); design: Arne Jacobsen (1902–71), Georg Jensen (1866–1935); and literature: Hans Christian Anderson (1805–75), Karen Blixen (1885–1962) and Peter Høeg (b. 1957).

THE FAROE ISLANDS

AREA – 1,399 sq. km
 POPULATION – 47,000 (2001)
 CAPITAL – Tórshavn (population, 16,511, 2001)

Since 1948 the Faroe or Sheep Islands (18 in total) have had a degree of home rule. The islands are governed by a Løgting of between 27 and 32 members (elected for a four-year term) and a Landsstri of three to six members which deals with special Faroes affairs, sending two representatives to the Folketing at Copenhagen. The Faroes are not part of the EU. In elections to the Løgting held on 30 April 2002, Prime Minister Anfinn Kallsberg's coalition won 16 of the 32 seats, losing his overall majority. The next elections must take place no later than April 2006.

AREA – 2,175,600 sq. km of which about 16 per cent is ice-free
 POPULATION – 56,000 (2002)
 CAPITAL – Godthåb (Nuuk) (population, 13,889, 2002)

Greenland attained a status of internal autonomy in May 1979 and a government (Landsstyret) was established. It has a Landsting (parliament) of 31 members (elected for a four-year term) and sends two representatives to the Folketing at Copenhagen. In parliamentary elections held on 3 December 2002 the Forward (Siumut) party won ten seats. Hans Enoksen of the Forward party became prime minister and formed a coalition government with the Feeling of Community (Atássut) party. Greenland negotiated its withdrawal from the EU, without discontinuing relations with Denmark, and left on 1 February 1985. The USA has acquired certain rights to maintain air bases in Greenland.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Djibouti is situated on the east coast of Africa, at the point where the Gulf of Arden and The Red Sea meet. Elevation extremes range from 2,028 m (Moussa Ali) at the highest point to 155 m (Lake Assa) at the lowest. The country is prone to flash floods as well as cyclones, droughts and earthquakes. The climate is semi-arid with a hot season between May and September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Formerly French Somaliland (from 1888), Djibouti became the French Territory of the Afars and the Issas, named after the two main ethnic groups in the country. The Republic of Djibouti became independent on 27 June 1977. Hassan Gouled Aptidon (an Issa) of the Rassemblement Populaire pour le Progres (RPP) party was the Republic's first president. He was confirmed in office in 1981 and was re-elected in 1987.

In November 1991 Afar rebel groups attacked government troops in the north of Djibouti (Afar areas). The attacks escalated and the rebels formed an alliance, the Front pour la Restauration de L'Unite et de la Democratie (FRUD), and gained control of two-thirds of the country (but not the capital or the south). In 1993 government troops regained much of the territory lost to the rebels. The civil war ended with the signing of a peace accord in 1996.

A multiparty constitution was adopted by referendum in 1992 and subsequent multiparty elections held in December 1992 were won by the RPP. President Aptidon was re-elected for a fourth six-year term in 1993. In December 1997, in the first elections since the 1996 peace accord, the RPP and FRUD formed an alliance and won all 65 seats in the National Assembly. In April 1999, President Ismael Omar Guelleh (nephew of President Aptidon) was elected, gaining approximately three-quarters of the votes cast; about 60 per cent of the electorate were estimated to have voted. In May 2001, the government signed a peace agreement with a breakaway faction of the FRUD, which had continued its armed opposition to the government after the 1996 peace accord.

In December 2000, an attempted coup by a group of police officers was quickly put down by the armed forces.

In legislative elections held in 2003, the first elections since independence where the number of parties allowed to contest an election was not limited, the Union for Presidential Majority (UMP), an alliance of four parties supporting President Guelleh, won all 65 seats in the National Assembly. Presidential elections are scheduled for April 2005.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy depends mainly on the operation of the free port, which accounts for 80 per cent of Djibouti's GDP. Agriculture accounts for less than 4 per cent of GDP, but employs three-quarters of the workforce. Industry accounts for 15 per cent of GDP. The main imports are foodstuffs, machinery, clothing, oil and oil derivatives. The main exports are agricultural produce. Djibouti's primary trading partners are Ethiopia, Somalia, Yemen and France.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£12,995,000	£22,152,000
Exports to UK	96,000	797,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There is 100 km of railway (the Djibouti section of the Addis Ababa–Djibouti railway, controlled by both Djibouti and Ethiopia) and 2,890 km of roads, 364 km of which are surfaced. The Port of Djibouti is important both to trade and to the French and US military who are stationed there. Three of the 13 airports have surfaced runways.

MEDIA

The government owns La Nation, the main newspaper in Djibouti, as well as Radiodiffusion-Television de Djibouti (RTD), the company which operates national radio and television stations. There are a number of privately owned newspapers including Al Qarn, La République, and Le Renouveau. Independent newspapers are generally allowed to circulate freely, but journalists exercise self-censorship.

CULTURE

The people of Djibouti are either Issas, with roots in Somalia, or Afars, with links to Eritrea and Ethiopia. There is French-influenced cuisine as well as traditional North African fare. Djibouti has very close cultural ties with France – something the present government is keen to maintain and further promote. French colonial architecture is mixed with that of modern Arabic culture and Islam.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Dominica, in the Lesser Antilles, lies in the Windward Islands group 95 miles south of Antigua. It is about 46 km long and 25 km wide. Elevation extremes range from 1,447 m (Morne Diablotin) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with average daily temperatures ranging from 25°C to 32°C. The island is prone to hurricanes.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Dominica was discovered by Columbus in 1493, when it was a stronghold of the Caribs, the sole inhabitants of the island until the French introduced settlements in the 18th century. It was captured by the British in 1759 but passed back and forth between France and Britain until 1805, after which British possession was not challenged. From 1871 to 1939 Dominica was part of the Leeward Islands colony, then from 1940 the island was a unit of the Windward Islands group. Internal self government from 1967 was followed on 3 November 1978 by independence as a republic.

The general election of 2000 was won by the Dominica Labour Party (DLP), which gained ten seats in the House of Assembly, with nine seats going to the United Workers' Party (UWP) and two seats to the Dominica Freedom Party (DFP).

Roosevelt Skerrit was appointed Prime Minister in January 2004 after the sudden death of Pierre Charles.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive authority is vested in the President, who is elected by the House of Assembly for not more than two terms of five years. Parliament consists of the President and the House of Assembly (21 representatives elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term) and nine Senators, five of whom are appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister and the other four on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture is the principal occupation, with tropical and citrus fruits being the main crops. Products for export are bananas, fruit juices, lime oil, bay oil, copra and rum. Forestry, fisheries and agro-processing are being encouraged. The only commercially exploitable mineral is pumice, used chiefly for building purposes. Manufacturing consists largely of the processing of agricultural products although there have been attempts to diversify into light industry.

MEDIA

While there is no national television service, a private cable network covers part of the island. There are no daily newspapers but there are weekly publications. Private and public radio stations are in operation throughout the country.

CULTURE

While the island has taken its political structure and love of football and cricket from the British, African, West Indian and French influences have combined to produce an unmistakable Creole culture with food, the local patois, customs and art all reflecting these multiple origins. The island's most famous writer is Jean Rhys (1894–1979), author of Wide Sargasso Sea.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Dominican Republic forms the eastern two-thirds of the island of Hispaniola (the remainder is Haiti). The Republic is crossed from the north-west to the south-east by the Cordillera Central mountain range. Many of the mountains are over 3,000 m. Elevation extremes range from 3,175 m (Pico Duarte) at the highest point to -46 m (Lake Enriquillo) at the lowest. The climate is maritime tropical with average temperatures of between 23°C and 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Santo Domingo was discovered by Columbus in 1492, and was a Spanish colony until 1797, when it passed to France. It was restored to Spanish rule in 1809. Independence was declared in 1821, but in 1822 it was subjugated by the neighbouring Haitians who remained in control until 1844, when the Dominican Republic was proclaimed. The country was occupied by American marines from 1916 until 1924, and ruled by Gen. Rafael Trujillo from 1930 until 1961.

The general election of May 2002 resulted in the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) winning 73 seats in the Chamber of Deputies and 29 seats in the Senate. The most recent presidential election was in May 2004 and was won by Leonel Fernandez of the Dominican Liberation Party with 57.1 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President, who is directly elected for a four-year term, renewable once only, and appoints the Cabinet. Legislative power is exercised by the Congress, which has a term of four years. The Congress comprises the Senate of 30 Senators, one for each province and one for Santo Domingo, and the 120-member Chamber of Deputies.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Tourism is an important part of the economy, with three million foreign visitors to the Dominican Republic in 2000, generating US$2,900 million. Services account for 55 per cent of GDP. Sugar, cocoa, coffee, bananas, rice and tobacco are the main crops. Other products are maize, molasses, beans, tomatoes, cement, ferro-nickel, gold, silver and cattle. Agriculture accounts for 11 per cent of GDP. Light industry producing beer, tinned foodstuffs, glass products, textiles, soap, cigarettes, construction materials, plastic articles, paint, rum, matches and peanut oil accounts for 34 per cent of GDP.

The chief imports are fuel oils, foodstuffs, motor vehicles, pharmaceuticals and machinery components. The chief exports are minerals, sugar and sugar by-products, coffee and cocoa. The USA is the main trading partner with 85 per cent of exports going to the US market.

Remittances from Dominicans living in the United States are estimated to be US$1,500 million a year. Floods in June 2004 caused widespread damage to over 7,000 hectares of cultivated land in the Jimani region.

GNI – US$19,000 million (2001); US$2,230 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 6.5 per cent (2000)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are over 12,600 km of roads, 6,224 km of which are surfaced, and a direct road from Santo Domingo to Port-au-Prince, the capital of Haiti, but that part of it in the border area has fallen into disuse. The frontier has been closed since 1967, except for a section that links the two capitals. The construction of a railway between the port of Haina and Santiago was expected to be completed by mid-2004. There are 30 airports, 13 of which have surfaced runways.

MEDIA

There are several terrestrial commercial broadcasting stations and 30 multi-channel cable TV operators. The government owned channel is Radio Television Dominicana (Canal 4). There are more than 200 commercial radio stations as well as two government stations.

CULTURE

Rafael Trujillo founded the Escuel Nacional de Bellas Artes in 1942, instituting the country's fine painting tradition. Architecture is another important element of Dominican culture, from the well preserved colonial Spanish buildings of Santo Domingo, to the brightly coloured farmhouses of the countryside.

Plena, African-derived work songs, have fused with decima, a ten-line, 17th-century Spanish verse form of song, to create a sophisticated Dominican tradition. The dance most associated with this fusion is the merengue.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Timor is an island about 296 km long and 72 km wide at the eastern end of the Indonesian archipelago. The climate is tropical. The interior is covered in forests and mountains. Elevation extremes range from 2,963 m (Mt Tatamailau) at the highest point to 0 m (Timor Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

East Timor was a Portuguese colony from 1702 until control collapsed following the 1974 coup in Portugal. Local elections were held in early 1975, in which the left-wing, pro-independence Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor (FRETILIN) emerged as the strongest party. Indonesia had supported the Popular Democratic Association of Timor (APODETI), which urged the integration of the territory into Indonesia. Following its failure to gain a substantial proportion of the vote, Indonesia encouraged the pro-autonomy Democratic Union of Timor (UDT) to attempt a coup in August 1975, but this was suppressed by the better equipped and disciplined FRETILIN. The Portuguese administration withdrew without formally handing over power. Indonesia began to infiltrate the border and attack villages in the frontier regions to create the illusion that the civil war was still continuing in order to justify an invasion. FRETILIN proclaimed the Democratic Republic of East Timor on 28 November 1975, which was recognised by Portugal. The following day the leaders of APODETI and UDT, who had fled to Indonesia following the failed coup, were coerced into signing a request for Indonesian assistance to restore order in East Timor. Indonesian forces began to invade East Timor on 7 December 1975 and declared East Timor Indonesia's 27th province on 17 July 1976 following their establishment of a provisional East Timorese government consisting of APODETI ministers, which signed a petition requesting integration with Indonesia. FRETILIN forces resisted strongly, but by 1979 most of East Timor was under Indonesian control. Resistance, atrocities committed by Indonesian troops and famine, left at least 200,000 East Timorese dead, mostly civilians. About 150,000 Muslims were settled in East Timor alongside the predominantly Roman Catholic population (80 per cent in 1975). The UN did not recognise the annexation.

Following the resignation of President Suharto of Indonesia, President B. J. Habibie agreed to a plebiscite which would offer East Timor autonomy within Indonesia. The plebiscite was held on 30 August 1999, and resulted in a turnout of 98.5 per cent of the electorate, with 78.5 per cent voting against autonomy for East Timor within Indonesia – thereby asserting an implied wish for full independence.

With the agreement of the Indonesian government, the UN sent in peacekeeping troops in September 1999 after civilians were forcibly evacuated from their homes and suffered extensive violence and intimidation at the hands of pro-Indonesian militias and Indonesian troops. Indonesian troops began to withdraw and in October, the Indonesian Consultative Assembly unanimously ratified the result of the referendum on the independence of East Timor. By early October, the UN-established International Force for East Timor (INTERFET) had managed to install its forces on the border with West Timor with the aim of preventing cross-border attacks by pro-Indonesia militias. INTERFET also managed to land troops in the East Timorese enclave of Oekusi. The commander of Indonesian forces in West Timor signed an agreement with INTERFET on the repatriation of refugees in November 1999.

The UN Security Council voted unanimously on 25 October 1999 to replace INTERFET with a UN force of up to 8,950 troops and 1,600 police to support the establishment of a UN Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET). In November, the pro-independence activist José Xanana Gusmão visited Jakarta to establish relations with the Indonesian government. The East Timor National Council (ETNC), which was established to make policy recommendations to UNTAET, held its first meeting in December.

Two reports, published in January 2000, concluded that the Indonesian authorities had co-operated with the pro-Indonesian militias in wide-ranging human rights abuses and called for the establishment of an international war crimes tribunal. UN prosecutors began issuing indictments in December 2000.

Indonesia's President Wahid signed a memorandum of understanding with UNTAET in February, to allow the resumption of cross-border trade and transport between East Timor and Indonesia.

José Xanana Gusmão resigned as President of the ETNC on 28 March 2001 and was replaced by Manuel Carrascalão.

East Timor's first presidential elections were held on 14 April 2002 and were won by José Xanana Gusmão with 82.7 per cent of the vote.

Independence was achieved on 20 May 2002 and UNTAET was succeeded by the UN Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET). On 27 September 2002, East Timor became a member of the UN.

In November 2002 former pro-Jakarta militia leader Eurico Guterres received a UN indictment for crimes against humanity for his role in the 1999 massacre and a further seven senior Indonesian military officers were indicted in February 2003. Indonesia's former military chief in East Timor, Brigadier-General Noer Muis, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in March 2003 for crimes against humanity.

Serious civil unrest including the looting and burning of shops, offices and the prime minister's home in late 2002 and early 2003, led to the UN Security Council's approval of the strengthening of the 651-member police component of UNMISSET in April 2003. UNMISSET's mandate has since been extended to May 2005.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

An 88-member (one from each of the 13 districts elected by a first-past-the-post system and 75 nationally elected by proportional representation) Constituent Assembly was voted in on 30 August 2001 and inaugurated in September. Members are elected for a five-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

East Timor's economy has suffered as a result of the Indonesian withdrawal. One in three households live below the poverty line (on an average of less than US$0.55 a day).

The main commercially grown crops include timber, coffee, coconuts, cloves and cocoa. There are oil and gas reserves beneath the sea to the south of the island (Timor Sea oil) and under a deal with Australia negotiated by the UN administration, East Timor is set to receive its largest ever proportion of revenue in 2007–8 when gas will be shipped to Japan.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£1,586,000	£1,880,000
Exports to UK	532,000	563,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are no railways, waterways, ports or harbours. There is one major road, which links the main townships along the northern coast to the east of Dili. There are 3,800 km of roads in total, 428 km of which are surfaced. There are eight airports, three of which are surfaced, and one heliport.

MEDIA

East Timor's national public radio and television services began broadcasting in May 2002 but television broadcasts do not extend far beyond Dili.

CULTURE

Dili is distinctly Portuguese in character with a garrison built in 1627 and colonial villas scattered along the beachfronts. The predominately Catholic nature of the country is evident in the number of churches in the capital and rural areas.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Ecuador is an equatorial state in the north-west of South America. It has five different climatic zones and is one of the most bio-diverse nations on earth. It extends across the Western Andes, some of the highest peaks being Cotopaxi (5,896 m) and Cayambe (5,790 m) in the Eastern Cordillera. Ecuador is located in an earthquake zone and has two active volcanoes (Pichincha, only 12 km away from the capital, and Tungurahua). The average annual temperature in Quito is 15°C. Elevation extremes range from 6,310 m (Chimborazo) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The former kingdom of Quito was conquered by the Incas of Peru in the 15th century. In 1534 Francisco Pizarro's (1475–1541) conquests led to the inclusion of the present territory of Ecuador in the Spanish viceroyalty of Quito. Independence was achieved in a revolutionary war that culminated in the battle of Mount Pichincha (1822).

After seven years of military rule, Ecuador returned to democracy in 1979. In the 1996 elections the ruling Social Christian Party (PSC) won a majority of seats but was replaced as the largest party in the National Congress by the Popular Democracy Party (DP) in the 1998 elections. Abdala Bucaram was elected President in July 1996, and appointed a coalition government. Bucaram was ousted by the legislature on the grounds of insanity and replaced firstly by Vice-President Arteaga and then by the Speaker of the National Congress, Fabián Alarcón.

A series of strikes and protests caused disruption throughout July 1999 and led to mass demonstrations calling for the removal of the President. Proposed tax increases led to another wave of protest in November, which again called for the removal of the President. On 18 January 2000, Quito and most provincial capitals were occupied by thousands of Indians. President Mahaud was deposed in a coup by a military junta on 21 January 2000, which was dissolved by the military just five hours after taking office and Vice-President Noboa was elevated to the presidency.

A tax reform bill to reduce the budget deficit, which would have increased value added tax and fuel costs, provoked widespread demonstrations and strikes by an alliance of indigenous farmers, public sector workers and students in January 2001. The government and the protestors reached a compromise agreement in February, but on 8 May the National Congress refused to pass the bill. Further protests took place in February 2002 with the indigenous people's demand that more of the country's oil revenue be invested in their communities.

In legislative elections held in October 2002 the Social Christian Party (PSC) became the largest party in the National Congress, with 24 seats. Col. Lucio Gutiérrez, the joint candidate of the Popular Socialist Party (SPS) and the New Country – Pachakutik United Movement (MUPP) was elected President in the second round of voting held in November. Col. Gutiérrez took office in January 2003 and appointed a new Cabinet. The SPS alliance with the MUPP was formally dissolved in January 2004.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

The border with Peru was demarcated by a 1942 treaty that was partly revoked by Ecuador in 1960 in relation to a disputed 80 km stretch. An inconclusive four-week border war was fought with Peru in February 1995 until a cease-fire was signed on 1 March 1995. An 86 km demilitarised zone was agreed in July 1995. An agreement was signed on 26 October 1998 by the Presidents of the two countries formally ending the territorial dispute after mediation by Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the USA.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1998 constitution provides for an elected President and Vice-President who serve for a single four-year term. There is a unicameral National Congress which meets for two months a year and has 100 members, elected on a national basis for four-year terms. Voting is compulsory for all literate citizens and voluntary for all illiterate citizens over the age of 18. The republic is divided into 22 provinces.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture is the most important sector of the economy. The main products for export are fish (shrimp), bananas, which provide a third of agricultural exports, cocoa and coffee. Other important crops are sugar, soya, rice, cotton, African palm, vegetables, fruit and timber. The main imports are manufactured goods and machinery.

The economy was transformed by the discovery in 1972 of major oil fields in the Oriente area, and oil is now a principal export, accounting for approximately 50 per cent of public sector revenue and export earnings.

The US dollar was adopted in 1999 in order to stabilise the economy and lower inflation.

GNI – US$14,000 million (2001); US$1,080 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.3 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 96.1 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 11.5 per cent (1998)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$13,281 million (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$2,808 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$6,431 million (2002)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 43,197 km of permanent roads, 8,164 of which are surfaced. There are 966 km of railways. Ten commercial airlines operate international flights and there are internal services between all major towns.

EDUCATION

Elementary education is free of charge and compulsory. There are ten universities (three at Quito, three at Guayaquil, and one each at Cuenca, Machala, Loja and Portoviejo), polytechnic schools at Quito and Guayaquil and eight technical colleges in other provincial capitals.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 6.9 per cent; (f) 10.5 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 20.0 per cent (1990)

MEDIA

Ecuadorian newspapers include El Mercurio, El Universo and Dairio Hoy. There are four commercial television stations including Ecuavision, Teleamazon, ETV Telerama and TC Television. Radio Nacional del Ecuador is the government owned radio station.

CULTURE

Quito has been a World Heritage Site since 1978 and the old town's colonial and traditional architecture and ancient churches have been preserved. South America's most famous market, which pre-dates Inca times, can be found in the small town of Otavalo. Ecuador's most celebrated author is Jorge Icaza Coronel (1906–78).

GALÁPAGOS ISLANDS

The Galápagos (Giant Tortoise) Islands, forming the province of the Archipelago de Colón, were annexed by Ecuador in 1832. The archipelago lies in the Pacific, about 800 km from the mainland. There are 12 large and several hundred smaller islands with a total area of about 7,769 sq. km and an estimated population of 18,640. The capital is Puerto Barquerizo Moreno, on San Cristóbal Island. Although the archipelago lies on the equator, the temperature of the surrounding water is well below equatorial average owing to the Humboldt current. The province consists for the most part of National Park territory, where unique marine birds, iguanas, and the giant tortoises are conserved. There is some local subsistence farming; the main industry, apart from tourism, is tuna and lobster fishing.

EGYPT

Al-Jumhūriyya al-Miṣriyya al-'Arabiyya – Arab Republic of Egypt

AREA – 995,500 sq. km. Neighbours: Sudan (south), Libya (west), Gaza Strip and Israel (east)

POPULATION – 69,080,000 (2001). The largest, or 'Egyptian' element, is a Hamito-Semitic race. A second element is the Bedouin, or nomadic Arabs of the Western and Eastern deserts, who are now mainly semi-sedentary tent-dwellers. The third element is the Nubian of the Nile Valley of mixed Arab and Negro blood. Over 90 per cent of the population are Muslims of the Sunni denomination, and most of the rest are Coptic Christians. Arabic is the official language

CAPITAL – Cairo (population, 7,200,000, 1998 estimate) stands on the Nile about 14 miles from the head of the delta

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The country is mainly flat but there are mountainous areas in the south-west, along the Red Sea coast and in the south of the Sinai peninsula. Elevation extremes range from 2,629 m (Mount Catherine) at the highest point to –133 m (Qattara Depression) at the lowest. Most of the land is desert and the Nile valley and delta were the only fertile areas until the opening of the Aswan Dam allowed areas of desert to be reclaimed. West of the Nile Valley is the Western Desert, containing some depressions whose springs irrigate oases. The Eastern Desert between the Nile and the mountains along the Red Sea coast is mostly plateaux dissected by wadis (dry watercourses). The average daily temperature ranges from 18°C to 30°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The unification of the kingdoms of Lower and Upper Egypt under the Pharaohs c.3100 BC marked the establishment of the Egyptian state, with Memphis as its capital. Egypt was ruled for nearly 2,800 years by a succession of 31 Pharaonic dynasties which built the pyramids at Gizeh. A period of Hellenic rule began in 332 BC, followed by a period of rule by Rome (30 BC to AD 324) and then by the Byzantine Empire. In AD 640 Egypt was subjugated by Arab Muslim invaders. In 1517 the country was incorporated into the Ottoman Empire, under which it remained until the early 19th century. A British Protectorate over Egypt lasted from 1914 to 1922, when Sultan Ahmed Fuad was proclaimed King of Egypt. In 1953 the monarchy was deposed and Egypt became a republic.

In 1956 President Nasser seized the assets of the Suez Canal Company. Egyptian occupation of the Canal Zone was used as a pretext for military action by Britain and France in support of their Suez Canal Company interests. A cease-fire and Anglo-French withdrawal were negotiated by the UN.

The Israeli invasion of 1956 overran the Sinai peninsula but six months later Israel withdrew. However, mounting tension culminated in a second invasion of Sinai (the Six Day War in June 1967) and occupation of the peninsula by Israel. Sinai was returned to Egypt in 1982 under the treaty of 1979 which resulted from the Camp David talks and formally terminated a 31-year-old state of war between the two countries.

President Mubarak was nominated by the legislature to run unopposed for a fourth six-year term in June 1999, and was endorsed by a national referendum held in September.

A general election was held in three rounds between October and November 2000. The ruling National Democratic Party (NDP) won 388 of the 444 elective seats, which included some 210 independent candidates who joined the party immediately after the election.

INSURGENCY

Militant Islamist fundamentalists re-emerged in 1992, carrying out attacks on tourists, Coptic Christians, government ministers, civil servants and the security forces. On 27 March 1999, the largest fundamentalist organisation, Gamaat-i-Islamiya, announced that it had given up its violent campaign to overthrow the government. In November 2002, 43 members of the fundamentalist Islamic group Islamic Jihad were arrested for allegedly planning to carry out terrorist attacks against government officials and a foreign establishment.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution of 1971 provides for an Executive President who appoints the Council of Ministers and determines government policy. The President is elected by the legislature every six years. The legislature is the People's Assembly which has 454 members, 444 of whom are elected for a five-year term, the remaining ten nominated by the President. The Majlis al-Shura Council or Advisory Council (264 members, 176 of whom are elected, the remainder are Presidential appointees) has an advisory role. A state of emergency, which was first introduced following the assassination of President Sadat in 1981, remains in force.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Despite increasing industrialisation, agriculture remains the most important economic activity, employing 29 per cent of the labour force and producing 17 per cent of GDP in 2002–3. Egypt is still a net importer of foodstuffs, especially grain, and a food security programme has been set up with the aim of achieving self-sufficiency. The main cash crop is cotton, of which Egypt is one of the world's main producers. Other important crops are maize, rice, sugar cane, wheat and potatoes. Other fruits and vegetables are also grown.

With its considerable reserves of petroleum and natural gas, and the hydroelectric power produced by the Aswan and High Dams, Egypt is self-sufficient in energy. In 2003 5.6 million foreign tourists visited Egypt.

The government transferred control over exchange rates to the central bank in January 2001. In January 2003 the government allowed the Egyptian pound to free-float against the US dollar in an attempt to pre-empt the detrimental effect the imminent war with Iraq would be likely to have upon the economy.

The main imports are wheat, maize, chemicals and motor vehicles and parts. The main exports are crude petroleum, cotton, cotton yarn, oranges, rice and cotton textiles.

COMMUNICATIONS

Egypt has 5,105 km of railways and 64,000 km of roads, 49,984 km of which are surfaced. There are international airports at Cairo and Luxor. Road and rail networks link the Nile Valley and delta with the main development areas east and west of the river. Egypt has 3,500 km of waterways, of which half are canals. The Suez Canal was re-opened in 1975 and a two-stage development project begun to widen and deepen the canal to allow the passage of larger shipping and to permit two-way traffic. Port Said and Suez have been reconstructed and the port of Alexandria is being improved.

MEDIA

Egyptian media takes a central role in the Arab world and its newspapers are some of the most widely read and influential in the region. There are two state run national television channels and six regional channels. Egypt has an important satellite television industry (Egypt was the first Arab country to have its own satellite, Nilesat 101) that is watched all over the Arab-speaking world. In 2001 Dream 1, Dream 2 and Al-Mihwar TV, the country's first private television stations, came on air. The state has a monopoly on all radio broadcasting. The government has actively encouraged foreign media to base itself in Egypt by setting up a Free Media Zone in 2000 that offers economic incentives and access to its media infrastructure.

CULTURE

Egypt lies at the heart of the Arab world even though it is located on the African continent. It is most famous for the Pyramids of Giza and the art and architecture of its ancient civilisations (beginning in the fourth millennium BC and waning around 341 BC) but the modern-day Egyptian state is also of great cultural, political and economic importance to the region.

The Egyptian author Naguib Mahfouz (b. 1911) won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1988.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

El Salvador extends along the Pacific coast of Central America for 307 km. The country is very mountainous (much of the interior has an average altitude of 600 m) and many of its peaks are extinct volcanoes. There are also numerous volcanic lakes. Elevation extremes range from 2,730 m (Cerro El Pital) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. Average temperatures vary with altitude but coastal areas tend to be much hotter. The average annual temperature in San Salvador is 23°C. Earthquakes are common.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

El Salvador was conquered in 1524 by Pedro de Alvarado, and formed part of the Spanish viceroyalty of Guatemala until 1821. It is divided into 14 Departments.

Decades of military rule ended in October 1979; a Legislative Assembly was elected in 1982. Subsequent presidential and parliamentary elections were boycotted by the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front (FMLN) guerrilla movement. Conflict between the guerrillas and the government continued throughout the 1980s in a bitter civil war until negotiations culminated in a peace plan signed in January 1992. In December 1992 the FMLN disarmed and became a political party.

In legislative elections held in March 2003 the FMLN remained the largest party in the Legislative Assembly winning 31 of the 84 seats; the National Republican Alliance (ARENA) won 27 seats and the National Conciliation Party (PCN) won 16 seats. In March 2004 Elias Antonio Saca of the ARENA party won the presidential elections with 57 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 84 members of the Legislative Assembly serve for a three-year term. The President is elected by universal suffrage and serves a five-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The principal agricultural products are coffee, cotton, sugar cane, maize, shrimps and balsam. In the lower altitudes towards the east, sisal is produced and used in the manufacture of coffee and cereal bags.

The US dollar was adopted on 1 January 2001; the colón remained in use for a transitional period, but has been gradually phased out.

Chief exports are coffee, cotton, sugar, shrimps, sisal, balsam, meat, cotton, hides and skins. The chief imports are chemicals, petroleum, manufactured goods, industrial and electronic machinery, pharmaceutical goods, vehicles and consumer goods. The USA is El Salvador's main trading partner.

GNI – US$13,000 million (2001); US$2,040 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The principal ports are Cutuco, La Unión and Acajutla but ports in Honduras and Guatemala are also used. There are 10,029 km of roads of which 1,986 km are surfaced; there are 283 km of railways. The Pan-American Highway from the Guatemalan frontier passes through San Salvador and Santa Ana, and continues to the Honduran frontier. Comalapa international airport has daily flights to other Central American capitals, Mexico and the USA.

EDUCATION

Primary education is run by the state and is free of charge and compulsory. Children are supposed to attend five years of primary school, but a large number do not. It is estimated that up to 40 per cent of primary-age children enrol but do not finish primary education. There are 2,400 primary schools and 240 secondary schools. There are 23 vocational and technical schools and three universities.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

There are two provinces: Bioko Island (40 km off the coast of Cameroon) and the mainland, where 80 per cent of the population live. Equatorial Guinea is covered in dense vegetation and is mountainous inland. The climate is tropical with a rainy season from July to January on Bioko and from April to May and October to December on the mainland. Elevation extremes range from 3,008 m (Pico Basile) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Formerly colonies of Spain, the territories now forming Equatorial Guinea were constituted as two provinces of Metropolitan Spain in 1959 and became autonomous in 1963 and fully independent in 1968. Francisco Macías Nguema won the first multi-party elections. In 1970 President Nguema merged all the political parties into one, the Partido Unico Nacional de los Trabajadores (PUNT). In 1972 he declared himself President for Life.

In August 1979 President Nguema was deposed, tried and executed by a revolutionary military council headed by Col. Obiang Nguema (the former president's nephew). Constitutional amendments in 1982 provided for legislative elections, which were held in 1983 and 1988, but all candidates were chosen by the new president.

A multiparty political system under a new constitution was approved by a referendum in 1991 and ten opposition parties have been legalised, operating alongside the ruling Equatorial Guinea Democratic Party (PDGE). A National Pact was agreed and signed in March 1993 but legislative elections in November, which were won by the PDGE, were boycotted by most of the electorate and opposition parties. In the February 1996 election, the president claimed to have won more than 99 per cent of the vote. Most opposition parties boycotted the ballot. In June 1997 the Progress Party (PPGE), the largest opposition party, was banned by the government, and in February 1998 opposition party coalitions were deemed illegal. The PDGE won 75 of the 80 seats in the National Assembly elections of 1999 amid allegations of electoral malpractice.

Prime Minister Angel Serafin Seriche Dougan resigned in February 2001 due to his growing unpopularity. He was replaced by Cándido Muatetema Rivas. Incumbent President Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo won the presidential elections of 15 December 2002. Opposition candidates withdrew after voting commenced due to alleged irregularities. In March 2004 another alleged coup was suppressed and 15 people arrested in Malabo and 70 in Harare, Zimbabwe. Municipal and legislative elections were held in April 2004. The PDGE took 98 out of 100 seats in parliament and 237 out of 244 councillor seats.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

During the 1980s the chief products were cocoa, coffee and wood. Production has declined and except for cocoa there is now little commercial agriculture. The discovery of large oil and gas deposits off Bioko in the 1990s has led to an economic boom. A growth rate of 65 per cent was achieved in 2001, making Equatorial Guinea the fastest growing economy in Africa. Over 90 per cent of exports come from the oil industry. However, the economy is still heavily dependent on outside aid, principally from Spain and the IMF. Oil reserves are expected to run out in the next ten years. Equatorial Guinea entered the 'franc zone' in 1985.

MEDIA

Television and radio broadcasts are state controlled and the government owns Equatorial Guinea's only television station, Television Nacional, and radio station, Radio Nacional de Guinea Ecuatorial. There is a second radio station, Radio Asonga, which is owned by the President's son. The main newspaper, Ebano, is state owned. A few privately owned publications appear sporadically.

CULTURE

Equatorial Guinea has retained its strong traditional religions, dance forms and music. The Fang people are dominant on the mainland and their spiritual leaders remain central to the community.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The climate changes with the country's varying altitudes (from 16°C in the mountains of the central highlands to 30°C on the coastal desert plain). Elevation extremes range from 3,018 m (Soira) at the highest point to -75 m (Denakil Depression) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Eritrea was colonised by Italy in the late 19th century and was the base for the 1936 Italian invasion of Abyssinia (now Ethiopia). After the Italian defeat in East Africa in 1941 by British and Commonwealth forces, Eritrea became a British protectorate. This lasted until 15 September 1952 when Eritrea was federated with Ethiopia. The Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie incorporated Eritrea as a province of Ethiopia in 1962. An armed campaign for independence began in 1961, first against Emperor Haile Selassie's forces and from 1974 against the communist Mengistu regime.

In 1991 the Mengistu government was overthrown by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) and the People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ). The new PFDJ-led government in Ethiopia agreed to an Eritrean referendum on independence which was held in April 1993 and recorded a 99.89 per cent vote in favour. Independence was declared on 24 May 1993.

In February 2002, the European Parliament adopted a resolution that expressed concern at increasing authoritarian tendencies in the country. Legislative elections scheduled for December 2001 did not take place, and no new date has been announced.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Eritrea had claimed the Hanish and Mohabaka Islands in the Red Sea, which it seized from Yemen in December 1995; however, in October 1998, the International Court of Justice ruled that the Hanish Islands belonged to Yemen and Eritrea formally handed them back on 1 November 1998. The land border with Djibouti is also disputed.

In May 1998 sporadic fighting with Ethiopia flared up, with both countries accusing the other of sending troops across the border. Proposals for a resolution of the conflict drawn up by the Organisation for African Unity (OAU) which called on Eritrea to hand back the disputed town of Badme pending adjudication, were rejected. Full scale fighting broke out in February 1999 and Ethiopia had captured the town by 28 February. Eritrea accepted the OAU's proposals in March, but fighting continued. A further proposal to end the fighting was brokered by the OAU in July 1999, which envisaged a return to the original borders and was provisionally accepted by both sides, but Ethiopia later rejected some of the provisions. Fighting resumed in February 2000 and in May, Ethiopia launched a full-scale invasion, which ended in early June after Ethiopian forces had captured much of Eritrea's western lowlands. An interim peace plan was signed by both countries on 18 June.

UN observers began to deploy on 15 September 2000. Direct talks between Eritrea and Ethiopia opened in October and in December a comprehensive peace agreement was signed in Algeria; UN peacekeeping troops moved into the buffer zone in April 2001 and on 21 May Eritrea and Ethiopia agreed to set up regional military commissions to solve local security issues. In April 2002 the independent Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission (EEBC), set up to establish a legal international border, defined the border between the two countries but its ruling failed to indicate clearly whether the town of Badme was Eritrean or Ethiopian. On 28 March 2003 the EEBC announced that Badme was on the Eritrean side of the border. On 4 April the Ethiopian government declared its opposition to the boundary ruling and relations between the two countries remain strained. The UN continues to patrol the boundary area.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1997 constitution, the head of state is the President, elected for a five-year term by the National Assembly, of which he is chair. The 150-member unicameral legislature (the Hagerawi Baito) is directly elected for four years. The President is head of Government and presides over a State Council.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The government hopes to base the rebuilding of the economy on the return of well-educated exiles, international aid and investment, the development of tourism along the coast, and the diversification of the economy away from subsistence agriculture which involves around 80 per cent of the population.

Mineral reserves include zinc, potash, gold, platinum, and oil, but they are not fully exploited. Industries include cement, construction, salt, paper, leather goods, textiles, clothing and chemicals. Exports are skins, meat, live animals and gum arabic. The major imports are food, machinery, transportation equipment and manufactured goods.

Eritrea's largest source of foreign exchange is remittances from overseas Eritreans, estimated to be around US$250 million annually.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Since 1991 the government has attempted to rebuild a transport infrastructure that was devastated by the war of independence. The rebuilding programme has focused on the ports of Massawa and Assab, the roads from the ports to Ethiopia, and the railway from Massawa to Sudan via Asmara. There are 306 km of railways and 4,010 km of roads of which 874 km are surfaced.

MEDIA

All privately owned news media organisations were closed down by the government in 2001. Eri TV is the state run television station. There are no private networks or radio stations.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Estonia is a mostly flat country. Elevation extremes range from 318 m (a hill, Suur Munamagi) at the highest point to 0 m (Baltic Sea) at the lowest. The climate is mild with average temperatures ranging from  $-6^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $17^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Estonia, a former province of the Russian Empire, declared its independence on 24 February 1918. A war of independence was fought against the German army until November 1918, and then against Soviet forces until the peace treaty of Tartu was signed in 1920. By this treaty the Soviet Union recognised Estonia's independence.

The Soviet Union annexed Estonia in 1940 under the terms of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact with Germany (1939). Estonia was occupied when Germany invaded the Soviet Union during the Second World War. In 1944 the Soviet Union recaptured the country from Germany and confirmed its annexation.

The Estonian Supreme Soviet in November 1989 declared the republic to be sovereign and its 1940 annexation by the Soviet Union to be illegal. In February 1990 the leading role of the Communist Party was abolished, and following multiparty elections in March 1990 a period of transition to independence was inaugurated. Independence was declared on 20 August 1991.

Presidential elections held in August and September 2001 were won by Arnold Rüütel. In legislative elections held in March 2003 the left-wing Centrist Party (KP) and the right-wing Union for the Republic-Res Publica (RP) each won 28 seats in the parliament. Juhan Parts of the RP was then invited to form a government and a centre-right coalition cabinet comprising the RP, the Reform Party (RE) and the Estonian People's Union (RL), he took office on 10 April.

Estonia joined NATO in April 2004 and the EU in May 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Legislative power is exercised by the unicameral Riigikogu of 101 members elected by proportional representation every four years. The President is elected for a five-year term by the Riigikogu by a two-thirds majority or, if no candidate receives this majority after three rounds of voting, by an electoral assembly composed of Riigikogu members and local government officials. Executive authority is vested in a Prime Minister who is nominated by the President and who forms a Government. Members of the Government need not be members of the Riigikogu.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Since 1992 the government has introduced free-market reforms, privatisation and restructuring. Estonia is still dependent on Russian natural gas supplies.

Eleven per cent of the workforce is engaged in agriculture, which accounts for six per cent of GDP, the main products being rye, oats, barley, flax, potatoes, meat, milk, butter and eggs. Industry accounts for 20 per cent of employment and 28.6 per cent of GDP, concentrating on textiles, clothing and footwear, forestry, wood and paper products, and food and fish processing. Some heavy industry exists, mostly in the manufacture of chemicals and power equipment.

Estonia's main trading partners are Finland, Sweden, Germany, Japan and Latvia. The main imports are machinery and equipment, chemicals, clothing and footwear, foodstuffs and vehicles. Exports consist mainly of machinery and equipment, timber and wood products, textiles and clothing, foodstuffs, metals and furniture.

GNI – US$5,300 million (2001); US$3,870 per capita (2001)

EDUCATION

Estonia has a three-tier education system, consisting of primary level (four years), secondary level (six years) and university level (four to six years). Primary and secondary level education is compulsory from the age of seven to 17. There are ten universities: six public and four private. The country's most famous university is Tartu, founded in 1632.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 94 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 42 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Freedom of the press is guaranteed in the constitution, and the state monopoly on television and radio ended soon after independence. All newspapers have been privatised and broadcasting channels are in the process of being privatised (only one state owned channel remains). Russian-language news and programmes are provided on Estonian Television.

CULTURE

The old town area of Tallinn is home to the country's parliament and national cathedral and is a UNESCO world heritage site.

Estonia's cultural heritage is rich in traditional folk songs and poetry both of which have influenced much contemporary writing, art and music. Estonia is particularly distinguished in the field of classical music and has produced many world-famous conductors, such as Neeme Järvi (b. 1937) and Tõnu Kaljuste (b. 1953), and composers Arvo Pärt (b. 1935), Veljo Tormis (b. 1930) and Erkki-Sven Tüür (b. 1959).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Ethiopia is a landlocked country dominated by a central plateau that has an average height of 2,400 m. This plateau is divided by the Great Rift Valley. Elevation extremes range from 4,620 m (Ras Dejen) at the highest point to –125 m (Denakil Depression) at the lowest. There is a tropical monsoon climate that varies according to altitude. The wet season is April to September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Hamitic culture was heavily influenced by Semitic immigration from Arabia at about the time of Christ and Christianity was introduced in the fourth century. The empire attained its zenith in the sixth century under the Axum rulers but was checked by Islamic expansion from the east. Modern Ethiopia dates from 1855 when Theodros established supremacy over the various tribes. The last emperor was Haile Selassie who reigned from 1930 until 1974, when he was deposed by the armed forces. After ten years of military rule, a Workers' Party based on the Soviet model was formed with Lt.-Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam as general secretary. The People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was established under a new constitution in 1987 with Lt.-Col. Mengistu as president. Armed insurgencies by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) and the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), originating in Tigre, brought down Mengistu's government in May 1991.

A transitional administration comprising the EPRDF and other opposition groups formed a Council of Representatives which governed until 1995 under President Meles Zenawi. In 1994, the Council agreed on a draft federal constitution, which was adopted by an elected constituent assembly on 8 December 1994. Multiparty elections in May and June 1995 were won by the EPRDF. The Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was proclaimed on 22 August 1995.

In the general election held in 2000, the EPRDF won 472 seats. The presidential elections of 2001 were won by Lt. Girma Wolde Giorgis.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Eritrea, which since 1962 had been a province of Ethiopia, seceded and became independent on 24 May 1993. Relations between the two countries had been good until fighting broke out in June 1998 with each side accusing the other of sending troops across the border. Ethiopia launched an attack on Eritrea in May 2000, capturing much of the west of the country. An interim peace plan was signed in June, and a comprehensive peace agreement was signed in December. A new common border was proposed to both countries in April 2002; however both sides lay claim to the town of Badme although an independent boundary commission in April 2003 ruled that it lay in Eritrea. On 4 April 2003 the Ethiopian government declared its opposition to the boundary ruling and relations between the two countries remain strained. The UN continues to patrol the boundary area.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution provides for a federal government responsible for foreign affairs, defence and economic policy. The President is elected by both houses of the legislature for a six-year term. The House of People's Representatives (Yehizb Tewokayoch Mekir Bet) has 548 directly elected members who serve a five-year term. The House of Federation (Yefedereshn Mekir Bet) has 108 members, indirectly elected for a five-year term by regional administrations, who have considerable autonomy and the right to secede. The next legislative elections should be held before May 2005.

The Army has 270 main battle tanks and 400 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and armoured personnel carriers. The Air Force has 50 combat aircraft and 25 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 8.0 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 162,500: Army 160,000, Air Force 2,500

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The post-Mengistu government implemented a programme of free-market economic reform that reduced government spending and inflation.

Agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing accounts for approximately 50 per cent of GDP and around 85 per cent of the people are dependent upon the land for a living. The major food crops are teff, maize, barley, sorghum, wheat, pulses and oil seeds. Recurring droughts led to famine conditions in 1984–5, 1992, 1997, 2000 and 2002. The economy deteriorated sharply in 1999 and 2000 as a result of drought, a worsening balance of trade, and war with Eritrea. Ethiopia's largely unexploited, natural resources include gold, platinum, copper and potash. Traces of oil and natural gas have been found.

The chief imports by value are machinery and transport equipment, manufactured goods and chemicals; the principal exports by value are coffee (which normally provides about 60 per cent of Ethiopia's foreign exchange earnings), oil seeds, hides and skins, and pulses. The country's main markets for exports are the UK, Djibouti, Germany, Italy, Japan, Saudi Arabia and the USA.

GNI – US$6,700 million (2001); US$710 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 0.5 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 5.9 per cent (1999)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$5,481 million (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – $149 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$1,317 million (1999)

EXPORTS – US$561 million (1999)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$645 million deficit (2000)

Current Account – US$16 million surplus (2000)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£40,794,000	£44,743,000
Exports to UK	70,405,000	15,375,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

A network of roads in rural areas links the major cities with each other, with the Sudanese and Kenyan borders and through Eritrea to the Red Sea coast. There are 31,571 km of roads, 3,789 km of which are surfaced.

There is a railway link from Addis Ababa to Djibouti (the Ethiopian section is 681 km in length). Ethiopian Airlines maintains regular services throughout Africa and to Europe.

EDUCATION

Elementary and secondary education are provided by government schools in the main centres of population; there are also mission schools. The National University (founded 1961) co-ordinates the institutions of higher education. There are also universities at Alemaya (agricultural), Debub, Mekele, Bashir Dar and Jimma.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 56.4 per cent; (f) 66.8 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 43 per cent (1997); tertiary 1 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

There are over 50 privately owned newspapers in addition to the state owned daily Addis Zemen. There is only one television station, the state owned Ethiopian Television (ETV). Radio Ethiopia is state owned but several private stations were given licences at the end of 2004.

CULTURE

Ethiopia is Africa's oldest independent country (for over 2,000 years) and (apart from five years of occupation by Italy) was never colonised. Addis Ababa is home to the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa and the National Museum which holds the remains of 'Lucy', an Australopithecus afarensis skeleton found in Ethiopia in 1974. The city's market is the largest in Africa.

FIJI

Matanitu ko Viti – Republic of the Fiji Islands

AREA – 18,274 sq. km

POPULATION – 844,330 (2001 estimate), 44 per cent Indians, 51 per cent Fijians, and 5 per cent other races. Since the 1987 coup many ethnic Indians have left and by 1994 Melanesian Fijians formed the largest population group. The main languages are Fijian and Hindi

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Fiji is composed of roughly 332 islands (about 100 permanently inhabited) and over 500 islets in the South Pacific, about 1,760 km north of New Zealand. The group extends 480 km from east to west and 480 km north to south. The International Date Line has been diverted to the east of the island group. The largest islands are Viti Levu and Vanua Levu. Elevation extremes range from 1,324 m (Tomaniivi) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. Fiji has a tropical oceanic climate with high humidity and an average annual temperature of 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Fiji was a British colony from 1874 until 10 October 1970 when it became an independent state and a member of the Commonwealth. In 1987, following a general election won by an Indian-dominated coalition, Lt.-Col.

Sitiveni Rabuka led two military coups and declared Fiji a republic. Rabuka was appointed prime minister in 1992 after the introduction of a new constitution in 1990. The new constitution guaranteed indigenous Fijians the most senior positions in government, however, the constitution was revised in 1997 (implemented 1998) to include greater racial integration and equality in government.

In the general election of May 1999, the Fijian Political Party was swept from power by a coalition of parties led by the Fiji Labour Party (FLP). Its leader, Mahendra Chaudhry, became Fiji's first ethnic Indian prime minister.

In May 2000 a group of indigenous Fijian rebels stormed parliament and took the prime minister and most of the cabinet hostage. The army revoked the constitutional revisions of 1997 and declared martial law on 29 May following the resignation of President Ratu Sir Kamiseva Mara. An interim administration was set up in June following unsuccessful negotiations between the military government and the rebels. The military named an all-indigenous government to replace the multiracial coalition of the deposed premier. The interim government was to rule for two years and prepare for fresh elections. Following the release of the last hostages in July, the Great Council of Chiefs announced the appointment of Ratu Josefa Iloilo as president.

The Fijian High Court ruled on 15 November 2000 that the 1997 constitution remained in force. Following an appeal by the interim government, the Court of Appeal ruled on 1 March 2001 that the 1997 constitution was still in force, that the parliament had been suspended rather than dissolved, and that the interim government was not legitimate, but accepted that the then Vice-President Iloilo had the right to exercise presidential powers after the resignation of President Ratu Sir Kamiseva Mara. On 7 March the interim government led by Laisenia Qarase offered its collective resignation and Mahendra Chaudhry was reappointed as prime minister. On 8th March the Great Council of Chiefs rejected the judgement of the Court of Appeal and reaffirmed its support for the interim government and again nominated Iloilo as president. Mahendra Chaudhry was dismissed by President Iloilo on 14 March. Qarase was reappointed as interim prime minister the following day.

Fiji's membership of the Commonwealth was suspended following the coup but the suspension was revoked in December 2001.

Following legislative elections held in August and September 2001, the United Fiji Party (SDL) became the largest party in the house of representatives with 31 seats. The FLP won 27 seats.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture accounts for 18 per cent of GDP and employed approximately 70 per cent of the workforce in 2001. The principal cash crop is sugar cane, which is the main export, followed by coconuts, ginger, fish, lumber, molasses and copra. A variety of other fruit, vegetables and root crops are also grown, and self-sufficiency in rice is a major aim. Forestry, fishing and beef production are being encouraged in order to diversify the economy. The processing of agricultural, marine and timber products are the main manufacturing industries, along with gold mining and textiles.

The chief imports are foodstuffs, machinery, mineral fuels, chemicals, beverages, tobacco and manufactured articles. Tourism is a major source of foreign exchange with over 300,000 annually visitors.

A cyclone hit Fiji's northern island of Vanua Levu in January 2003. The total estimated cost of the damage was F$60 million.

GNI – US$1,480 million (2000); US$2,150 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Fiji is one of the main aerial crossroads in the Pacific, providing services to New Zealand, Australia, Tonga, Samoa, Vanuatu, the Solomon Islands, Kiribati, Tuvalu, New Caledonia and American Samoa. Fiji has three ports of entry, at Suva, Lautoka and Levuka. There are 3,440 km of roads, 1,692 km of which are surfaced. There are 597 km of railways.

MEDIA

Fiji's privately owned press is published in English, Fijian and Hindi. Government owned newspapers are also multi-lingual. Radio (both public and private) is the most important source of news, particularly on the more remote islands. There are two main television networks: Fiji 1, a national channel operated by Fiji Television Ltd, and Sky Fiji, a subscription channel, also operated by Fiji Television.

CULTURE

Native Fijian and ethnic Indian communities are protective of their own cultural identities and customs. Traditional Fijian dance, architectural styles, cloth-making, wood-carving, pottery and music are of significant cultural value and influence much of contemporary life.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Finland is a low, glaciated plateau and in the south-east there are over 60,000 lakes. A third of the country is north of the Arctic Circle and over 65 per cent is covered by forest. In the south-west the Archipelago of Saaristomeri comprises more than 17,000 islands. Elevation extremes range from 1,328 m (Haltaitunturi) at the highest point to 0 m (Baltic Sea) at the lowest. Temperatures in the Arctic Circle range from  $-20^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $10^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. Temperatures in Helsinki range from  $-6^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $17^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Finland was part of the Swedish Empire from the Middle Ages until it was ceded to Russia in 1809 and became an autonomous grand duchy of the Russian Empire. Finland became independent after the Russian revolution of 1917, but was forced to cede around one-tenth of its land to the Soviet Union and to resettle 10 per cent of its population under the Treaty of Paris (1947). A Soviet-Finnish Co-operation Treaty forced Finland to demilitarise its Soviet border, to enter into a barter trade agreement and to adopt a stance of neutrality. These terms lasted until the demise of the Soviet Union in 1991.

Finland joined the European Union on 1 January 1995 following a referendum in October 1994.

Presidential elections held in 2000 were won by Tarja

Halonen of the Finnish Social Democratic Party (SDP). Legislative elections held in March 2003 were narrowly won by the Centre Party (KESK) with 55 seats in parliament. A centre-left coalition comprising KESK, the SDP and the Swedish People's Party (SFP) took office on 17 April. In June Parliament elected Matti Vanhanen of KESK as prime minister.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the constitution there is a unicameral legislature, the Eduskunta, composed of 200 members elected by universal suffrage for a four-year term. The highest executive power is held by the President who is directly elected for a period of six years. The first direct elections for the presidency were held in 1994.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The French Alps lie in the east of the country and the Pyrenees lie in the south. The north and west of the country comprises either flat plains or hilly terrain. Elevation extremes range from 4,807 m (Mont Blanc) at the highest point to –2 m (Rhône River delta) at the lowest. The south of France has a Mediterranean climate with warm winters (average temperature 3°C) and hot, arid summers (average temperature 18°C). The east of France has a continental climate.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Gaul, the area that is now France, was conquered by Julius Caesar in the first century BC and remained a part of the Roman Empire until the Frankish invasions of the fifth and sixth centuries. The Treaty of Verdun (AD 843) divided the Frankish Empire into three parts, of which the western part, Francia Occidentalis, became the basis for modern France.

As a result of the French Revolution (1789), a republic was declared in 1792 and the king, Louis XVI, was executed. The republic was overthrown by Napoléon Bonaparte, who established the first French Empire, which ended in 1815. The ensuing Congress of Vienna restored the monarchy, but in 1848 the Second Republic was declared, which lasted only until 1852, when the Second Empire was proclaimed under Napoléon III. He was forced to abdicate after the defeat of France in the Franco-Prussian war (1870–71) and the Third Republic was established.

In 1940, Germany invaded France, occupying most of the country and establishing a pro-German government in the south. France was liberated in 1944, a provisional government was established under Gen. Charles de Gaulle, and the Fourth Republic was declared in 1946. In 1958, the threat of a military coup following a rebellion in Algeria, resulted in the assembly inviting Gen. de Gaulle to return as premier; a new constitution which strengthened the powers of the president was adopted, the Fifth Republic was proclaimed, and Gen. De Gaulle was elected president. France granted its colonies independence between 1954 and 1962.

President Jacques Chirac, the candidate of the Rally for the Republic (RPR), was elected in May 1995.

In the first round of the presidential elections in April 2002, Jacques Chirac won the most votes and National Front leader Jean-Marie Le Pen gained just under 200,000 more votes than Prime Minister Lionel Jospin of the Socialist Party. Jacques Chirac won the second round run-off with Le Pen in May with 82.2 per cent of the vote.

In the elections to the national assembly held in June 2002 the Union for a Presidential Majority (UMP), an election coalition of the RPR and Liberal Democracy (DL), won an overall majority and a coalition comprising UMP and the Union for French Democracy (UDF) took office in June. In September 2002 the RPR, DL and parts of the UDF merged to form the Union for a Popular Movement (UMP).

A governmental plan for a major decentralisation of power from Paris was launched in October 2002. In March 2003 parliament approved constitutional amendments paving the way for the devolution to regions and departments of powers over economic development, transport, tourism, culture and further education.

INSURGENCIES

A desire for greater autonomy and recognition of Corsica's distinctive culture and language led to a campaign of separatist bombings and shootings that began in the mid-1970s. In November 1999, Prime Minister Jospin invited all political groups on the island to engage in dialogue with the French government on the constitutional future of the island. Following discussions, Jospin presented proposals to combine the island's two departments, and give the regional parliament powers over cultural, educational, structural and planning affairs and limited legislative autonomy by 2004 in return for a permanent end to terrorism. The proposals, which were accepted by the Corsican regional parliament in July 2000 and narrowly passed by the national assembly in December 2001, suffered a setback in January 2002 when the Constitutional Council rejected the legislation as unconstitutional, but allowed provisions permitting the Corsican language to become part of the primary school curriculum. A referendum held in July 2003 narrowly voted against the establishment of a new unified assembly for Corsica with limited powers to raise and spend taxes.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is a directly elected President, whose term of office is five years. The legislature consists of the National Assembly and the Senate. The National Assembly has 577 deputies (555 for metropolitan France and 22 for the overseas departments and territories). Members are elected by popular vote for five years. The Senate currently has 321 Senators (296 for metropolitan France, 13 for the overseas departments and territories and 12 for French citizens abroad). Members are elected by an electoral college to serve nine-year terms, elected by thirds every three years. By 2010, 25 new seats will be added to the Senate to make a total of 346 senators (326 for metropolitan France and the overseas departments, two for New Caledonia, two for Mayotte, one for St-Pierre and Miquelon, three for overseas territories and 12 for French nationals living abroad). By 2010 members will be elected by an electoral college to serve six-year terms, with one half of the seats being renewed every three years.

The Prime Minister is nominated by the National Assembly and appointed by the President, as is the Council of Ministers. They are responsible to the legislature, but as the executive is constitutionally separate from the legislature, ministers may not sit in the legislature and must hand over their seats to a substitute.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Viniculture is extensive, regions famous for their wines include Bordeaux, Burgundy and Champagne. Production of wine in 2003 was 47.1 million hectolitres. Cognac, liqueurs and cider are also produced. Other important agricultural products include sugar beet, dairy products, cereals and oil seeds. Nearly 55 per cent of the land area of metropolitan France is utilised for agricultural production and a further quarter is accounted for by forests.

Oil is produced from fields in the Landes area, but France is a net importer of crude oil, for processing by its important oil-refining industry. Natural gas is produced in the foothills of the Pyrenees.

Heavy industries include the production of iron, steel and aluminium. In 2002 production of pig iron was 14 million tonnes and steel 20.3 million tonnes. Other important industries are in the construction and civil engineering sectors, chemicals, rubber and plastics, pharmaceutical industries, and vehicle production and telecommunications services.

The principal imports are raw materials for the heavy and manufacturing industries (e.g. oil, minerals, chemicals), machinery and precision instruments, agricultural products, chemicals and vehicles. Agricultural products, chemicals, pharmaceuticals and vehicles are also the principal exports. Most of France's trade is done with other EU countries. There are around 45 million hectares of farmland.

The Banque de France was made independent of the government in 1994 with the formation of a nine-member monetary policy council to define and implement monetary policy. France has participated in the European Single Currency since January 1999 and in January 2002 the euro replaced the franc.

Government moves towards privatisation sparked a public sector strike in November 2002 and a series of national strikes took place in May and June 2003 over planned pension reforms.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are approximately 11,500 km of motorways and around 900,000 km of other roads. There are 14,932 km of navigable waterways. The railroad system is extensive. The length of the rail network in 2002 was around 32,682 km. The French mercantile marine consisted in 2003 of 150 ships of 1,000 gross tonnage or over, 118 of which are registered overseas.

EDUCATION

Education is compulsory, free of charge and secular from six to 16. Schools may be single-sex or co-educational. Primary education is given in nursery schools, primary schools and collèges d'enseignement général (four-year secondary modern course); secondary education in collèges d'enseignement technique, collèges d'enseignement secondaire and lycées (a seven-year course leading to one of the five baccalauréats). Specialist schools are numerous.

There are many grandes écoles in France which award diplomas in many subjects not taught at university, especially applied science and engineering. Most of these are state institutions but have a competitive system of entry, unlike universities. There are universities in 24 towns including 13 in Paris.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 51 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

There are over 100 daily newspapers in France. The main publications are: Le Monde, Le Matin, Les Echos, Le Figaro, Liberation, La Tribune, and Le Parisien. The press is mostly privately owned. French state radio caters for both domestic (Radio France) and overseas (Radio France Internationale) audiences. Channel TV5 is an international French-language television channel co-financed by Belgium, Canada, France and Switzerland. The main domestic channel, TF1, was privatised in 1987. There are two digital satellite TV companies. In 2004 there were 23 million internet users.

CULTURE

From Nouveau Cuisine to post-structural semiotics, France has enjoyed a steady influence on world culture. French culture has consistently produced the finest artists, philosophers, poets, film-makers, architects and politicians. Notable figures include the writers Jean-Paul Sartre (1905–80) and Simone de Beauvoir (1908–86), the artists Claude Monet (1840–1926) and Edgar Degas (1834–1917), the composers Claude-Achille Debussy (1862–1918) and Camille Saint-Saëns (1835–1921) and the psychoanalyst Jacques Lacan (1901–81).

OVERSEAS DEPARTMENTS

Greater powers of self-government were granted to French Guiana, Guadeloupe, Martinique and Réunion in 1982. These former colonies had enjoyed departmental status since 1946. Their directly elected Assemblies operate in parallel with the existing, indirectly constituted Regional Councils. The French government is represented by a Prefect in each.

NEW CALEDONIA

AREA – 18,736 sq. km
 POPULATION – 219,000 (2001)
 CAPITAL – ΨNouméa (97,581)

New Caledonia is a large island in the western Pacific, 1,120 km east of Queensland. Dependencies are the Isles of Pines, the Loyalty Islands (Mahé, Lifou, Urea, etc.), the Bélep Archipelago, the Chesterfield Islands, the Huon Islands and Walpole.

New Caledonia was discovered in 1774 and annexed by France in 1853; from 1871 to 1896 it was a convict settlement. In 1995, the territory was divided into three provinces, each with a provincial assembly which combined to form the Territorial Assembly. In elections in 1995, Kanaks won majorities in North province and the Loyalty Islands, whereas pro-French settlers won a majority in the South province.

A referendum in 1987 on the question of independence was boycotted by the indigenous Kanaks, and New Caledonia therefore voted to remain French. In April 1998 an agreement was reached between the pro-independence Kanak Socialist National Liberation Front, the anti-independence Rally for Caledonia in the Republic and the French government, to hold a referendum on independence in 2014 and for greater autonomy for the indigenous people in the intervening period. A referendum on the agreement, the Nouméa Accord, was held on 8 November 1998. It was supported by 71.9 per cent of voters; more than 74 per cent of registered voters took part.

THE FRENCH COMMUNITY

The constitution of the Fifth French Republic, promulgated in 1958, envisaged the establishment of a French Community of States. A number of the former French states in Africa have seceded from the Community but for all practical purposes continue to enjoy the same close links with France as those that remain formally members. Most former French African colonies are closely linked to France by financial, technical and economic agreements.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Gabon is equatorial and approximately 85 per cent of the land is rain forest. Elevation extremes range from 1,575 m (Mount Iboundji) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is hot and humid with an average temperature of 27°C. There are two wet seasons, the first is from February to May, the second is from October to December.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first Europeans to visit the region were the Portuguese in the 15th century and Dutch, French and English traders arrived soon after. Sovereignty was signed over to the French in 1839 by a local Mpongwe ruler. In 1849 a slave ship was captured by the French, and the freed slaves formed a settlement which they called Libreville, the current capital.

Gabon elected in 1958 to remain an autonomous republic within the French Community and gained full independence on 17 August 1960.

Multiparty elections held in autumn 1990 were won by the ruling Parti Démocratique Gabonais (PDG), amid allegations of fraud. The PDG formed a coalition government, although the other parties left the government in 1991 in protest at PDG domination. In September 1994, the government and opposition parties signed the Paris Agreement, which provided for a new coalition government and parliamentary elections. The elections, held in December 1996, returned the PDG to power. President Bongo of the PDG, who first took office in 1967, was re-elected for a fifth term of office in December 1998. The next presidential elections are scheduled to be held in 2005. The last elections to the National Assembly took place in December 2001. The government is dominated by the PDG but includes opposition party members.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution provides for an Executive President, directly elected for a seven-year term, who appoints the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister then appoints the Council of Ministers in consultation with the President. There is a 120-member National Assembly, directly elected for a five-year term, and a 91-member Senate, elected by municipal and regional councillors for a six-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

One of the most economically stable countries in Africa, Gabon has the highest income per capita in the region. The economy is heavily dependent on oil, which contributes 50 per cent of GDP and is the leading export, and, to a lesser extent, on other mineral resources, including manganese and uranium. Gabon has considerable timber reserves with 85 per cent of the country still forested, although production has stagnated in recent years.

The government has begun investment in agriculture in order to ease the country's dependence on oil revenue. Agricultural products include cocoa, coffee, rubber, sugar and pineapples.

MEDIA

The biggest broadcaster, Radiodiffusion-Television Gabonaise, is state controlled and operates two stations. There are two other main channels: TeleAfrica, which is privately owned; and TV Sat, a subscription operator. There are several privately owned newspapers that usually publish on a weekly basis. The only daily newspaper, L'Union, is government run. Radio is an important news medium because of rural illiteracy rates. Africa No1 is a pan-African broadcaster based in Gabon which is partly French owned.

CULTURE

Due in part to the influx of oil money, the cities of Gabon are some of the most modern in Africa. The Gabonese are mainly of Bantu descent and subdivide into about ten main ethnic groups, the largest of which is the Fang. Historically, Gabon has been admired for its woodcarving and Fang masks are the most famous of all the Gabonese woodcarving traditions.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Gambia is a flat, low-lying country where elevation extremes range from 53 m at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The Gambia River runs the entire length of the country making the Gambia itself mostly a flood plain with some low hills. The climate is tropical with an average temperature of between 23°C and 40°C. The wet season runs from June to September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Gambia River basin was part of a region dominated in the 10th to 16th centuries by the Songhai and Mali kingdoms. The Portuguese reached the Gambia River in 1447; English merchants began to trade along the river from 1588. Merchants from France, Courland (now Latvia) and the Netherlands also established trading posts there. In 1816 the British stationed a garrison on an island at the river mouth that became the capital of a small British-administered colony. In 1889 France agreed that the British rights along the upper river should extend to 10 km from the river on either bank. The Gambia became independent within the Commonwealth on 18 February 1965, and a republic on 24 April 1970.

In July 1994, junior army officers launched a coup which ousted the president and the government, and a military council was formed. The coup leader, Lt. (later Capt.) Jammeh, assumed the presidency, the constitution was suspended and a civilian-military government was formed to rule in conjunction with the Ruling Military Council. A referendum approved a new constitution in August 1996, Jammeh was elected president the following month and the Ruling Military Council was dissolved. The latest presidential elections were held in October 2001 when Jammeh secured his presidency with 56 per cent of the vote. Legislative elections held in 2002 were won by President Jammeh's party, The Alliance for Patriotic Reorientation and Construction (APRC). The election was boycotted by opposition parties.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution gives enhanced powers to the President who is elected for an indefinite term. The National Assembly has 53 members, of whom 48 are directly elected, and five appointed by the President, for a five-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture accounts for 75 per cent of employment and contributes 33 per cent of GDP. The chief product, groundnuts, forms over 80 per cent of exports. Other crops are cotton, rice, millet, sorghum, sesame, palm kernels, corn, cassava and maize. Manufacturing is limited to groundnut processing, minor metal fabrications, paints, furniture, soap and bottling. Trade through the Gambia re-exporting imported goods to neighbouring countries was an important element in the economy which was damaged in 1999 when the government imposed preshipment inspection plans. The main exports are groundnuts, cotton, fish and fish products. The main imports are foodstuffs and live animals, industrial goods, machinery and transport equipment, and fuels.

In February 2004 President Jammeh announced that large oil deposits had been discovered off the coast of the Gambia.

MEDIA

Since 2002 private newspapers and radio stations have been regulated by a government run commission that has the power to suspend publication or transmission licences and imprison journalists. The state operates the only national television station, Gambia Television. There is one private satellite channel, Premium TV Network. State run Radio Gambia produces tightly controlled news broadcasts, which are relayed by private radio stations.

CULTURE

The Gambia has a rich musical and literary tradition that plays an important part in everyday life. Griots, or 'praise-singers', preserve and pass on the stories of families and clans. There is also a vibrant modern literary tradition. Contemporary Gambian authors include Ebou Dibba (1943–2000), Lenrie Peters (b.1932) and William Conton (1925–2003).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Georgia occupies the north-western part of the Caucasus region of the former Soviet Union. It contains the two autonomous republics of Abkhazia and Adjara and the disputed region of South Ossetia (Tskhinvali). Georgia is a mountainous country with the Great Caucasus mountains in the north and the Lesser Caucasus mountains in the south. Elevation extremes range from 5,201 m (Mt'a Shkhara) at the highest point to 0 m (Black Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Georgians formed two states, Colchis and Iberia, on the edge of the Black Sea around 1000 BC. After centuries of invasions by Arabs, Turks and Khazars, Georgia entered its 'Golden Age' in the 12th century AD when trade, irrigation and communications were developed. Invasions by the Khazars and Mongols led to the division of Georgia into several states. These precarious states struggled against the Turkish and the Persian empires from the 16th to the 18th centuries, gradually turning to the Russian empire for protection and support. Eastern Georgia signed a treaty of alliance with Russia which recognised Russian supremacy in 1783 and joined the Russian empire in 1801, followed soon after by Western Georgia.

In the late 19th century, nationalist and Marxist movements competed for limited political influence under autocratic Russian rule. One of the most prominent Marxist activists was Iosif Dzhughashvili (Josef Stalin). After the Russian Revolution of 1917, a nationalist government came to power in Georgia supported by allied intervention forces. In 1921 Soviet forces occupied Tbilisi, and in 1922 Georgia joined the Soviet Union as part of the Transcaucasian Soviet Socialist Republic.

In March 1990 the Georgian Supreme Soviet declared illegal the treaties of 1921–2 by which Georgia had joined the Soviet Union. The Communist Party's monopoly on power was abolished and in multiparty elections held in October and November 1990 the nationalist leader Zviad Gamsakhurdia was elected president. Georgia declared its independence from the Soviet Union in May 1991 and was admitted to UN membership in 1992.

Gamsakhurdia's government faced armed opposition from 1991 onwards. Defeat in the ensuing civil war in Tbilisi led to Gamsakhurdia's overthrow in January 1992, and in March a state council was appointed with the former Soviet foreign minister Eduard Shevardnadze as chairman. Fighting continued throughout 1992 and 1993. In October 1992 Shevardnadze was elected head of state and chairman of the parliament, and a loose alliance of pro-Shevardnadze parties formed a government.

Gamsakhurdia returned to western Georgia in September 1993. President Shevardnadze failed to prevent the advance of Gamsakhurdia's rebels as most government forces were engaged in Abkhazia. Shevardnadze was forced to accept Russian armaments and troops to defeat the rebellion and in return agreed to join the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Georgia rescinded its participation in the CIS Collective Security treaty in February 1999 and Russian troops, who had been guarding Georgia's frontier with Turkey, began to withdraw. The legislative election held in October and November 1999 was won by the Union of the Citizens of Georgia (Shevardnadze's party) which gained 130 of the 235 seats in the parliament. In the presidential election of 2000, President Shevardnadze was re-elected, gaining 79.8 per cent of the vote. Shevardnadze resigned in November 2003 after public demonstrations against alleged electoral fraud in parliamentary elections. Mikhail Saakashvili, leader of the National Movement, was elected president in a landslide victory in January 2004. Parliamentary elections were held in May 2004 and the National Movement Democrats won 67 per cent of the vote.

SECESSION

In late 1990 the South Ossetians took up arms against Georgian rule in an attempt to join North Ossetia, itself part of Russia. The South Ossetian provincial parliament voted in November 1992 to secede from Georgia and join Russia. Fighting ceased in June 1992 and a joint Russian-Georgian-Ossetian peacekeeping force was dispatched. Representatives of the South Ossetian and Georgian governments met in April 1996 to agree security and confidence-building measures.

The presidential elections of December 2001 were won by Eduard Kokoiiti, a Russian citizen. Parliamentary elections were held in May 2004 but were unrecognised by Tbilisi.

In July 1992 the parliament of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia declared Abkhazia independent. Fighting broke out between Georgian forces and Abkhazian separatists supported by Russia; Georgian forces were defeated and were forced to withdraw in September 1993. Negotiations under Russian auspices led to an Abkhaz-Georgian cease fire and a separation of forces agreement being signed in May 1994 and the deployment of UN peacekeepers on the Abkhaz-Georgian border (along the Inguri River). In November 1994 the Abkhaz Supreme Soviet declared Abkhazia's independence again and elected Vladislav Ardzinba as president. Abkhazia was given autonomous republic status under the 1995 constitution; this was rejected by the republican parliament. Elections to the self-declared Abkhaz People's Assembly were held in 1996. Following a guarantee of security from President Ardzinba, ethnic Georgians who had fled Abkhazia during the fighting began returning in 1999. A referendum held in Abkhazia in October 1999 approved a new constitution which held Abkhazia to be a sovereign state. In July 2000, Georgia and Abkhazia signed a UN-sponsored protocol on stabilisation measures, agreeing to refrain from the use of force and to establish groups to combat cross-border crime. On 7 March 2003 Russia and Georgia agreed that the CIS collective peacekeeping forces would remain in Abkhazia indefinitely.

Ajara is a semi-autonomous region of Georgia on the country's Black Sea coast bordering Turkey. After the 2004 presidential elections, relations between Ajara and Georgia rapidly deteriorated. Aslan Abashidze, Ajara's leader since 1991, disputed a claim by Georgia that Ajara owed large sums of money in unpaid taxes and customs duties and in May 2004 Abashidze accused Saakashvili of having plans to invade Ajaria and subsequently ordered the destruction of bridges between Ajaria and Georgia. Public demonstrations against Abashidze followed and he was forced to resign. Abashidze's post has now been abolished by Georgia and an interim government (administered by Georgia) remained in control until parliamentary elections in June 2004. Georgian President Saakashvili won 77 per cent of the vote with his party Saakashvili-Victorious Ajaria (SUA).

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Georgia has signed a Partnership and Co-operation Agreement with the European Union (1996). In May 2002, US military instructors arrived in Tbilisi to train up to 2,000 troops in military strategy and tactics to counter militant activity. A written commitment was issued promising that the troops would not be used against Abkhazia.

Tension grew between Georgia and Russia in September 2002 over Russian accusations that Georgia was harbouring Chechen militants in the Pankisi Gorge in north-east Georgia. Russian President Vladimir Putin warned of military action if Georgia failed to deal with them. Relations improved when a successful two-month anti-terrorist operation was completed.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1995 Constitution provides for a federal republic with a unicameral legislature, to become bicameral 'following the creation of appropriate conditions'; and a popularly elected President who serves a maximum of two five-year terms. The present Parliament has 235 members, directly elected for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy was brought to the brink of collapse by civil and secessionist wars and the ending of former Soviet trading relationships. Although Georgia has deposits of coal, they have not been exploited and it is desperately short of energy supplies. In May 2003 work began on the Georgian section of an oil pipeline from Baku, Azerbaijan through Georgia to Ceyhan, Turkey. The only productive sector of the economy is agriculture, which employs 30 per cent of the workforce and generates 21 per cent of GDP, with a concentration on viticulture, tea and tobacco-growing and citrus fruits. The main exports are iron alloys, wine, nuts, chemical fertilisers, and oil and oil products. The main imports are oil and oil products, gas, automobiles, pharmaceuticals and wheat. In January 2001 the IMF approved a three-year loan to Georgia, amounting to some US$152 million but this programme was halted in 2003 because the Georgian authorities failed to comply with the requirements set by the fund.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The north of the country is low-lying, rising in the central region to uplands, alpine foothills and then to the Bavarian Alps in the south. The Rhine crosses the country from south to north. More than a third of the country is covered by forest. Elevation extremes range from 2,963 m (the Bavarian peak of Zugspitze) at the highest point to -3.54 m (Neuendorf bei Wilster) at the lowest. Germany has a temperate climate with average annual temperatures ranging from -5°C in January to 19°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first German realm was the Holy Roman Empire, established in AD 962 when Otto I of Saxony was crowned emperor. The empire endured until 1806, but the achievement of a national state was prevented by fragmentation into small principalities and dukedoms.

The Empire was replaced by a loose association of sovereign states known as the German confederation, which was dissolved in 1866 and replaced by the Prussian-dominated North German Federation. The south German principalities united with the northern federation to form a second German empire in 1871 and the King of Prussia was proclaimed emperor.

Defeat in the First World War led to the abdication of the emperor, and the country became a republic. The Treaty of Versailles (1919) ceded Alsace-Lorraine to France, and large areas in the east were lost to Poland. The world economic crisis of 1929 contributed to the collapse of the Weimar Republic and the subsequent rise to power of the National Socialist movement of Adolf Hitler, who became chancellor in 1933.

After concluding a Treaty of Non-Aggression with the Soviet Union in August 1939, Germany invaded Poland (1 September 1939), precipitating the Second World War, which lasted until 1945. Hitler committed suicide on 30 April 1945. On 8 May 1945, Germany unconditionally surrendered.

THE POST-WAR PERIOD

Germany was divided into American, French, British and Soviet zones of occupation. The territories to the east of the Oder and Neisse rivers were placed under Polish and Russian administration and some 7.75 million Germans were deported.

The Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) was created out of the three western zones in 1949. A Communist government was established in the Soviet zone (henceforth the German Democratic Republic (GDR)). In 1961 the Soviet zone of Berlin was sealed off, and the Berlin Wall was built along the zonal boundary, partitioning the western sectors of the city from the eastern.

Soviet-initiated reform in eastern Europe during the late 1980s led to unrest in the GDR, culminating in the opening of the Berlin Wall in November 1989 and the collapse of the Communist government. The 'Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany' concluded between the FRG, GDR and the four former occupying powers in September 1990, unified Germany with effect from 3 October 1990 as a fully sovereign state. Economic and monetary union preceded formal union on 1 July 1990. Unification is constitutionally the accession of Berlin and the five reformed Länder (states) of the GDR to the FRG, which remains in being. Berlin was declared to be the capital of the unified Germany and parliament and government departments were transferred from Bonn.

The distribution of seats following the last election for the Bundestag in September 2002 was: Social Democratic Party (SPD) 250; Christian Democratic Union (CDU)/Christian Social Union (CSU) 248; Greens 55; Free Democratic Party (FDP) 47; Party of Democratic Socialism (PDS) 2. Gerhard Schröder of the SPD was re-elected as federal chancellor and formed a coalition government of the SPD and the Greens. Chancellor Schröder resigned as chairman of the SPD in February 2004 to concentrate on German reform processes. Franz Muentertfering succeeded him as the leader of the Social Democrats. Presidential elections were held in May 2004 and Johannes Rau was replaced by Professor Horst Koehler, a former director of the IMF.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Basic Law (Constitution) provides for a President, elected by a Federal Convention (electoral college) for a five-year term; a lower house (Bundestag) of 603 members elected by direct universal suffrage for a four-year term of office; and an upper house (Bundesrat) composed of 69 members appointed by the Governments of the State (Länder) in proportion to Länder populations, without a fixed term of office. German elections are governed by a system of proportional representation.

Judicial authority is exercised by the Federal Constitutional Court (Bundesverfassungsgericht), the Federal Courts provided for in the Basic Law and the courts of the Länder.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

Germany is a federal republic composed of 16 States (Länder) (ten from the former West, five from the former East, and Berlin). Each Land has its own directly elected legislature and government led by Minister-Presidents (Prime Ministers) or equivalents. The 1949 Basic Law vests executive power in the Länder governments except in those areas reserved for the Federal Government.

DEFENCE

The Army has 2,398 main battle tanks, 3,130 armoured personnel carriers, 2,255 armoured infantry fighting vehicles, and 199 attack helicopters. The Navy has 12 submarines, one destroyer, 12 frigates, 25 patrol and coastal vessels, 65 combat aircraft and 22 armed helicopters. The Air Force has 376 combat aircraft. There remain 100,700 NATO personnel in Germany (USA 73,500; UK 22,000; Belgium 2,000; France 3,200; Netherlands (2,600). Major cuts were made in military procurement in late 2002.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.5 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 284,500: Army 191,350, Navy 25,650, Air Force 67,500.

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Nine months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Germany has the world's fifth largest economy but recent years have seen stagnation with unemployment, slow growth, and a budget deficit in excess of the 3 per cent required by Eurozone rules.

The government announced in June 2000 that it was to abolish all 19 of Germany's nuclear power stations over a 32-year period, which supplied over 30 per cent of the energy generated in the country.

After a mini-boom generated by new East German demand in 1990 and 1991, Germany entered its most severe recession since the Second World War induced by the costs of reunification. In 1993 a 'Solidarity Pact' was agreed, which lays down the basis of future funding transfers to the East based on a 5.5 per cent rise in income taxes, wage restraint in the West, more private investment in the East, and the distribution of the funding burden between the federal and Länder governments.

The rate of economic growth increased in 1999 and 2000, aided by the weakness of the euro, but began to slow in the first quarter of 2001 and achieved less than one per cent growth between 2001 and 2003. The euro replaced the Deutsche mark in January 2002.

Unemployment rose in 2002 and continued to rise in early 2003. In 2003 Chancellor Schröder set out a major reform package of tax cuts and labour and welfare reforms designed to reduce unemployment and revive the country's economy.

Principal industries are coal mining, iron and steel production, machine construction, the domestic electrical industry, the manufacture of steel and metal products, chemicals, automobile production, electronics, textiles and the processing of foodstuffs.

GNI – US$1,939,600 million (2001); US$23,560 per capita (2001)

Exports to UK	29,381,000,000	24,070,953,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There was a total road network of around 230,735 km in 2000, comprising 11,515 km of expressways. There are 45,514 km of railways. Around 20 per cent of domestic freight is carried on the 7,500 km of inland waterways.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory between the ages of six and 18 and comprises nine years of full-time education at primary and main schools and three years of vocational education on a part-time basis. The secondary school leaving examination (Abitur) entitles the holder to a place at a university or another institution of higher education.

Children below the age of 18 who are not attending a general secondary or a full-time vocational school have compulsory day-release at a vocational school.

There are over 300 higher education institutes and the largest universities are in Munich, Berlin, Hamburg, Bonn, Frankfurt and Cologne. Germany's oldest university is Heidelberg, founded in 1386.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 47 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Each of the country's 16 federal states operates its own television stations, both private and public. Germany is implementing digital radio and television and will cease analogue services in 2010. Over 90 per cent of German households receive cable or satellite television. Germany also has a considerable press industry and is home to many international media companies.

CULTURE

Modern German language has steadily developed from the time of the Reformation to the present day. Differences in dialect can be found in Austria, Alsace, Luxembourg, Liechtenstein and the German-speaking cantons of Switzerland. Great figures emerge from all areas of the cultural landscape, from literature (Goethe 1749–1832) and philosophy (Kant 1724–1804), to classical music (Beethoven 1770–1827) and physics (Einstein 1879–1955).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Ghana has inland plains that lead to the Ashanti plateau in the west and the river Volta basin in the east. Elevation extremes range from 880 m (Mount Afadjato) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical but there is also a warm and dry coastal area in the south-east. The average temperature in Accra is 30°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

First reached by Europeans in the 15th century, the constituent parts of Ghana came under British administration at various times, the original Gold Coast colony being constituted in 1874, and Ashanti and the Northern Territories Protectorate in 1901. Trans-Volta-Togoland, part of the former German colony of Togo, was mandated to Britain by the League of Nations after the First World War and was integrated with the Gold Coast colony in 1956 following a plebiscite. The former Gold Coast colony and associated territories became the independent state of Ghana on 6 March 1957 and became a republic in 1960.

Since 1966, Ghana has experienced long periods of military rule interspersed with short-lived civilian governments. A coup in 1979 led to the formation of an Armed Forces Revolutionary Council chaired by Lt. Jerry Rawlings. Civilian rule was restored in 1979 but another coup in December 1981 brought Rawlings back to power.

A referendum in 1992 approved a new multiparty constitution and the legalisation of political parties. The National Democratic Congress (NDC) was established as a political party from the ruling Provisional National Defence Council. The presidential and parliamentary elections in late 1992 were won by Rawlings and the NDC.

The NDC lost power in the general election of 2000, which was won by the New Patriotic Party (NPP), with 101 seats; the NDC won 92 seats. The presidential election was won by John Kufuor of the NPP.

A state of emergency was declared in the Dagbon region of north Ghana after ethnic violence erupted in March 2002.

In May 2002 President Kufuor inaugurated a reconciliation commission to investigate human rights violations during military rule and the commission began hearing testimonies in January 2003. In July 2004, the commission began work on a final report (due in October) that will include findings and recommendations.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is an Executive President elected for a four-year term, renewable only once. The President nominates members of the Council of Ministers subject to approval by Parliament. The unicameral legislature, the Parliament, has 200 members directly elected for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture is the basis of the economy, generating 35 per cent of GDP. Crops include cocoa, rice, cassava, plantains, oranges and pineapples, groundnuts, corn, millet, oil palms, yams, maize and vegetables. Livestock is raised in uncultivated areas. Fishing is important in coastal areas and in the Volta lake and river system. Around 60 per cent of the workforce are employed in farming, forestry and fishing.

Manganese production ranks among the world's largest, with an average of 280,000 tonnes of ore being produced annually. Ghana is Africa's second largest gold producer after South Africa and gold is the main export, providing over 25 per cent of export revenue. Diamonds and bauxite are also produced. Other exports include pineapples, tuna, cocoa (which provides the largest single source of revenue, 25 per cent of export earnings), electricity, timber and prepared fish.

Principal imports are capital goods, semi-manufactures, consumables and petroleum.

Since 1966 the Volta Dams at Akosombo and Kpong have generated hydroelectric power for the processing of bauxite and fed a power transmission network for most of Ghana, Togo and Benin. There is considerable foreign investment in Ghana, and its economy has grown consistently.

GNI – US$5,700 million (2001); US$290 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 3.8 per cent (1998)

EDUCATION

The government of Ghana invests heavily in education in order to provide compulsory, free basic education for all children. Investment in 2003 constituted 25 per cent of all government spending. Ghana has one of Africa's oldest universities, at Legon in Accra.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 19.7 per cent; (f) 37.1 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 79 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The Ghana Broadcasting Corporation (GBC) is the state owned broadcaster. GBC operates a television network and various radio stations that transmit in English and Ghanaian dialects. TV3 is a private television channel, Multichoice is a cable television operator and Metro TV is jointly owned by the government and private backers. Ghana's private press and broadcasters operate without major restrictions.

CULTURE

The largest tribe in Ghana is the Ashanti. The Ashanti are famous for their skill as craftsmen, particularly in the areas of hand-carved stools, fertility dolls, and kente cloth, a cloth woven in thin strips of bright colour for ceremonial occasions. The Ewe tribe is also well-known for its kente cloth, which features geometric patterns.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The main areas are: Macedonia, Thrace, Epirus, Thessaly, Continental Greece, Crete and the Peloponnese. The main island groups are the Sporades, the Dodecanese or Southern Sporades, the Cyclades, the Ionian islands, and the Aegean islands (Chios, Lesbos, Limnos and Samos). Elevation extremes range from 2,917 m (Mount Olympus) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. The coastline and islands have a Mediterranean climate with hot, dry summers and mild, wet winters. The average annual temperature in Athens ranges from 9°C in January to 28°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Greece was under Turkish rule from the mid-15th century until a war of independence (1821–7) led to the establishment of a Greek kingdom in the Peloponnese in 1829. The remainder of Greece gradually became independent until the Dodecanese were returned by Italy in 1947. After the German Nazi occupation of 1941–4, a civil war between monarchist and Communist groups lasted from 1946 to 1949, and tension between right-wing and radical groups continued after 1949. In 1967 right-wing elements in the army seized power and established a military regime (the 'Greek Colonels'). The King went into voluntary exile in 1967. Unrest in Athens in 1973–4 intensified after the government was involved in the overthrow of President Makarios of Cyprus in July 1974, and led the Colonels to surrender power. Konstantinos Karamanlis (prime minister 1955–63) returned from exile to form a provisional government, and the first elections for ten years were held in 1974. The restoration of the monarchy was rejected by referendum on 8 December 1974 and Greece became a republic.

In 1975 a new constitution was introduced to mark the transition to a parliamentary democracy. The constitution was revised in 1986. From 1974 onwards Greek politics was dominated by Constantine Karamanlis, who founded the conservative New Democracy Party (ND), and Andreas Papandreou, who founded the left-wing Panhellenic Socialist Party (PASOK). The ND were elected with a total of 165 seats in the most recent general elections of March 2004, ousting PASOK (with 117 seats), which had been in power since 1994.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

In 1986 most executive power was transferred from the President to the Government. The unicameral 300-member Parliament (Vouli) is elected for a four-year term by universal adult suffrage under a system of proportional representation, with a 3 per cent threshold for parliamentary representation. The head of state is a President, elected by Parliament for a five-year term, renewable once only.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The principal minerals are nickel, bauxite, iron ore, iron pyrites, manganese magnesite, chrome, lead, zinc and emery. The chief industries are textiles (cotton, wool and synthetics), chemicals, cement, glass, metallurgy, shipbuilding, domestic electrical equipment and footwear, the production of aluminium, nickel, iron and steel products, tyres, chemicals, fertilisers and sugar (from locally-grown beet). Food processing and ancillary industries are also expanding.

In March 2002 Greece and Turkey signed an agreement to build a gas pipeline which will supply Greece with gas from Turkey.

Tourism is a major industry, accounting for an estimated 15 per cent of annual GDP and contributing more than US$8,000 million every year in foreign exchange earnings.

Though there has been substantial industrialisation, agriculture still employs a fifth of the working population and contributes 8.1 per cent of GDP. The most important agricultural products are tobacco, wheat, cotton, sugar, rice, fruit (olives, peaches, vines, oranges, lemons, figs, almonds and currant-vines). Exports of fresh fruit, currants and vegetables are an important contributor to the economy.

In March 1998 the drachma was admitted to the ERM; Greece became a member of EMU on 1 January 2001 since when it has participated in the European Single Currency. The euro replaced the drachma in January 2002.

Exports to UK	546,400,000	463,517,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Railways are state owned, with the exception of the Athens–Piraeus Electric Railway. There are 9,255 km of motorways and 29,350 km of provincial roads. There is an extensive ferry system that operates between the islands and the mainland.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory from the age of six to 15 and is maintained by state grants. There are eighteen universities and several other institutes of higher education.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 1.5 per cent; (f) 4.0 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 93 per cent (1997); secondary 95 per cent (1997); tertiary 47 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Although the Greek media is considerably free from regulation, editors and publishers risk prosecution should their material be deemed offensive to religious beliefs or the President. A sizeable proportion of the country's 1,700 private radio and television stations are unlicensed. In 2004 there were an estimated 1.7 million internet users.

CULTURE

Greek civilisation emerged c.1300 BC and the poems of Homer, which were probably current c.800 BC, record the struggle between the Achaeans of Greece and the Phrygians of Troy (1194 to 1184 BC).

The spoken language of modern Greece is descended from the Common Greek of Alexander the Great's empire. Katharevousa, a conservative literary dialect evolved by Adamantios Korais (Diamant Coray, 1748–1833) and used for official and technical matters, has been phased out. Novels and poetry are mostly in Dimotiki, a progressive literary dialect which owes much to John Psycharis (1854–1929). The poets Dionysios Solomos (1798–1857), Constantine P. Cavafy (1863–1933) and Angelos Sikelianos (1884–1951) have won a European reputation. George Seferis (1900–71) and Odysseus Elytis (1911–96) have both won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1963 and 1979 respectively.

GRENADA

The most southerly of the Windward Islands. Grenada comprises three islands – Grenada (the largest at 18 km in length and 34 km in width), Carriacou and Petite Martinique. Elevation extremes range from 840 m (Mount Saint Catherine) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is subtropical with a wet season running from June to December. Grenada is within a hurricane zone.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Discovered by Columbus in 1498, and named Concepción, Grenada was originally colonised by France and was ceded to Great Britain in 1763. It became a Crown colony in 1877, an Associated State in 1967 and an independent nation within the Commonwealth on 7 February 1974.

The government was overthrown in 1979 by the New Jewel Movement led by Maurice Bishop and a People's Revolutionary Government (PRG) was set up. In October 1983 disagreements within the PRG led to the death of Prime Minister Bishop, whose government was replaced by a Revolutionary Military Council. These events prompted the intervention of Caribbean and US forces. The Governor-General installed an advisory council to act as an interim government until a general election was held in December 1984. A phased withdrawal of US forces was completed by June 1985.

In the general election of November 2003 Dr Keith Mitchell, leader of the New National Party (NNP), was elected to his third successive term of office when his party won eight of a possible 15 seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The service industries account for 62 per cent of employment and 68.4 per cent of GDP. The economy was principally agrarian, but agriculture now employs only 24 per cent of the workforce and produces seven per cent of GDP. Manufacturing consists of processing agricultural products and the production of textiles, concrete, aluminium and handicrafts. Tourism is the main foreign exchange earner. In 2001 123,351 tourists visited Grenada.

The most important exports are nutmeg and cocoa. Grenada is the world's second-largest producer of nutmeg, accounting for about a third of the world's annual supply. Imports include machinery and transport equipment, livestock, foodstuffs and beverages, manufactured goods, and fuels. The main trading partners are the USA, Germany, Bangladesh, the Netherlands, France, the UK and Trinidad and Tobago.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Guatemala is a mountainous country and has 33 volcanoes. Elevation extremes range from 4,211 m (Volcan Tajumulco) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical but is cooler in the highlands. The wet season runs from May to October and mudslides and hurricanes can occur during this period. There are also frequent minor earth tremors and some earthquakes.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Guatemala was under Spanish rule from 1523 until gaining independence in 1821. It formed part of the Confederation of Central America from 1823 to 1835.

After a series of military coups, civilian rule was restored with the election of a Constituent Assembly in 1984 and the promulgation of a new constitution in 1985. In May 1993 President Serrano partially suspended the constitution and attempted to rule by decree but was effectively ousted by the army on 1 June. Ramiro de León Carpio was elected president by congress to serve out Serrano's term to January 1996.

The legislative elections of 2003 were won by Gran Alianza Nacional (GAN) with 49 seats. The presidential elections were won by Oscar Berger of GANA with 54 per cent of the vote.

INSURGENCY

Since 1960 the armed forces had been fighting insurgency by the left-wing, mainly Mayan Indian, guerrillas of the Guatemalan Revolutionary National Unity Movement (URNG). Some 200,000 were killed in the fighting. Government–URNG negotiations began in 1991, leading to a reduction in fighting and agreements in 1993. In March 1994 a human rights accord was reached under which a 300-strong UN Observer Mission (MINUGUA) was established in November 1994 to supervise the implementation of government–URNG accords. An accord recognising the rights of the indigenous population was signed in March 1995, but in a referendum held on 16 May 1999, constitutional reforms which would have amended the constitution to allow for the implementation of peace accords were rejected. Representatives of the four rebel groups comprising the URNG signed a peace treaty with the government in December 1996; an independent commission into the 36-year civil war, set up under the 1996 peace treaty, published a report on 25 February 1999 which concluded that the army had committed 93 per cent of the acts of genocide against the indigenous Mayan population. In August 2000 President Portillo admitted the state's responsibility for atrocities committed during the civil war and vowed that those responsible would be prosecuted. Three per cent of those military personnel found to be responsible for atrocities have been prosecuted.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President, who is directly elected for a single four-year term. He appoints the Cabinet. Legislative authority is vested in the National Congress, whose 158 members (increased from 113 in the 2003 Legislative elections) are directly elected for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture provides 22.5 per cent of GDP and employs half of the workforce. The principal export is coffee (approximately a third of exports), with other exports including manufactured goods, sugar, bananas (15 per cent of exports) and cardamom. The chief imports are raw materials and semi-manufactures, capital goods, consumer goods, and fuel oils. Guatemala has a free-trade agreement with El Salvador, Honduras and Mexico; the USA is also one of the country's main trading partners.

On 5 April 2002, the IMF announced that a one-year standby credit of US$67 million had been approved in order to underpin the government's economic policies and the implementation of the 1996 peace accords. In June 2003 a further US$84 million of credit was made available until 2004.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Guinea has a flat coastal plain that rises to a mountainous interior. Elevation extremes range from 1,752 m (Mont Nimba) at the highest point to 0 m at the lowest (Atlantic Ocean). There is a wet season from June to November and the average daily temperature is 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Guinea was separated from Senegal in 1891 and administered by France as a separate colony. On 2 October 1958 Guinea became an independent republic. French President Charles de Gaulle offered France's West African colonies a choice between autonomy and immediate independence in 1958. Ahmed Sekou Touré, who was elected president in 1961, chose full independence. The ensuing flight of French nationals from the country resulted in the destruction of much of Guinea's infrastructure. Four decades of economic stagnation followed as Sekou Touré first attempted to ally Guinea to the Soviet Union, then, when the relationship with the USSR soured, he imposed a series of socialist reforms. Touré died in 1984, shortly after making limited free-market reforms. A military coup soon followed, led by Lansana Conté.

A presidential election held on 14 December 1998 was won by the incumbent President Lansana Conté with 54 per cent of the vote. Legislative elections took place on 30 June 2002 and were won by President Conté's Party of Unity and Progress (PUP), which gained 85 of the 114

National Assembly seats. Presidential elections in 2003 returned Conté to power with a majority vote of 95 per cent, although several of the main opposition parties did not take part. In May 2004 Prime Minister Francois Fall resigned and went into exile after just two months in the job, protesting that President Conté was blocking his attempts at political and economic reform.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 300 m (unnamed location) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Guinea-Bissau has a low coastal plain that rises to savannah in the east. Average yearly temperatures range from 24°C in January to 27°C in October with a wet season from June to November.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

A part of the ancient African empire of Mali, Guinea-Bissau was once the kingdom of Gabú. In 1446 Portuguese traders reached the coast and Guinea-Bissau became a centre of the Portuguese slave trade. Though a Portuguese colony, Guinea-Bissau remained in a state of under-development throughout the colonial period. Since its independence in 1974, Guinea-Bissau has suffered severe political instability. Until 1994 the country was governed by the one-party socialist regime of the PAIGC (African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde) and military rule.

An army revolt against General Joao Bernardo 'Nino' Vieira in 1998 led to fighting around the capital, Bissau, and was only quelled by troops from ECOMOG, the military force of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Withdrawal of ECOMOG troops in 1999 saw a return to conflict which ended with the exile of General Vieira.

The presidential elections of 1999 saw Kumba Yala returned to office with 72 per cent of the vote. Relations between Yala and the military, however, were fraught, and in September 2003 the president was deposed in a bloodless coup. ECOWAS intervened and the military was persuaded to accept a form of constitutional government that included a large civilian element. A transitional government was set up including an interim president and prime minister. In the legislative elections of March 2004, the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde (AIPGCV) won 45 seats in the National People's Assembly with 34 per cent of the vote, while the Party for Social Renewal (PSR) won 35 seats and 24.8 per cent of the vote. The third major party, the United Social Democratic Party (USDP), won 27 seats and 16.1 per cent of the overall vote. Presidential elections are due in 2005.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new Constitution, which limited the tenure of the Presidency to two terms, was adopted in July 1999. Under the constitution, the President is the head of government and appoints the Council of Ministers. There is a unicameral legislature, the Assembleia Nacional Popular (National People's Assembly), composed of 102 members elected by universal suffrage for a four-year term.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Guinea-Bissau has 4,400 km of roads, of which only 453 km are surfaced. There are 28 airports, three have surfaced runways. There are no railways.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Of the four national newspapers, three are privately owned. Guinea-Bissau's single television station, Radio Televisao de Guinea-Bissau (RTGB), is state run. RTP Africa is a television broadcaster set up by Portugal in each of its former colonies. Radio consists of the national broadcaster, Radio Nacional, and two commercial stations, Radio Mavegro and Radio Pindjiguiti.

Guinea-Bissau retains much of the musical tradition of the empire of Mali. The country has many griots, a social caste of professional musicians. This musical tradition of the Mandinga people consists of epics and songs often accompanied by the 21-string kora.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The interior of the country is covered in forest, with elevation extremes ranging from 2,835 m (Mount Roraima) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Guyana's average daily temperature is 28°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Carib and Arawak Indians inhabited the coastal region of Guyana and began trading with Dutch merchants who founded the first European settlement in 1615. Guyana became an important producer of sugar produced on plantations worked by African slaves. Britain became rulers of Guyana in 1796 and, with the addition of several new territories by 1831, created British Guiana.

Guyana (formerly British Guiana) became independent on 26 May 1966, with a Governor-General appointed by Queen Elizabeth II. It became a republic on 23 February 1970. Guyana was ruled by Forbes Burnham from 1970 to 1985. Burnham, who had co-founded Guyana's first political party, the People's Progressive Party (PPP), has been widely criticised for his autocratic style of government. As a result Guyanese politics has been characterised by suspicious elections, a deterioration in respect for civil liberties and human rights, and two major political assassinations. Bharrat Jagdeo was elected president in 2001 with the PPP winning 34 seats, securing its third consecutive term of office; the PNC won 27 seats. Jagdeo's premiership has seen attempts to encourage joint action between the government and the private sector and soon after the elections he called for reconciliation between the PPP and Guyana's other political parties in order to prevent further political violence.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1980 Constitution provides for an executive President who serves a five-year term, and a National Assembly of 65 members, of which 53 are elected nationally by proportional representation and 12 are regional representatives.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The IMF classifies Guyana as a Highly Indebted Poor Country. The sugar industry, which accounts for ten per cent of the GDP, is Guyana's most important industry. In 1998 Guyana suffered negative growth of -1.8 per cent after six consecutive years of growth of at least five per cent. Donor agencies and the World Bank play a major role in funding development projects. Agriculture is the principal economic activity, accounting for 39 per cent of GDP and employing 19 per cent of the workforce. Main export items include sugar, gold, rice and bauxite. Diamonds are also mined. There is some cattle ranching, and oil deposits have been recently discovered. Emphasis is now being placed on eco-tourism.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Guyana has five main ports. There are a total of 49 airports, though only eight have surfaced runways. There is a very limited railway system of only 187 km. Roads and navigable waterways form the main arteries of communication in the country, though only 590 km of roads, out of a total of 7,970 km are surfaced.

EDUCATION

Education is compulsory between the ages of six and 14. Nursery, primary and secondary education is free of charge but fees are payable for study at the University of Guyana. There are several technical and vocational institutions, as well as some 30 adult education schools. There are also a number of technical and vocational institutions not under the aegis of the Ministry of Education.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 2,680 m (Chaine de la Selle) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Haiti, the western third of the island of Hispaniola, was ceded to France by Spain in 1697. It was named Saint Domingue and was popularly known as the 'pearl of the Antilles' as it became the richest colony in the French empire. This wealth was generated by African slaves working in the sugar and coffee plantations. In 1791 Toussaint L'Ouverture, Jean-Jacques Dessalines and Henri Christophe led a slave rebellion which expelled the French from the northern part of the colony and instigated a long war between freed slaves and colonists. By 1804 the Republic of Haiti was founded, marking the inception of the world's first black republic and, after the USA, the oldest republic in the western hemisphere.

Haiti, however, has enjoyed very little stability since. The country endured 22 changes of government between 1843 and 1915. The resulting upheaval led the USA to intervene in 1915. This marked the beginning of 19 years of US occupation and Haiti was restored to sovereign rule in 1934.

In 1957 the Duvalier family gained control of the country and began a dictatorial rule which was to last 29 years. A series of transitional governments followed before Jean-Bertrand Aristide won 67 per cent of the vote in the presidential election of 1990. Aristide was deposed in a coup the following year which instigated a period of military rule. The severity of the military's repression prompted the UN to authorise US-led intervention in 1994. Though re-elected in 2000, Aristide's administration became the focus of mounting accusations of corruption. In 2004 an anti-Aristide rebel movement seized a number of towns and cities. Aristide went into exile, accusing the USA of forcing him from the country. US and French troops have remained in Haiti as another interim government attempts to disarm the remaining rebels.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is the President, directly elected for a five-year term that may not be renewed immediately. The National Assembly is the bicameral legislature; the lower house, the Chamber of Deputies, has 83 members directly elected for four years. The upper house or Senate has 27 members elected for six years; one-third of the Senators are elected every two years. The President appoints the Prime Minister, who must be approved by the National Assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Around 70 per cent of the population depend on agriculture, predominantly small-scale subsistence farming. Massive inflation has only partly been alleviated by aid following the departure of former president Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Remittances from the estimated one in six Haitians living abroad, principally in the USA, are of importance. Leather goods, textiles, electronic components and sports equipment are manufactured, using imported raw materials, for re-export. Principal imports are foodstuffs, machinery and transport equipment and fuels. In July 2002 Haiti was accepted as the 15th member of the Caribbean Community (Caricom) trade bloc.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Honduras is the second largest country in central America. Elevation extremes range from 2,870 m (Cerro Las Minas) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures range from 19°C in January to 23°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Honduras hosted an arm of the Mayan civilisation between the fifth and ninth centuries AD. Christopher Columbus first set foot on the American mainland at Trujillo in Honduras in 1502, but it was 20 years before Spanish conquistadors reached the country. The economic importance of Honduras declined in the 18th century. In 1824 Honduras joined all its neighbouring Central American provinces in declaring independence from Spain.

The Sandinista revolution in neighbouring Nicaragua in 1979 made Honduras a centre for US endeavours to back the anti-Sandinista Nicaraguan Contras. Honduras returned to civilian rule in 1981 with an executive presidency, a 128-seat unicameral congress, and a multiparty system. In October 1997, congress approved a constitutional amendment reducing the legislature to 80 members. The ending of the civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador meant a reduction in the number of US troops in Honduras and a decline in the power of the army.

Legislative elections held on 25 November 2001 were won by the National Party (PNH) who gained 61 seats, with the Liberal Party (PLH) gaining 55 seats. The presidential election held on the same day was won by Ricardo Maduro of the PNH.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Economic reliance in Honduras is on banana and coffee exports but the markets for both of these crops have been in steady decline over recent years. Other chief exports include frozen meat, shrimps, lobsters and timber, the most important being pine, mahogany and cedar. The main imports are machinery and electrical equipment, industrial chemicals and lubricants.

A foreign debt of around 80 per cent of total GDP and the devastation to the country's infrastructure caused by Hurricane Mitch in 1998, have caused considerable economic problems for Honduras. In 2003 President Ricardo Maduro joined the heads of Central American states to push for a Central American Free Trade Agreement with the USA. In 2004 Honduras signed agreements with the IMF which, if targets are met, will allow Honduras to be granted debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

A landlocked state in central Europe, Hungary is mostly low-lying with a mountainous region in the north. Elevation extremes range from 1,014 m (Kekes) at the highest point to 78 m (Tisza River) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures range from  $-1^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $21^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Hungary became a Christian kingdom in the year AD 1,000, but had been settled by Magyar tribes (the ancestors of modern Hungarians) since 896. Between 1699 and 1867, Hungary was precariously ruled as a province of the Austrian Habsburg empire. Following years of Hungarian agitation, a Dual Monarchy was created giving Hungary control of internal affairs in return for the continued union of the Austrian and Hungarian crowns. The Austro-Hungarian empire is remembered as a time of great cultural achievement and economic success. Nevertheless, the union took the country into the First World War on the side of Germany resulting in defeat for the Hungarians and the destruction of the Habsburgs. An unstable republic after the war, Hungary suffered invasion from Romania and was reduced in size following the Treaty of Trianon. Hungary looked to the fascist regimes in Germany and Italy for aid in re-establishing its historic size, and so entered the Second World War on the side of the Axis powers. Hungary suffered massive military defeat at the hands of the Soviets and the destruction of its Jewish community at the hands of the Nazis.

The elections of 1947, which brought the communists to power, set the tone for subsequent communist rule. The communist leader János Kádár's attempts at national reconciliation led to reforms which developed Hungary's most wealthy and liberal regime.

The collapse of communist rule saw Hungary become the Republic of Hungary in 1989. Free and fair elections were not matched by economic success and the early 1990s saw Hungary suffer a host of economic problems. In the legislative elections in April 2002, no one party won an overall majority. The Federation of Young Democrats-Hungarian Civic Party (Fidesz-MPP) won the largest number of seats but Péter Medgyessy of the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSzP), formed a coalition government with the Alliance of Free Democrats (SzDSz). The composition of the national assembly as at July 2004 was: Fidesz-MPP 188, MSzP 178, SzDSz 20.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The unicameral 386-seat National Assembly is elected on a mixed first-past-the-post and proportional representation basis. The President, elected by the National Assembly, has a largely ceremonial role, but his powers include appointing the Prime Minister, who in turn selects the Cabinet ministers and has the exclusive right to dismiss them.

The Army has 743 main battle tanks, 680 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 798 armoured personnel carriers. The Air Force has 37 combat aircraft and 49 attack helicopters. Hungary became a member of NATO in March 1999.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.8 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 33,400: Army 23,600, Army Maritime Wing 270, Air Force 7,700; Paramilitaries 14,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Six months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Hungary is one of the largest economies of the ten countries to enter the European Union in 2004. The private sector accounts for around 80 per cent of GDP and Hungary has attracted large amounts of foreign investment since the end of communist rule in 1989. Industry includes mining, metallurgy, construction materials, processed foods, textiles, chemicals (especially pharmaceuticals) and motor vehicles. Targets for 2004 include a reduction in the public sector deficit and a cap on rises in wage levels. Germany remains Hungary's largest trading partner.

GNI – US$49,200 million (2001); US$4,830 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Hungary has 188,203 km of highways, 7,875 km of railways (including a cross-border line to Austria, jointly managed by the two countries) and 1,373 km of permanently navigable waterways. Hungary maintains several major ports and harbours on the Danube River including the capital Budapest.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Hungary's state run broadcaster (Magyar Televizo) competes with privately owned television and radio stations. Hungary has a wide range of weekly and daily newspapers, some of which are owned by foreign investors.

Hungary has an exceptional folk culture which has influenced a powerful musical tradition including the composers Franz Liszt (1811–86), Béla Bartók (1881–1945), Zoltan Kordaly (1882–1967) and Gyorgy Ligeti (b. 1923). Janos Arandy (1817–82) and Endre Ady (1887–1919) are two of Hungary's finest poets. Hungary's most famous author is Imre Kertesz (b. 1929) who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 2002.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Iceland is located in the North Atlantic Ocean, to the east of Greenland and to the west of Norway. Sitting on the cusp of the Arctic Circle, Iceland's average annual temperatures range from  $-3^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $11^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. Although mostly flat, there are mountainous areas in the north with elevation extremes ranging from 2,119 m (Hvannadalshnúkur) at the highest point, to 0 m (North Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Seventy-nine per cent of Iceland's land area is covered with glaciers, lakes and lava fields. It is estimated that over the past 500 years, Iceland has emitted a third of the earth's total lava flow.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first major settlements occurred from about 870 onwards as turmoil in Scandinavia drove migrants to seek new homelands. Iceland hosted a flourishing Viking culture in the 9th and 10th centuries but became a fully Christian country in 999. Throughout the middle ages Iceland came under Danish and then Norwegian rule but in 1874 a constitution was drafted giving Iceland control over domestic affairs. Though it became an independent state within the Kingdom of Denmark in 1918, Copenhagen still controlled foreign policy and defence. It was only with the German occupation of Denmark in 1940 that Iceland requested full independence, which it finally gained in 1944.

In the parliamentary (Althingi) elections of 10 May 2003, the Conservative Independence Party (SSF) retained 22 seats. Incumbent prime minister David Oddsson of the SSF was sworn into office for a further term on 23 May 2003. In the presidential elections of June 2004, the incumbent president, Ólafur Grímsson, received 85.6 per cent of the vote and was sworn into office for a third consecutive term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Icelandic economy is heavily reliant on the fishing industry and 70 per cent of Iceland's exports are marine products. Careful management of the industry, including the banning of direct foreign investment, has allowed stocks to recover from the over-fishing of the 1980s. Although only five per cent of land in Iceland is suitable for farming, the country is self sufficient in meat and dairy products. Attempts to reduce the country's dependence on fishing have included the introduction of aluminium smelters, which can be run on Iceland's plentiful supply of clean geothermal fuel. Tourism is encouraged and is becoming increasingly popular with over 40,000 tourists coming from the UK in 2000. Iceland's main export markets are the UK, Germany, the USA, The Netherlands, Spain, Norway, Denmark, Japan and Switzerland.

GNI – US$8,150 million (2001); US$28,910 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.0 per cent (2003 estimate)

INFLATION RATE – 4.6 per cent (2002)

Exports to UK	310,812,000	309,900,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Iceland has no railways and no navigable waterways. Although the country has almost 13,000 km of roads, the majority remain unsurfaced and due to the extreme climate in winter, are often blocked by snow. Iceland has 100 airports. There are nine major ports and the capital, Reykjavík, operates shipping services to the USA and several European countries, including the UK.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The state provides a public service broadcaster for television and radio, the Icelandic National Broadcasting Service (RUV), which is joined by several commercial stations.

The Icelandic Sagas are regarded as among the most important works of European medieval literature. Written anonymously between the 12th and 13th centuries, the Sagas relate the battles and triumphs of the original Icelanders who settled from Norway and Denmark. One of Iceland's most famous contemporary writers is Halldor Laxness (1902–98) who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1958.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

India has three well-defined regions: the mountain range of the Himalayas, the Indo-Gangetic plain, and the southern peninsula. The main mountain ranges are the Himalayas and the Western and Eastern Ghats. Elevation extremes range from 8,598 m (Kanchenjunga) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The average annual temperature in New Delhi ranges from 14°C in January to 34°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The beginnings of Hinduism were developed in the Indus River valley region from c. 2500 BC. Between 1500 and 200 BC Aryan tribes from central Asia made repeated invasions of the sub-continent. Buddhism emerged in India from c. 500 BC and was embraced by the Emperor Ashoka. However, a Hindu revival from AD 40 onwards pushed Buddhism into decline.

The first Muslim advances into India occurred in the 10th and 11th centuries. Incursions swept across the north of the country where large Muslim communities were established. India was thus established as a country with two great religious traditions: a Muslim dominated north, and a largely Hindu south. Europeans arrived in India in the 16th century, though it was not until 1803, when the British East India Company consolidated its influence, that a single power came to dominate the entire subcontinent. In 1857 rule passed to the British government. Opposition to British rule, led by the Indian National Congress (INC) under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi, became a concerted nationwide movement, and India achieved its independence in 1947. Against a backdrop of violence India's predominantly Muslim regions were partitioned and became East and West Pakistan. The latter eventually seceding from Pakistan to become Bangladesh.

Partition produced a bitter stand-off between India and Pakistan over the largely Muslim state of Kashmir. The state, split between the two countries, was claimed in its entirety by both. Outbreaks of war in 1965, 1971 and 1999 have blighted Kashmir since partition.

The murder of Mahatma Gandhi in 1948 was the first act in a series of political assassinations in independent India. The election of Jawaharlal Nehru began the rise of India's great political dynasty – the Gandhi family, which came to dominate the INC. Indira Gandhi, Nehru's daughter, was elected in 1966 but was assassinated by her Sikh bodyguards in 1984.

The long dominance of the INC over Indian politics appeared to be over in the early 1990s when the Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), on a Hindu nationalist platform, began to beat the INC at the polls and formed a series of coalition governments. The Gandhi dynasty returned to popularity when the INC won a surprise victory in the parliamentary elections of May 2004 with 34.6 per cent of the vote and 217 seats in the Lok Sabha (House of the People). Italian-born Sonia Gandhi was elected, but almost immediately declared she was standing down, claiming she never intended to become prime minister. She was replaced by Manmohan Singh, who became prime minister and led a coalition government called the United Progressive Alliance. The appointment of Singh marked the arrival of India's first Sikh prime minister.

COMMUNALISM

Tensions between India's Hindu majority and large Muslim minority have never been fully resolved. Violence between the two at the time of partition in 1947 is thought to have cost the lives of up to one million people. The rise of Hindu nationalism in the 1990s accompanied a rise in communal clashes. In 1992 a mosque in the town of Ayodhya was destroyed by Hindus who claimed it was built on the site of the Hindu god Rama's birth. Anti-Muslim mobs rampaged through many parts of India and the army was called upon to restore order.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

In addition to the territory it won as a result of the Sino-Indian war in 1962, China claims Arunachal Pradesh and does not recognise Indian sovereignty over Sikkim. Talks between India and China in June 2003 resulted in India's formal recognition of the Tibetan Autonomous Region as a part of China and a cross-border trade agreement on Sikkim. India and Pakistan have fought three major wars since independence, in 1947–8, 1965 and 1971. Since 1985 they have continued a low-level war at altitude for control of the Siachen glacier in Kashmir.

In May 1998, India confirmed its nuclear status with five underground nuclear tests and within three weeks, Pakistan had followed suit. Both countries' tests sparked international condemnation. In May 1999 India launched air attacks on Muslim insurgents who had occupied mountainous areas within Indian-controlled Kashmir. Small-scale incidents between the Indian and Pakistani troops stationed along the line of control dividing Kashmir continue to occur on a regular basis. The presidents of India and Pakistan held a summit in Agra in July 2001, but failed to agree a joint declaration. A terrorist attack on the federal parliament in New Delhi on 13 December left 14 people dead. India held the Islamic separatist organisations Jaish-e-Mohammed (JeM) and Lashkar-e-Tayyeba (LeT) responsible. The Kashmir crisis continued into 2002 and tensions increased in early 2003 with frequent exchanges of fire and shelling between the Indian and Pakistani armies. However, in New Delhi in June 2004, the first diplomatic talks for three years were held between the Indian and Pakistani foreign ministers. The two ministers agreed to re-open the consulates in Karachi and Bombay that have been closed since 1994.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President, elected for a five-year term by an electoral college consisting of the elected members of the Union and State legislatures. The President appoints the Prime Minister. The Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha (House of the People). The Vice-President is ex-officio chairman of the Rajya Sabha (House of the States). Legislative power rests with the President, the Rajya Sabha (245 members serving six-year terms) and the Lok Sabha (545 members). Twelve members of the Rajya Sabha are Presidential nominees, the rest are indirectly elected representatives of the State and Union Territories. The 543 members of the Lok Sabha representing the States and Union Territories are directly elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term, and the two representatives of the Anglo-Indian community are nominated by the President.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

There are 28 States and seven Union Territories. Each state is headed by a Governor, who is appointed by the President and holds office for five years, and by a Council of Ministers. All states have a Legislative Assembly, and some also have a Legislative Council, elected directly by adult suffrage for a maximum period of five years. The Union Territories are administered, except where otherwise provided by Parliament, by the President acting through an Administrator or Lieutenant-Governor, or other authority appointed by him.

DEFENCE

The Army has 3,898 main battle tanks, 1,600 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 317 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has 19 submarines, one aircraft carrier, eight destroyers, 11 frigates, 39 patrol and coastal vessels, 35 combat aircraft and 50 armed helicopters. It has nine bases including one under construction. The Air Force has 744 combat aircraft and 40 armed helicopters.

India exploded its first nuclear weapon in 1974 and is since believed to have acquired a stockpile of nuclear arms. It conducted further nuclear tests in May 1998. In 1993-4 India successfully test-fired its intermediate-range 'Agni' and 'Prithvi' ballistic missiles, and the latter went into production in September 1997.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE - 2.7 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL - 1,325,000: Army 1,100,000, Navy 55,000, Air Force 170,000; Paramilitaries 1,089,700

ECONOMY AND TRADE

India remains largely agrarian with agriculture, forestry and fishing supporting approximately 75 per cent of the population and contributing 30 per cent of GDP. Food crops occupy three-quarters of the total cultivated area. The main food crops are rice, cereals (principally wheat) and pulses. The major cash crops include sugarcane, jute, cotton and tea. Other products include oil seeds, spices, groundnuts, soya beans, tobacco, rubber and coffee. Livestock is raised, principally for dairy purposes or for the hides.

Large numbers of graduates have driven the growth of knowledge-based sectors such as information, communications and technology. Other industries, such as pharmaceuticals, are also experiencing growth. The economy has experienced an average growth rate of six per cent since 1990. Large-scale problems remain with a public-sector budget deficit of ten per cent of GDP.

India exports textile goods, gems and jewellery, engineering goods, chemicals and leather goods. Tourism has become a major industry for the country. Agricultural development has been hampered by serious environmental issues. Deforestation, soil erosion, over-grazing and desertification threaten India's agriculture and forests. Air pollution is particularly severe in the cities.

GNI - US$477,400 million (2001); US$460 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP - 7.2 per cent (1999)

Exports to UK	1,870,245,000	2,147,328,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

India has over 63,518 km of railway, 3,319,644 km of roads and 3,631 km of navigable waterways. There are 333 airports. The chief seaports are Bombay/Mumbai, Jawahar Lal Nehru, Calcutta/Kolkata, Haldia, Madras/Chennai, Mormugao, Cochin, Visakhapatnam, Kandla, Paradip, Mangalore, Ennore and Tuticorin.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory up to the age of 14. There are 226 universities in India and education spending reached over four per cent of GDP in 2001-2.

ILLITERACY RATE - (m) 31.6 per cent; (f) 54.6 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) - tertiary 7 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The state's monopoly of television broadcasting ended in 1992, and India has seen an increase in the number of channels available. English language newspapers include Times of India, Indian Express and Hindustan Times, while popular Hindi titles are Aman Ujala, Dainak Jagran and the NavBharat Times.

Successive empires and invaders have left distinctive traces on Indian art. The Hindu Mauryans, from the third century BC and the Muslim Mughals from the 16th century both instigated what are considered to be the 'Golden Ages' of Indian culture.

There is a fertile literary scene in India which includes the writers Vikram Seth (b. 1952), Salman Rushdie (b. 1947), Arundhati Roy (b. 1967) and Shashi Deshpande (b. 1938). The Indian film industry is perhaps the most successful in the world. Known as 'Bollywood', there are an estimated 800 films made every year.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Indonesia comprises the islands of Java, Madura, Sumatra, the Riouw-Lingga archipelago, Bangka and Billiton, part of the island of Borneo (Kalimantan), Sulawesi (formerly Celebes), Maluku (formerly Moluccas), the islands of Bali, Lombok, Sumbawa, Sumba, Flores and others comprising the provinces of East and West Nusa Tenggara and the western half of the islands of New Guinea (Irian Jaya) and Timor. Elevation extremes range from 5,030 m (Puncak Jaya) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures in Jakarta range from 23°C in January to 32°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first great Islamic empire was centred at Melaka (Malacca) but did not survive the Portuguese invasion of 1511. The Portuguese themselves were displaced by the Dutch East India Company which, lured by the rich spice trade, came to dominate the whole of Indonesia by the early 20th century. Japanese occupation of Indonesia during the Second World War strengthened nationalism and Achmed Soekarno, the foremost proponent of self-rule since the 1920s, became president when full sovereignty was transferred to the new Indonesian republic in 1949. In 1966, Soekarno was deposed in a military coup. The new president, General Soeharto, remained in power until 1998 when, amidst economic and social upheaval, he was succeeded by his deputy B. J. Habibie. Habibie failed to implement the social and economic reforms necessary and many Indonesians continued to demand autonomy or full independence.

On 30 August 1999 East Timor voted for independence but the province quickly descended into civil unrest. An intervention by the Australian military ended the troubles and East Timor gained independence after 25 years of Indonesian occupation.

Abdurrahman Wahid was elected president in October 1999 but was impeached for alleged financial corruption in 2001 and was replaced by Megawati Soekarnoputri (daughter of Soekarno, Indonesia's first president) in July 2001. On 10 August 2002, the House of Representatives voted in favour of amendments to the constitution introducing direct elections for the president and vice-president who had been formerly elected by the People's Consultative Assembly.

On 12 October 2002 a terrorist attack in Bali killed at least 184 people and injured more than 300. On 7 August 2003 Amrozi bin Nurhasyim was found guilty of carrying out the bombings and sentenced to death.

The first round of presidential elections took place in July 2004 and was won by Susilo Yudhoyono. The second round took place on 20 September but the final result was not known at the time of going to press.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Indonesia has a wide range of natural resources including petroleum, tin, natural gas, nickel, timber, bauxite, copper, fertile soils, coal, gold and silver. The country has a large agricultural sector with 45 per cent of the labour force engaged in agriculture.

Indonesian industries include the production of petroleum and natural gas. It is also the world's biggest producer of tin. Timber is Indonesia's second largest foreign exchange earner after oil while textiles, mining and chemicals are also important to the economy. Tourism has begun to slowly recover after the Bali bombing of 2002. In 2003 Indonesia graduated from IMF support. Inflation and interest rates have both declined and the budget deficit has been reduced to 1.8 per cent of GDP and debt has fallen to 65 per cent of GDP.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Indonesia has 342,700 km of highways and 6,458 km of railways. An extensive network of ferry services links the islands. There are 661 airports and 21,579 km of navigable waterways.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

A state-run television broadcaster, Televisi Republik Indonesia (TVRI), competes with several commercial stations. There are several nationwide newspapers and many radio stations. In 2003 more than 2,000 unlicensed radio and television stations were given the chance to apply for licences.

Indonesian Islam is, in places, strongly influenced by the country's Hindu and Buddhist traditions. Much of Indonesian society is influenced by adat, a code of behaviour covering social and religious duty. In Java, puppetry has evolved into a complex theatrical form that narrates the story of the Mahabharata, one of the world's longest literary epics and a key Hindu text that explores religion, philosophy and mythology.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Iran is a part of the Middle East's 'fertile crescent', an area associated with the development of sophisticated agriculture. In the sixth century BC the Achaemenian king, Cyrus the Great, developed his control over the area. His dynasty founded the Persian empire under the Zoroastrian religion. In the fourth century BC Persia was conquered by Alexander the Great. Alexander's death led to a period of economic turbulence, civil conflict and foreign invasion for Iran. In AD 637 Arab conquerors re-united the country and introduced Islam, converting the majority of the population and creating a cultural revolution.

The Safavid Dynasty which ruled Iran between the 16th and 18th centuries is recognised as the progenitor of one of Iran's periods of great cultural production.

Reza Khan, on becoming prime minister in 1923, firmly established the Majlis, a legislative assembly appointed by election. In the light of increasing economic strain Khan, who had assumed the title of Shah, became an increasingly isolated figure. Popular discontent followed and, in 1979, Khan was exiled. He was replaced by Ayatollah Khomeini, who established Iran as an Islamic Republic in April 1979.

In 1980, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein invaded Iran and a bitter eight-year war ensued.

Ayatollah Khomeini died in 1989 and was replaced by Seyyed Ali Khamenei. In 1997 a moderate cleric, Mohammad Khatami was elected President. Since Khatami's election Iran has been split between reforming and conservative aspirations. The presidential elections of 8 June 2001 resulted in the re-election of Mohammad Khatami, who obtained over 76 per cent of the vote.

Parliamentary elections were held in February 2004 but as at July, no results have been released.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The leader of the Republic is elected by the Council of Experts whose 83 members are popularly elected every eight years. The President, who is the Chief Executive, is directly elected for a four-year term, renewable once. Ministers are nominated by the President and must obtain a vote of confidence in the Majlis. The Majlis comprises 290 representatives who are directly elected for a four-year term. Laws passed by the Majlis must be approved by the 12-member Guardian Council. In November 1997, President Khatami announced the establishment of the Committee for the Implementation and Supervision of the Constitution, a five-member body to ensure the Constitution was abided by and that people's rights were respected.

In the legislative elections of 2000, the Reformist Party held 189 seats in the Majlis, while the Radical Islamists won 54. Independent candidates secured 42 seats.

Spiritual Leader of the Islamic Republic and C.-in-C. of Armed Forces, Ayatollah Seyed Ali Khamenei, appointed June 1989

DEFENCE

The Army has around 1,565 main battle tanks, 670 armoured personnel carriers, 750 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 50 attack helicopters. The Navy has three submarines, three frigates, 56 patrol and coastal vessels, five combat aircraft and 19 armed helicopters. There are seven naval bases. The Air Force has some 306 combat aircraft, of which about 60-80 per cent are serviceable.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 4.6 per cent of GDP
(2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 540,000: Army 350,000,
Revolutionary Guard Corps 120,000, Navy 18,000,
Air Force 52,000, Paramilitaries 40,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 21 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Iran's economy is heavily reliant on its state run oil industry and has benefited from relatively high oil prices in recent years, enabling it to amass some US$15,000 million in foreign exchange reserves. Petroleum also accounts for 85 per cent of Iran's export commodities. Apart from petroleum and petrochemicals, Iran produces textiles, construction materials and armaments. Agricultural production includes wheat, rice, other grains, sugar beets, fruits, nuts, cotton, dairy products, wool and caviar.

It was announced in April 2000 that reserves of gas had been found in the Gavband region with an estimated value of US$16,500 million.

GNI – US$108,700 million (2001); US$1,680 per capita
(2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.1 per cent

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Iran has a number of ports on the Persian Gulf though Abadan was largely destroyed during the war with Iraq.

Iran has 904 km of waterways in total, the most important being the Shatt al Arab, which is navigable for 130 km. There are a total of 167,157 km of roads of which 94,109 km are surfaced and 7,201 km of railways.

EDUCATION

Since 1943 primary education has been compulsory and free of charge. Iran has 48 universities.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 16.5 per cent; (f) 30.1 per cent
(2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 98 per cent (1997); secondary 77 per cent (1997); tertiary 18 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

President Khatami's reformist government has pushed for greater freedom in the Iranian media. Restrictions on satellite television have also been relaxed. The Islamic Republic of Iran Broadcasting (IRIB) is a state run national television broadcaster which is supplemented by regional channels.

Iran is exceptionally rich in both Islamic and pre-Islamic architecture. Persepolis, the seat of the Achaemenian empire, constructed by Darius in the sixth century BC, lies at the foot of Kuh-i-Rahmat, in the plain of Marv Dasht 400 miles south of the present capital city of Tehran.

Iranian cinema has recently emerged as one of the world's most respected film industries and in 1997 the director Abbas Kiarostami (b. 1940) won the coveted Palme d'Or at the Cannes film festival for Taste of Cherry.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Iraq is mostly desert with mountainous areas in the north. Elevation extremes range from 3,600 m (Haji Ibrahim) at the highest point to 0 m (Persian Gulf) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Baghdad range from 9°C in January to 35°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Sumerians were the first people to populate the areas around the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. They began to build city states from around 3,000 BC of which Ur, Lagash and Eridu are the earliest examples. In AD 637 Iraq was conquered by Arab Muslims. The Battle of Karbala in AD 680 marked one of the decisive moments in Islamic history: a split between Sunnis and Shias was created when the Shiite leader Hussein was killed attempting to claim the Caliphate. In 1533 Iraq came under the control of the Ottoman empire until 1916 when the Ottomans, weakened by the First World War ceded control to the British. A provisional government was set up in 1920, and in 1921 the Emir Faisal was elected King of Iraq. King Faisal II was assassinated in July 1958, and Iraq came under the control of the Ba'ath Socialist Party.

In 1979 Saddam Hussein deposed President Bakr, and installed himself as president. Following the invasion of Iraq by coalition forces in March 2003, the UN Security Council approved a resolution recognising the US-led Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA), headed by Paul Bremer, as the occupying authority in Iraq and economic sanctions were lifted. Twenty-five ministers were named to the transitional government on 1 September 2003. Izzadine Saleem, became president of the Iraqi Interim Governing Council (IGC) in May 2004, but was assassinated on 17 May. He was replaced immediately by Ghazi Mashal Ajil al-Yawer, who had already been chosen to succeed him in June.

The CPA formally handed over sovereignty to the Iraqi interim government on 28 June 2004.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

In 1980 Saddam Hussein pressed territorial claims for the whole of the Shatt al-Arab, a waterway that divides Iraq from Iran, and invaded Iran. The end of the war in 1988 left the borders in much the same position as they had been in 1980. Iraqi Kurds, who had demanded an autonomous homeland, were punished for their support of Iran with a brutal military campaign. Thousands were killed with poison gas. Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait in 1990, abolished its sovereignty, and declared it a province of Iraq. The UN Security Council declared the annexation void and in January 1991, an alliance of NATO and Middle East countries launched an offensive and liberated Kuwait in February 1991.

The UN created a United Nations Special Committee (UNSCOM), charged with ensuring that Iraq cease production and destroy all stocks of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons. The committee was often hampered in its activities by Iraqi security forces. A new weapons inspection body was created in December 1999. The UN Monitoring Verification and Inspection Committee (UNMOVIC) had the power to suspend sanctions, which the UN had imposed on Iraq, if the country was found to be in compliance with UN resolutions on disarmament. In spite of its efforts, it remained impossible to verify the end of Iraq's weapons programmes.

In November 2002 the UN resumed inspections following a unanimous resolution in the Security Council. The US threatened to attack if Iraq did not comply. The US and UK began the invasion of Iraq on 20 March 2003. The war was started without the support of the UN with several prominent member states – such as Germany, France and Russia – registering objections. On 14 April 2004 US forces took control of Tikrit, the last bastion of the old regime. Saddam Hussein was captured on 14 December 2003. US-led attempts to stabilise the country and hand power over to an Iraqi government have been severely disrupted by the actions of Iraqi insurgents.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The new constitution provides for a Majlis Watani (National Assembly), to be elected no later than January 2005. The assembly will elect the President who along with two deputies will form a Presidency Council to represent the sovereignty of Iraq and oversee the higher affairs of the country. The Presidency Council appoints the Prime Minister of Iraq and the Government, all of whom must be approved by the Assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Iraq's major industry is oil production which was nationalised in 1972. However, years of dictatorship, warfare and UN sanctions have seriously damaged production. Since the end of Saddam Hussein's regime, the reconstruction of the oil industry, the electricity supply and other essential infrastructure has proceeded but has been hampered by continuing violence and instability. The UN and World Bank estimated the cost of reconstruction at $55 billion. In October 2003, US$33 billion of aid was pledged by international donors. Petroleum has traditionally accounted for about 95 per cent of Iraq's foreign exchange earnings. Industries include the production of textiles, chemicals and construction materials. Free trade agreements have been signed with Egypt, Syria and Tunisia, which were to be put into effect when UN sanctions were lifted.

GDP – US$73,848 million (1998); US$3,352 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 15.0 per cent (1998)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£47,078,000	£129,593,000
Exports to UK	95,000	145,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Iraq's transport infrastructure was severely damaged during the war in 2003. Iraq has 1,963 km of railways and 45,550 km of highways. The Shatt al-Arab, Iraq's main waterway, is navigable for 130 km. The Tigris and Euphrates rivers have navigable sections for shallow draft boats.

EDUCATION

When the CPA took responsibility for the control of Iraq after the fall of Saddam Hussein's regime, it reviewed the country's education system. Over 2,500 schools have been refurbished and more than 70 million textbooks have been reprinted.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 34.4 per cent; (f) 54.1 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 85 per cent (1997); secondary 42 per cent (1997); tertiary 11.2 per cent (1995)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Once strictly controlled under Saddam Hussein, the media has begun to flourish since the end of Ba'ath rule. There are more than 200 newspapers and periodicals, many with an ethnic or religious affiliation, and private radio and television has also begun to thrive. The Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) operates the Iraqi Media Network (IMN), which reaches two-thirds of Iraqi homes. The CPA prints Al-Sabah and this is joined by Al-Zaman, a daily newspaper based in London but printed in Baghdad and Basra.

Much of the rich cultural history of Iraq has been destroyed or irreparably damaged through years of war and state control. However, since the end of the 2003 war, many former dissident writers and artists have returned to the country. Significant figures include the poet Fawzi Karim (b. 1945), the filmmaker Saad Salman (b. 1950) and the artist Ismaayl Fattah (1936–2004) who is best known for creating the Martyr sculpture in Baghdad.

IRELAND

Éire/Ireland

AREA – 68,900 sq. km. Neighbour: Northern Ireland (north)

POPULATION – 3,841,000 (2001). In 2000 religious adherence as a percentage of the population was:

Roman Catholic 87.2 per cent, Protestant 0.9 per cent, Anglican 3.7 per cent. Irish is the first official language; English is recognised as a second official language, but is more commonly used

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 0.6 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 10,460: Army 8,500, Navy 1,100, Air Force 860

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The greatest length of the island, from north-east to south-west (Torr Head to Mizen Head), is 486 km, and the greatest breadth, from east to west (Dundrum Bay to Annagh Head), is 280 km. On the north coast of Achill Island (Co. Mayo) are the highest cliffs in the British Isles, 609 m above sea level. Elevation extremes range from 1,040 m (Carrantuohill) at the highest point to 0 m (Irish Sea) at the lowest. The principal river is the Shannon (386 km), which drains the central plain. The Slaney flows into Wexford Harbour, the Liffey to Dublin Bay, the Boyne to Drogheda, the Lee to Cork Harbour, the Blackwater to Youghal Harbour, and the Suir, Barrow and Nore to Waterford Harbour.

The principal hydrographic feature is the loughs; the Shannon chain of Allen, Boderg, Forbes, Ree and Derg, and the Erne chain of Gowna, Oughter, Lower Erne and Erne; Melvin, Gill, Gara and Conn in the north-west; and Corrib and Mask (joined by a hidden channel) in the west.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Settled by the Celts around 300 BC, Ireland developed a flourishing and distinct culture that remained largely intact until Christianity was introduced in the fifth century AD. The spread of Christianity is attributed in large part to St Patrick. By the 12th century Ireland experienced the first incursions by Anglo-Norman invaders, marking the beginning of a long and fraught history between Ireland and Britain.

As English power became consolidated throughout Ireland, and the north-eastern kingdom of Ulster emerged as the final stronghold of Celtic power at the beginning of the 17th century, England began a programme of sending Protestant Scottish settlers to the area. This policy produced a long-standing rivalry, sometimes erupting into hostility, between the north's Protestant and Catholic populations.

In the mid-17th century there was widespread support in Ireland for the Royalist side in the English Civil War (largely because of the marriage of Charles I to a Roman Catholic). This prompted bloody reprisals from Oliver Cromwell, who invaded Ireland after the Parliamentary victory and ordered the execution of Charles I. Popular discontent in the late 18th century led to the Protestant gentry appealing to England for assistance, and in 1800, the Act of Union united Britain and Ireland. Simultaneously, Catholic opposition to foreign rule became increasingly organised with the formation of the Catholic Association under the leadership of Daniel O'Connell.

By 1916 demands for independence from Britain had reached the point of full-scale rebellion. Violence broke out in Dublin. Known as the Easter Uprising, it was eventually repressed by the British but inspired Irish nationalists to contest the 1918 elections and, on gaining a majority of the Irish seats, to declare Irish Independence under the leadership of Eamon de Valera. The British response was an attempt at violent suppression of the nationalists. The ensuing Anglo-Irish War lasted from 1919 to 1921 when the two sides, each unable to produce a victory, negotiated the creation of the Irish Free State under the Anglo Irish Treaty. Ireland became independent, but remained part of the Commonwealth, and Britain retained some privileges, such as the presence of naval bases. The six majority Protestant counties in the north remained part of the UK.

Ireland incrementally loosened what remaining ties it had with Britain over the following years. Irish neutrality during the Second World War was followed by the declaration of a republic in 1948. The status of Northern Ireland remained divisive. The Catholic minority began a civil rights movement in the 1960s in response to what they claimed was discrimination. Sectarian rioting ensued and British troops were deployed to restore order. The relationship between the British military and Irish Catholics swiftly deteriorated and Northern Ireland entered a period known as 'The Troubles', characterised by conflict fought between the British security forces and Irish republicans, notably the Irish Republican Army (IRA). A cease-fire in 1994 was not universally observed, but did pave the way for an eventual peace process.

Following the Good Friday Agreement of 10 April 1998, a referendum was held, in which 94 per cent of voters in the Irish Republic and 71 per cent of voters in Northern Ireland approved the agreement. The agreement recognises that Northern Ireland remains part of the UK and shall not cease to be so without the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland. Additionally, it was established that a North-South Ministerial Council, comprising officials from both countries, would meet to regulate areas of common interest.

The presidential election in October 1997 was won by Mary McAleese with almost 59 per cent of second-round votes. In the elections to the House of Representatives (Dáil Éireann) held on 17 May 2002, Fianna Fáil (FF) remained the largest party but without an overall majority. The coalition government, led by Bertie Ahern of the FF, includes members of the Progressive Democrats (PD). The composition of the Dáil Éireann as at July 2004 was: FF 81; Fine Gael 31; Labour 21; PD 8; Green Party 6; Sinn Féin 5; Socialist Party I; Independents 13.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President (Uachtarán na Éireann) is directly elected for a term of seven years, and is eligible for a second term. The President is aided and advised by a Council of State. The National Parliament (Oireachtas) consists of the President, House of Representatives (Dáil Éireann) and Senate (Seanad Éireann). Dáil Éireann is composed of 166 members elected for a five-year term on a basis of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. Seanad Éireann is composed of 60 members, of whom 11 are nominated by the Prime Minister (Taoiseach) and 49 are elected, six by institutions of higher education and 43 from panels of candidates established on a vocational basis.

Executive power is vested in the Government subject to the constitution. The government is responsible to the Dáil Éireann. The Taoiseach is appointed by the President on the nomination of the Dáil Éireann while other members of the government are appointed by the President on the nomination of the Taoiseach with the previous approval of the Dáil Éireann. The Taoiseach appoints a member of the government to be deputy (the Tánaiste).

The judicial system comprises courts of first instance and a court of final appeal called the Supreme Court (Cúirt Uachtarach). The courts of first instance include a High Court (Ard-Chúirt) and courts of local and limited jurisdiction, with a right of appeal as determined by law. The High Court alone has original jurisdiction to consider the question of the validity of any law having regard to the provisions of the constitution. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction from decisions of the High Court.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Ireland's economy boomed during the 1990s, largely thanks to investment from the EU. Ireland's major industries are computer software, information technology, food and drink production, pharmaceuticals and tourism which have helped transform Ireland from a mainly rural economy. Agriculture has been entirely overtaken by light industry and the service industries, and now accounts for only five per cent of the economy. Growth between 1995 and 2002 was eight per cent, however, this slowed to 2.1 per cent in 2003 attributed to the global slowdown in the information technology sector.

The Kinsale gas field off the south coast provided 28 per cent of Ireland's gas needs in 2000, with 72 per cent coming via an undersea pipeline from Moffat, Scotland. There are five government funded power stations. Hydroelectric power from the Shannon barrage and other schemes are also important but Ireland still imports 47 per cent of oil and coal for power generation. Metal content of ores raised in 2000 included: lead (86,896 tonnes) and zinc, (431,426 tonnes).

Per capita GDP is 10 per cent above that of the four biggest west European economies.

GNI – US$87,700 million (2001); US$22,850 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 8.9 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 5.6 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 3.8 per cent (2001)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$47,516 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$51,470 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$87,442 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$34,898 million surplus (2002)

Current Account – US$925 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£14,701,800,000	£14,277,800,000
Exports to UK	8,998,600,000	8,953,187,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Ireland has 92,500 km of highways and 3,312 km of railways. There are 700 km of waterways, though these have limited uses for commercial traffic. Ireland's major ports are Arklow, Cork, Drogheda, Dublin, Foynes, Galway, Limerick, New Ross and Waterford.

EDUCATION

Primary education is directed by the state, with the exception of 37 private primary schools. In 1998–9 there were 3,181 state primary schools, 432 recognised secondary schools under private management (mainly religious orders), and 245 vocational schools. There were 16 state comprehensive schools and 66 community schools. Third-level education is catered for by seven university colleges, 13 institutes of technology, seven teacher training colleges and a number of other tertiary institutions.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 41 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Irish broadcasting is regulated by a commission appointed by the Department of Communications. The main Irish broadcaster is the state run Radio Telefis Eireann (RTE). The British satellite broadcaster, BskyB, is widely available throughout Ireland. There are three national newspapers: the Irish Times, Irish Independent and Irish Examiner.

Notable literary figures include George Bernard Shaw ((1856–1950) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1925), W. B. Yeats ((1865–1939) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1923), James Joyce (1882–1942), Samuel Beckett ((1909–89) Nobel Prize for Literature, 1969) and Roddy Doyle (b. 1958). Other famous cultural figures include the artist Francis Bacon (1909–92), the musician Sir James Galway (b. 1939), the physicist Ernest Walton ((1903–95) joint winner of the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1951) and the scientist Sir Francis Beaufort (1774–1857), famous for the introduction of the Beaufort Wind Force Scale.

ISRAEL

Medinat Yisra'el/Dawlat Isrā'īl – State of Israel

AREA – 20,600 sq. km. Neighbours: Lebanon (north), Syria (north-east), Jordan and the West Bank (east), the Gaza Strip and the Egyptian province of Sinai (south-west)

POPULATION – 6,172,000 (2001); roughly 82 per cent Jewish, 14 per cent Arab Muslims, 2.5 per cent Christians of which 90 per cent are Arab, and 2 per cent Druze. Since independence Israel has had a policy of granting an immigration visa to every Jew who expresses a desire to settle in Israel. Between 1948 and 1992, 2.3 million immigrants had entered Israel from over 100 different countries. Hebrew and Arabic are the official languages. Arabs are entitled to transact all official business with government departments in Arabic. CAPITAL – Most of the government departments are in Jerusalem, population 758,000 (2001 estimate). A resolution proclaiming Jerusalem as the capital of Israel was adopted by the Knesset in 1950. It is not, however, recognised as the capital by the UN because East Jerusalem is part of the Occupied Territories captured in 1967. The UN and international law continues to reject the Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem and considers the pre-1950 capital Tel Aviv (population, 1,919,700) to be the capital.

MAJOR CITIES – Beersheba; ΨHaifa; Rishon Le'Zion

CURRENCY – Shekel of 100 agora

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Hatikvah (The Hope)

NATIONAL FLAG – White, with two horizontal blue stripes, the Shield of David in the centre

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 79 (2001)

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 6.2 (2003)

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 6 (2001)

HIV / AIDS ADULT PREVALENCE – 0.1 per cent (2001)

DEATH PENALTY – Yes*

POPULATION BELOW POVERTY LINE – 18 per cent (2001)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.8 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 300 per sq. km (2001)

URBAN POPULATION – 92 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 2,000 m (Mt Hermon) at the highest point, to –408 m (Dead Sea) at the lowest, which is the Earth's deepest depression. Israel comprises the hill country of Galilee and parts of Judea and Samaria, the coastal plain from the Gaza strip to north of Acre, including the plain of Esdraelon running from Haifa Bay to the south-east which divides the hill region; the Negev, a semi-desert triangular-shaped region, extending from a base south of Beersheba to an apex at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, and parts of the Jordan valley, including the Hula region, Tiberias and the south-western extremity of the Dead Sea. Average temperatures in Tel Aviv range from 14°C in January to 27°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In 1917 Palestine was captured from the Ottoman Empire by the British. In the same year the British government made the Balfour Declaration, which pledged a homeland for Jewish people in the same country. Jewish immigration from Europe was encouraged but resulted in tension with the Arab population of Palestine who had also been promised recognition for an Arab state from the British.

As increasing numbers of Jewish refugees from Europe arrived after the Second World War, the British mandate became increasingly untenable and in 1947 the British withdrew. This prompted the first of a series of conflicts between Arabs and Israelis. The creation of the state of Israel on 14 May 1948 created a large number of Palestinian refugees. A further war in 1967, in which Israel pre-emptively attacked the Arab countries, saw Israel extend its territory. The Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) under Yasser Arafat began a long struggle against the Israelis. Yet another war in 1973 saw Egypt sign a mutual recognition pact with Israel. However, the 1981 invasion of Lebanon led to an Israeli withdrawal in 1985. The southern area of Lebanon bordering Israel remained an Israeli occupied zone until 2000.

A popular Palestinian uprising, the first Intifada, begun in 1987, aimed at ending the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian areas captured in 1967.

Some progress appeared to have been made with the Oslo Peace Accord in 1993, which culminated in an historic handshake between Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. Rabin was assassinated in 1995, and the accord failed.

In 2000 Ariel Sharon, leader of Israel's Likud party well known for taking a hardline approach towards Palestinians, made a visit to the al-Aqsa Mosque/Temple Mount in Jerusalem. This visit to the most hotly disputed religious site in the area, deeply important to both Muslims and Jews, sparked the second Intifada.

On 24 June 2002, US President George Bush laid out a 'road map' for peace which envisioned a two-state solution to the conflict. However, its implementation has faced serious problems. Prime Minister Sharon has proposed the removal of some settlers from the disputed Gaza Strip, but has faced strong opposition from within his own party.

President Ezer Weizman announced that he would resign from office on 10 July 2000 following allegations of fraud. On 31 July, Moshe Katsav was elected president. Ehud Barak resigned as Prime Minister on 9 December 2000 and called a prime ministerial election, which was held on 6 February 2001; it was won by Likud leader Ariel Sharon, who formed a broad-based eight-party coalition which commanded the support of 72 of the 120 members of the Knesset. Saleh Tarif became the first Israeli Arab to be appointed to the cabinet. On 19 August 2001 the Centre Party agreed to join the coalition, bringing its support in the Knesset to 83 members. The Likud-led National Unity government collapsed on 30 October 2002 after the Labour Party withdrew from the coalition in a dispute over the 2003 budget. A general election on 28 January 2003 resulted in a victory for Likud with 37 seats in the Knesset but without an overall majority. A Likud-dominated coalition government was appointed on 27 February 2003 which also included the National Union (NU), the Change-Centre Party (Shinui) and the National Religious Party (NRP). The coalition controls 68 of the 120 seats in the Knesset.

In 2003, Israel began the construction of a large barrier separating Israel from the Occupied Territories. Designed to prevent suicide bombers reaching Israel from the Territories, the wall has been widely criticised for enclosing Palestinian land. In 2004, the International Court of Justice ruled that the barrier was illegal and should be dismantled.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Israel is a Sovereign Democratic Republic with executive power vested in a Prime Minister and Cabinet, and legislative power in a unicameral legislature (Knesset) of 120 members elected by proportional representation for a maximum term of four years. In March 2001 the Knesset passed an amendment to the Basic Law on Government ending the system of separate Prime Ministerial elections and reverting to the former position where the Prime Minister is responsible to Parliament and formally appointed by the President. The President is head of state and is elected by the Knesset. Previous presidents had been elected for a maximum of two five-year terms, but under a bill approved by the Knesset in December 1998, the President is now elected for a seven-year non-renewable term.

HEAD OF STATE

DEFENCE

Israel is believed to have a nuclear capacity of around 200 warheads which could be delivered by aircraft or Jericho I and II missiles. The Army has 3,950 main battle tanks and around 12,700 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has three submarines and 48 patrol and coastal vessels at three bases. The Air Force has 438 combat aircraft and 100 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 9.7 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 167,600: Army 125,000, Navy 7,600, Air Force 35,000; Paramilitaries 8,050

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 24–48 months (Jews and Druze only)

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Israel exports diamonds, chemicals and agricultural products and has developed a respected technology sector, central to which are the electronics, biotechnology and software industries. As well as a strong technology sector, Israel is an important producer of citrus fruits, vegetables, cotton, beef, poultry and dairy products.

Other important manufacturing industries include plastics, rubber, cement, glass, paper and oil refining. Industry accounted for 27 per cent and the service industries for 47 per cent of GDP in 2000.

In 2001 the country entered recession. Conflict with Palestine and a downturn in the technology sector produced the country's longest recession since the 1960s. A recovery package was approved by the Knesset in 2003. Israeli trade unions forced some reforms on the measures, which included cuts in public spending. In 2004 interest rates were reduced to eight per cent, and there were signs of rising business and consumer confidence as well as increased demand for exports.

Around half of Israel's debt is owed to the USA, which is Israel's main source of economic and military aid. The USA is also Israel's main trading partner, accounting for 40.3 per cent of exports in 2002.

GNI – US$106,600 million (2001); US$16,750 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.7 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 1.1 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 8.8 per cent (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$11,311 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$35,517 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$29,513 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$3,757 million deficit (2002)

Current Account – US$2,135 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£1,440,191,000	£1,377,010,000
Exports to UK	910,853,000	881,639,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Israel State Railways serves Haifa, Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, Lod, Nahariya, Beersheba, Dimona, Ashdod and intermediate stations with a network of 647 km. There were 15,965 km of surfaced roads in 2000. A major road building programme has been under way in the West Bank since 1992. The chief ports are Haifa and Ashdod on the Mediterranean, and Eilat on the Red Sea; Acre has an anchorage for small vessels. The chief international airport is Ben Gurion between Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

EDUCATION

Education from five to 16 years is free of charge and compulsory. Youths aged 16–18, who are in work but have not completed their education, can be given time off to complete their studies. There are seven universities including two engineering and technological institutes.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 2.1 per cent; (f) 5.8 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 41.1 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The Israeli Broadcasting Authority (IBA) is a public broadcaster operating television and radio services funded largely by a licence fee. This competes with two main terrestrial commercial channels and a number of satellite and cable stations. The radio sector features a number of commercial stations, but there are also a large number of unlicensed radio stations. The press includes five national dailies including Haaretz, Jerusalem Post, Maariv and The Jerusalem Report.

CULTURE

The Israel Museum in Jerusalem houses the Dead Sea Scrolls along with an extensive collection of Jewish religious and folk art. Jerusalem has a vast number of historic sites, including the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, sacred to Christians, and the al-Aqsa Mosque, which stands on the remains of Temple Mount.

Israel has absorbed large numbers of Jewish refugees from Europe and so has strong traditions in European classical music. Shmuel Yosef Agnon (1880–1970) was the first Hebrew writer to win the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1966.

PALESTINIAN AUTONOMOUS AREAS

AREA – The total area is 6,231 sq. km. The area which is fully autonomous is 412 sq. km, of which the Gaza Strip is 352 sq. km and the Jericho enclave 60 sq. km. The partially autonomous area is the remainder of the West Bank, some 5,819 sq. km.

The UN and the international community also recognise East Jerusalem as part of the Occupied Territories

POPULATION – 3,634,585 (2003 estimate), of whom 394,105 live in East Jerusalem. In addition there are 176,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank and 6,900 in the Gaza Strip (2000 estimate) who remain under Israeli administration and jurisdiction.

Some 90 per cent of Palestinians are Muslim (the vast majority Sunni) and 10 per cent are Christians

CAPITAL – Although Palestinians claim East Jerusalem as their capital, the administrative capital has been established in Gaza City (population 460,899)

MAJOR TOWNS – Khan Yunis, Rafah in the Gaza Strip; Nablus, Hebron, Jericho, Ramallah and Bethlehem on the West Bank

FLAG – Three horizontal stripes of black, white, green with a red triangle based on the hoist (the PLO flag)

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Fidai, Fidai (Freedom Fighter, Freedom Fighter)

HISTORY AND POLITICS

From 1967 to 1994, the West Bank and Gaza Strip were administered by the Israeli Ministry of Defence. Frustration at continued Israeli occupation led to the start of the Intifada, a campaign of sustained unrest, in 1987. When the 1991 Madrid peace process stalled, Israeli and Palestinian Liberation Organisation (PLO) officials engaged in secret negotiations in Norway which led to signing the 'Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements' on 13 September 1993. The Declaration of Principles established a timetable for progress towards a final settlement.

The 'Oslo B' or Taba Accord was signed on 28 September 1995 and provided for Israeli withdrawal from six towns and 85 per cent of Hebron; the extension of self-rule to most of the West Bank by 1998; the release of 5,300 Palestinian prisoners; and the striking out of the demand for Israel's destruction from the PLO's charter. On 29 December 1995 an agreement was reached on the transfer of 17 areas of civilian power to the PNA in Hebron.

Israeli troops left Ramallah, the last of the six West Bank towns, on 27 December 1995 and the inaugural Palestinian National Council meeting on 23 April 1996 voted to amend the PLO charter. The final element of the Declaration of Principles, the 'final status talks', opened in Taba, Egypt, on 5 May 1996 to decide the final status of the West Bank, Gaza and Jerusalem. The election of a Likud-led government opposed to the establishment of a Palestinian state resulted in a deadlock in negotiations in 1997 and delays in the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Hebron.

A new round of peace talks began on 14 December and a US draft accord was discussed, which envisaged a Palestinian state on 95 per cent of the West Bank and the entire Gaza Strip. Agreement could not be reached and the talks broke down on 27 January 2001. Relations remained volatile throughout 2002 with Palestinian suicide bombings and Israeli retaliation amid cease-fires and intense diplomatic intervention. Renewed violent conflict took place in late 2002-3 and Yasser Arafat was subjected to a ten-day siege by Israeli security forces in September 2002 following a fatal suicide bombing in Tel Aviv on 19 September. The siege was lifted on 29 September after a UN Security Council resolution demanded the withdrawal of Israeli forces.

The Palestinian cabinet resigned on 11 September 2002 after the Palestine Legislative Council (PLC) threatened to pass a vote of no confidence in it. Arafat named Mahmoud Abbas as prime minister on 19 March. Abbas's appointment and his cabinet were approved by the PLC on 29 April after extensive negotiations.

The 'road map' peace plan, set out by the EU, Russia, the UN and the USA was launched on 30 April 2003 and endorsed by the Palestinian and Israeli prime ministers at a summit with US President George Bush on 5 June. The plan was intended to be a phase-by-phase route to ending the violence in the region leading to the establishment of an autonomous Palestinian state by 2005. Although Hamas rejected the 'road map' peace plan, the group, along with Islamic Jihad and Fatah, announced on 30 June 2003 that they would observe a three-month truce with Israel. In July of the same year, Israeli forces withdrew from some key areas in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. However, Mahmoud Abbas, reportedly frustrated at the road map's lack of progress, resigned as prime minister on 6 September 2003. His replacement, Ahmed Qurei was named by Arafat on 7 September 2003, but he resigned his post in June 2004, citing a lack of control over security issues. However, after crisis talks with President Arafat, he retracted the resignation. Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for late 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive authority is vested in the Palestinian National Authority which is headed by a popularly elected leader (Rais). Legislative authority is vested in the 88-member Palestinian Legislative Council which is directly elected by means of a first past the post system, and itself elects the four-fifths of the PNA not appointed by the leader.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Italy consists of a peninsula, the islands of Sicily, Sardinia, Elba and about 70 other small islands. The peninsula is for the most part mountainous, but between the Apennines, which form its spine, and the eastern coastline are two large fertile plains: Emilia-Romagna in the north and Apulia in the south. The Alps divide Italy from France, Switzerland, Austria and Slovenia. Elevation extremes range from 4,061 m (Gran Paradiso) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. The chief rivers are the Po (651 km) which flows through Piedmont, Lombardy and the Veneto; the Adige (Trentino and Veneto); the Arno (Florentine plain); and the Tiber (flowing through Rome to Ostia).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Etruscans were the first people to control the Italian peninsula. Their empire flourished between the 12th and eighth centuries BC, but was eventually overtaken by the Romans. At the height of its power, the Roman Empire spread from Italy across Europe, Asia Minor and North Africa. Conquered and settled by a variety of invaders throughout the 'Dark Ages', Italy began to develop into a number of competing city states. These, with their powerful and wealthy merchant classes, became the locations (and provided the capital) for the Renaissance. Italian nationalists began to agitate for a unified Italy throughout the 19th century, culminating in the declaration of the Kingdom of Italy in 1861. The major figures in Italian unification were Mazzini (1805–72), Garibaldi (1807–82) and Cavour (1810–61).

In 1923 the fascist leader Benito Mussolini, promising a firm rule to end the disruption, seized power. Mussolini tied Italy into an alliance with Adolf Hitler's Germany, and thus led Italy into the Second World War on the Axis side. The Allies invaded Sicily in 1943, which led to a coup to depose Mussolini, who was eventually captured and killed by partisans on 28 April 1945. Italy became a republic after the war, with the king abdicating shortly after the country's new constitution came into force, abolishing the monarchy. A post-war boom lasted until the late 1970s when inflation and unemployment ensued. This was a time of serious civil unrest, with unions opposed to often corrupt governments and extreme right- and left-wing groups conducting violent campaigns.

In the early 1990s Italy experienced a drive to reform its political establishment. Links between the government and organised crime were exposed and many politicians were arrested. However, this exposed new divisions within Italian society, chiefly a secessionist movement called the Northern League, which claimed to be dedicated to independence for the northern territories of Italy from the poorer south.

Ulivo (Olive Tree) was a coalition of left-wing parties led by Romano Prodi that won the general election in 1996. Though unstable (the coalition had three different prime ministers in five years), it successfully prepared Italy to enter as one of the founding members of the single European currency on 1 January 2002.

The general election held on 13 May 2001 was won by the centre-right House of Freedom alliance, which obtained 368 seats. The alliance was led by Forza Italia and also comprised the Christian Democratic Centre, the Christian Democratic Union, the National Alliance, the New Italian Socialist Party and the Northern League. Silvio Berlusconi was sworn in as prime minister on 11

June. However, in 2003 he appeared in court on corruption charges relating to the alleged bribery of judges during a business take-over in 1985. Berlusconi denied the charges and in January 2003 stated he would retain his position even if found guilty. The trial was halted in June after parliament passed law-granting immunity from prosecution to five holders of key state posts, including the prime minister.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution provides for the election of the President for a seven-year term by an electoral college which consists of the two houses of the Parliament (the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate) sitting in joint session, together with three delegates from each region (one in the case of the Valle d'Aosta). The President, who must be over 50 years of age, has the right to dissolve one or both houses after consultation with the Speakers. Members of both houses were elected wholly by proportional representation until 1993. Now 75 per cent (232) of the 315 elected seats in the Senate are elected on a first past the post basis and the remaining elected seats are filled by proportional representation. There is a variable number of life senators, who are past Presidents and senators appointed by incumbent Presidents. In the Chamber of Deputies 75 per cent (472) of seats are elected on a first past the post basis, and 25 per cent (158) by proportional representation, with a four per cent threshold for parliamentary representation. A referendum on 18 April 1999 on abolishing the seats elected by proportional representation foundered when less than the required 50 per cent of the electorate participated.

DEFENCE

The Army has 1,183 main battle tanks and 2,136 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has six submarines, one aircraft carrier, one cruiser, four destroyers, 14 frigates, 16 patrol and coastal vessels, 18 combat aircraft and 80 armed helicopters. There are four naval bases. The Air Force has 263 combat aircraft and six armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.9 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 200,000: Army 116,000, Navy

36,000, Air Force 48,000; Paramilitaries 254,300

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Ten months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Italy is the world's fifth-largest industrial economy, and it has achieved this with few natural resources. Italy remains divided between a prosperous and industrially developed north and a largely agricultural south that has suffered high unemployment. Agricultural produce includes fruits, vegetables, grapes, potatoes, sugar beets, soy beans, grain, olives; beef, dairy products and fish.

Small- and medium-sized family industries provide a large amount of economic output. Many of these are centred around manufactured goods. Major industries include motor vehicles, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, electrical goods, textiles, fashion, clothing and footwear. 54.4 per cent of trade takes place within the European Union, with Germany being Italy's main trading partner. GNI – US$1,123,800 million (2001); US$19,390 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.9 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 2.7 per cent (2003)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 8.7 per cent (2004)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$26,293 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$244,178 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$253,228 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$16,533 million surplus (2002)

Current Account – US$6,741 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£8,079,900,000	£6,279,175,000
Exports to UK	9,951,500,000	8,387,810,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The main railway system is state run by the Ferrovia dello Stato. There are 19,466 km of railways. A 9,500 km network of motorways (autostrade) covers the country but there are 305,881 km of roads in total. Alitalia is the principal international and domestic airline. In January 2001, the Italian and French presidents agreed plans to build a 52 km rail tunnel through the Alps as part of a high-speed rail link between Turin and Lyons. Commissioning of the project is scheduled for 2012.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory between the ages of six and 16. Pupils who obtain a middle school certificate may seek admission to any 'senior secondary school', which may be a lyceum with a classical or scientific or artistic bias, or an institute directed at technology, trade or industry, or teacher-training. Courses at the lyceums and technical institutes usually last five years and success in the final examination qualifies for admission to university. There are 42 state and six private universities, three technical universities and 12 university institutes. The universities at Bologna, Modena, Parma and Padua are of ancient foundation and were started in the 12th century.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 1.1 per cent; (f) 2.0 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 47 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Rai is Italy's public broadcaster and competes with a number of private broadcasters including Mediaset. The Italian press contains many regional publications, as well as five national dailies. Italy has one of Europe's highest levels of internet use with 28.61 million users in 2004.

CULTURE

Florence, the capital of Tuscany, was one of the greatest cities in Europe from the 11th to the 16th centuries, and the cradle of the Renaissance. Under the Medici family in the 15th century flourished many of the greatest names in Italian art, including Filippo Lippi, Botticelli, Donatello and Brunelleschi and, in the 16th century, Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci.

Dante Alighieri (1265–1321) and Boccaccio (1313–75) were two of the earliest writers to compose works in vernacular languages. Notable contemporary Italian writers include Umberto Eco (b. 1932), Dario Fo (b. 1926) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1997) and Eugenio Montale ((1896–1981) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1975).

In the 20th century, Italian cinema was distinguished as a powerful force by directors such as Luchino Visconti (1906–76) and Roberto Rossellini (1906–77).

ISLANDS

Capri, in the Bay of Naples; Eolian Islands, including Lipari; Flegrean Islands, including Ischia; Pantelleria Island (part of Trapani Province) in the Sicilian Narrows; The Pelagian Islands (Lampedusa, Linosa and Lampione) are part of the province of Agrigento; Pontine Archipelago, including Ponza; Tremiti Islands; The Tuscan Archipelago (including Elba).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Jamaica is located in the Caribbean Sea, with Cuba to the north and the Dominican Republic and Haiti to the east. Elevation extremes range from 2,256 m (Blue Mountain Peak) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. Jamaica has a temperate, humid climate with average temperatures ranging from 25°C in January to 29°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Jamaica was settled by the Spanish from 1510, and taken over by the British in 1654. Slavery was abolished in 1834, autonomy from Britain came in 1947 followed by independence in 1962.

Post-independence Jamaican politics has been dominated by the Jamaican Labour Party (JLP) and People's National Party (PNP). Relations between the two parties have been fraught, and Jamaican elections and political life have often been marred by violence. The People's National Party (PNP) has been in power since 1989. At the general election of 16 October 2002, the PNP retained an overall majority with 34 out of a total of 60 seats, securing a fourth term for the party and a third term for Prime Minister Percival Patterson, who was sworn in on 23 October.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Queen Elizabeth II is the Head of State, represented by the Governor-General. The legislature consists of a Senate of 21 nominated members and a House of Representatives consisting of 60 members elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term. The Prime Minister is the leader of the majority party in the House.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Sugarcane and bananas continue to play a major part in the Jamaican economy but it is now far more reliant on the service industries, including tourism, which makes up 70 per cent of GDP; industry accounted for 24 per cent, and agriculture for 6 per cent in 2003.

Natural resources include alumina and bauxite, which comprise the majority of Jamaican exports. Remittances from Jamaicans living abroad are also of economic significance.

Tight fiscal and monetary policies have slowed inflation but Jamaica has been affected by high interest rates, increased foreign competition, unemployment and a growing internal debt. However, in 2003 the economy benefited from an exceptionally good tourist season.

GNI – US$7,300 million (2001); US$2,800 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 0.8 per cent (2000)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are several harbours, Kingston being the principal port. The island has 2,944 miles of main roads and 7,264 miles of subsidiary roads.

MEDIA

The state broadcaster was privatised in 1997, and now operates Television Jamaica Limited (TVJ). It competes with a commercial and a religious broadcaster.

CULTURE

Jamaica's diverse cultural heritage includes a vibrant contemporary music scene (Kingston is widely regarded as the birthplace and spiritual home of reggae), as well as a strong literary tradition. Significant cultural figures include the poet Linton Kwasi-Johnson (b. 1952), the musician Bob Marley (1945–81) and the politician and activist Marcus Garvey (1887–1940).

JAPAN

Nihon-koku – State of Japan

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Japan consists of four large islands: Honshu (or Mainland) 230,448 sq. km, Shikoku, 18,757 sq. km, Kyushu, 42,079 sq. km, Hokkaido, 78,508 sq. km, and many small islands (including Okinawa). The interior is very mountainous, and crossing the mainland from the Sea of Japan to the Pacific is a group of volcanoes, mainly extinct or dormant. Elevation extremes range from 3,776 m (Mount Fuji) at the highest point to –4 m (Hachiro gata) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Tokyo range from 3°C in January to 27°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

By the ninth century AD, a single empire had been established across what is now modern Japan. In the 12th century, the country was plunged into a centuries-long period of rivalry and aggression between different samurai (Japan's feudal warrior class) families. Imperial domination was re-established in 1868 after long periods of civil warfare.

In the 19th century, A US naval officer, Commodore Perry, was among the first to persuade the Japanese to receive foreign trade, and an agreement was signed between the US and Japan on 31 March 1854. Industrialisation followed and Japan adopted a western-style constitution in 1889.

Emperor Hirohito ascended the throne in 1926, ushering in a period of intense nationalism, which was simultaneously accompanied by a rise in militarism that led the country into an invasion of China in 1931 and a pact with the European fascist powers of Germany and Italy in 1940.

Japan's defeat in the Second World War was followed by a period of extraordinary economic growth but in the 1990s Japan suffered an economic slowdown and a massive earthquake at Kobe, which killed more than 5,000 people.

Following the legislative elections of 2003, the Liberal Democrat Party (LDP) won 237 seats in the Shugi-in (house of representatives), making it the majority party with 37.4 per cent of the total number of seats. Prime Minister Koizumi was re-elected for another term of office. The July 2004 elections to the Sangi-in (house of councillors) saw the LDP retain 114 of 247 seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Legislative authority rests with the bicameral Diet (Kokkai), which comprises a 480-member House of Representatives, and a 247-member House of Councillors. The House of Representatives chooses the prime minister from among its ranks, ratifies treaties and passes budget bills. Since January 2000, 180 of its members are elected by proportional representation in 11 regional blocks and 300 in single-member, first past the post constituencies. All members serve four-year terms. The House of Councillors elects half its members every three years for six-year terms. Unlike the lower house it cannot be dissolved by the Prime Minister. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet which is responsible to the legislature.

DEFENCE

The constitution prohibits the maintenance of armed forces, although internal security forces were created in the 1950s and their mission was extended in 1954 to include the defence of Japan against aggression. In the 1990s legislation was passed permitting the armed forces limited participation in UN peacekeeping missions and allowing them to enter foreign conflicts in order to rescue Japanese nationals. A revision to the USA–Japan defence co-operation guidelines agreed in 1997 permits Japan to play a supporting role in US military operations in areas surrounding Japan. In July 2003 the Japanese parliament passed legislation approving the deployment of Japanese troops in Iraq to assist with post-war reconstruction.

The Ground Self-Defence Force (GSDF) has some 1,040 main battle tanks, around 830 armoured personnel carriers, 60 infantry fighting vehicles, ten aircraft and 90 attack helicopters. The Maritime Self-Defence Force (MSDF) has 16 submarines, 45 destroyers, ten frigates, five patrol and coastal vessels, 80 combat aircraft and 102 armed helicopters at five bases. The Air Self-Defence Force (ASDF) has 270 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.0 per cent of GDP (2002)
 MILITARY PERSONNEL – 239,900: Army 148,200, Navy 44,400, Air Force 45,600; Paramilitaries 12,250

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Japan is the third-largest economy in the world after the USA and China. Over-investment in the late 1980s slowed the economy in the 1990s, but between 2003 and 2004 the growth rate has averaged four per cent. A package of economic reforms was announced on 5 April 2001, which focused on the structural reform of the financial industry.

Owing to the mountainous nature of the country less than 20 per cent of its area can be cultivated and only 14 per cent is used for agriculture; 67 per cent is wooded. The soil is only moderately fertile but intensive cultivation secures good crops. Tobacco, tea, potatoes, rice, maize, wheat and other cereals are all cultivated. Rice is the staple foodstuff.

Major Japanese industries include the production of motor vehicles, electronic equipment, machine tools, steel and non-ferrous metals, ships, chemicals, textiles and processed foods. Motor vehicles, semiconductors, office machinery and chemicals make up Japan's major export commodities. The service industries contribute 67.7 per cent of Japanese GDP and industry 30.9 per cent, agriculture makes up 1.9 per cent of GDP. The USA is by far the largest trading partner and takes 28.8 per cent of exports. China is of increasing importance and takes 9.6 per cent.

GNI – US$4,523,300 million (2001); US$35,610 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 0.5 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 0.1 per cent (2001)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 5.0 per cent (2004)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$27,003 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$337,194 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$416,726 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$93,829 million surplus (2002)

Current Account – US$112,447 million surplus (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£3,593,405,000	£3,739,070,000
Exports to UK	8,489,641,000	8,247,215,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 23,654 km of railway track and 1,152,207 km of roads. Shinkansen (bullet train) tracks are currently being expanded. The Seikan rail tunnel and the Seto Ohashi rail bridge link the four major islands. There are six international airports.

EDUCATION

Elementary education is free of charge and compulsory at elementary level (six-year course) and lower secondary (three-year course). The upper secondary schools (three-year course) are attended by 96.7 per cent of the relevant age group. There are two- or three-year colleges and four-year universities. In 1999 there were 622 universities and colleges, most of which are privately maintained.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 41 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

A public broadcaster, NHK, competes with four national terrestrial television companies. NHK also runs national radio networks. Satellite and cable television is widespread and digital broadcasting is increasingly significant. Newspaper readership is high, with 80 per cent of the population reading one of the five main national dailies.

CULTURE

Japanese is said to be one of the Ural-Altaic group of languages and remained a spoken language until the fifth to seventh centuries AD, when Chinese characters came into use. Modern Japanese is written in a mixture of Chinese characters (about 1,800) and also the syllabary characters called Kana. Traditional arts include woodblock printing and the production of intricate silk hangings. Notable writers include Kawabata Yasunari ((1899–1972) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1968) and Kazuo Ishiguro (b. 1954).

JORDAN

Al-Mamlaka al-Urdunniyya al-Hashimiyya – Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan

AREA – 88,900 sq. km. Neighbours: Syria (north), Israel and the West Bank (west), Saudi Arabia (south and east), Iraq (east)

POPULATION – 5,051,000 (2001). The majority are Sunni Muslims and Islam is the religion of the state; however, freedom of belief is guaranteed by the constitution

CAPITAL – Amman (population, 1,270,000, 1997 estimate)

MAJOR CITIES – Irbid; Az-Zarqa

CURRENCY – Jordanian dinar (JD) of 1,000 fils

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Asha Al Malik (Long Live The King)

NATIONAL DAY – 25 May (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Three horizontal stripes of black, white, green and a red triangle based on the hoist, containing a seven-pointed white star

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 71 per cent (1997); secondary 57 per cent (1997); tertiary 18 per cent (1997)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 1,734 m (Jabal Ram) at the highest point to –408 m (Dead Sea) at the lowest. The Great Rift Valley is an important topographical feature that separates the east and west banks of the River Jordan. Average temperatures in Amman range from 7°C in January to 26°C in August, although temperatures in the Jordan Valley have been known to reach 49°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The end of the Ottoman Empire in 1918 saw the British create the state of Transjordan which, during the first Arab–Israeli War of 1948, seized the West Bank and part of Jerusalem. The Six Day War of 1967 resulted in the recapture of these areas by Israel, and an influx of Palestinian refugees into Transjordan.

In 1988 Jordan announced that it would hand over the representation of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Territories to the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO). Shortly before King Hussein's death in 1999, Jordan renounced sovereignty over the West Bank and East Jerusalem.

Jordan's economy declined in the 1980s and internal stability became increasingly precarious. Riots in 1989 forced the government to adopt a process of economic liberalisation. The first free elections under universal suffrage in the country's history took place in December 1989. Real power, however, still rested with the King, with parliament amending or approving legislation originating with the monarch.

Islamist parties made inroads in further elections in 1993 but remained a minority under a system that favoured people's tribal loyalties over their religious affiliation.

Legislative elections were held on 17 June 2003 and independent candidates loyal to King Abdullah won 62 out of 110 seats in the House of Deputies. Candidates for the Islamic Action Front party were also elected to the house. A quota for women resulted, for the first time in Jordan's history, in the election of six female candidates.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution provides for a Senate of 40 members (all appointed by the King for a four-year term) and an elected House of Deputies which has 110 members, directly elected for a four-year term. The King appoints the members of the Council of Ministers. In 1991 a new National Charter was formulated which lifted the ban on political parties, imposed in 1957.

HEAD OF STATE

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 9.3 per cent of GDP (2002)
 MILITARY PERSONNEL – 100,500: Army 85,000, Navy 500, Air Force 15,000; Paramilitaries 10,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Jordanian economy is affected by several external factors and not least by the conflict between Israel and Palestine which has restricted Jordan's trading capacity. Iraq, which would normally represent a significant market for Jordanian goods, has been affected by war, UN sanctions and extreme political instability.

King Abdullah has embarked on economic reforms including a shrinking of the public sector, privatisation and a commitment to trade liberalisation. The country has recently been rewarded with debt rescheduling and increased exports to the USA and EU.

Jordan relies on Iraqi oil, and the invasion of Iraq in 2003 cut off supplies. Several Gulf states agreed to temporarily extend aid to Jordan in order to compensate for the loss. The Trans-Arabian oil pipeline (Tapline) runs through north Jordan from Saudi Arabia to the Lebanese port of Sidon. A branch pipeline, together with oil brought by road from Iraq, feeds a refinery at Zerqa, which meets most of Jordan's requirements for refined petroleum products. Sufficient reserves of natural gas have been discovered in the north-east to produce electricity for the national grid since 1989.

Of the Jordanian labour force, 12.5 per cent are engaged in industry that include phosphate mining, pharmaceuticals, petroleum refining, cement, potash and light manufacturing. Of the remainder of the labour force, 82.5 per cent are engaged in the service industries and only five per cent in agriculture. Jordan's agricultural products include wheat, barley, citrus, tomatoes, melons, olives; sheep, goats and poultry.

Imports from UK	£180,150,000	£175,155,000
Exports to UK	31,627,000	17,761,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Amman is linked to Aqaba, Damascus, Baghdad and Jiddah by roads which are of considerable importance in the overland trade of the Middle East. The former Hejaz Railway runs from Syria through Jordan, and is used mainly for freight between Amman and Damascus. The Aqaba railway carries phosphate rock from the mines of al-Hasa and al-Abiad to Aqaba. Jordan has 7,245 km of highways, but no waterways. Jordan's main port is al-'Aqabah.

MEDIA

Jordan practices strict media censorship. Laws were tightened in 2001, and long prison sentences were introduced for anyone criticising the king or harming the country's reputation. Jordan Radio and Television is a state run broadcaster. It operates three terrestrial channels and a satellite channel. These broadcast a mixture of sport, films and general programming. There are radio services in Arabic, English and French. Radio Fann is an entertainment station run by the armed forces.

CULTURE

Jordan has a large Bedouin population and this ancient nomadic culture is reflected in Jordanian music and cuisine. Jordan is also home to one of the best-known works of Arab literature, Alf Layla wa Layla (A Thousand and One Nights).

KAZAKHSTAN

Qazaqstan Respublikasy – Republic of Kazakhstan

AREA – 2,699,700 sq. km. Neighbours: Russia (north and west), Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Kyrgyzstan (south), China (east)

POPULATION – 16,095,000 (2001): Kazakhs (53 per cent), Russians (30 per cent), Ukrainians (4 per cent) and ethnic Germans (2 per cent), with smaller numbers of Tatars, Uzbeks, Koreans and Belarusians. The Russian population is concentrated in the north of the country, where it forms a significant majority, and in Almaty. The majority of ethnic Kazakhs are Sunni Muslims, and this is the main religion of the republic. Kazakh (one of the Turkic languages) became the official language in 1993; a law passed in July 1997 decreed Kazakh as the language of state administration; Russian has a special status as the 'social language between peoples'. Otherwise each ethnic group uses its own language

CAPITAL – Astana (population, 320,000, 2000 estimate, known as Akmola until May 1998). The capital was moved from Alma-Ata (Almaty) in December 1997

MAJOR CITIES – Almaty; Pavlodar; Karagandy; Shymkent

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Kazakhstan occupies the northern part of what was Soviet Central Asia. It stretches from the Volga and the Caspian Sea in the west to the Altai and Tien Shan mountains in the east. The terrain consists of arid steppes and semi-deserts, flat in the west, hilly in the east and mountainous in the south-east (Southern Altai and Tien Shan mountains). Elevation extremes range from 6,995 m (Khan Tangiri Shyngy) at the highest point to -132 m (Vpadina Kaundy) at the lowest. Average yearly temperatures in the capital Astana range from -16°C in January to 24°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Kazakhstan was inhabited by nomadic tribes before being invaded by Ghenghis Khan and incorporated into his empire in 1218. After his empire disintegrated, feudal towns emerged based on large oases. These towns affiliated and established a Kazakh state in the late 15th century which engaged in almost continuous warfare with the marauding Khanates on its southern border. After appealing to Russia for aid and protection, in 1731 Kazakhstan acceded to the Russian Empire under a voluntary act of accession.

The Bolshevik Revolution in Russia in 1917 reached Central Asia over the following years and Kazakhstan became an autonomous republic within the Russian Federation in August 1920.

Kazakhstan suffered bitterly under Stalin's twin policies of collectivisation and 'sedentarisation', where nomadic tribes were forced to become farmers. The country lost around two million people, or half its population, to famine and disease. Later Soviet rule saw the country used as a testing ground for nuclear weapons. Kazakhstan declared independence in 1991, the same year it became part of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), a confederation of 11 former Soviet states.

President Nazarbayev was elected with 98 per cent of the vote on 1 December 1991. He secured a further massive victory in 1999, though this was achieved with the banning of several opposition parties.

The 1999 elections were monitored by an Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Election Observation Mission. Standards of accountability and transparency were not high, according to the mission, though legislation in 2004 addressed some of these concerns. Elections to the Majlis took place on 19 September 2004; see Stop Press for final results.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President and Government. The President must be a Kazakh speaker and has the power to appoint the Prime Minister, other senior ministers and all ambassadors. A constitution approved by referendum on 30 August 1995 granted the President the power to dissolve the legislature and to rule by decree. It also nominated Kazakh as the sole official language; prohibited dual citizenship; and created a new bicameral legislature composed of a 39-member Senate, of whom 32 are indirectly elected and seven appointed, and a 77-member directly elected Majlis (lower house of legislature). The Constitutional Court, which opposed the new Constitution, was replaced by a Constitutional Council which was made subject to Presidential veto.

HEAD OF STATE

DEFENCE

An agreement signed with Russia in January 1995 provides for eventual re-unification of the two states' armed forces. The CIS mutual defence treaty of 1993, to which Kazakhstan is a signatory, retains a common air defence force, while Kazakh forces also take part in the CIS peacekeeping force along the Tajikistan-Afghanistan border. By 1996, all nuclear warheads had been returned to Russia although Kazakhstan retained 48 SS-18 intercontinental ballistic missiles. Kazakhstan participates in the NATO Partnership for Peace programme. The Army has 650 main battle tanks and 1,750 armoured combat vehicles. The Caspian Sea Flotilla, which Kazakhstan shares with Russia and Turkmenistan, operates under Russian command. The Air Force has 164 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 2.0 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 65,800: Army 46,800, Air Force 19,000; Paramilitaries 34,500

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 31 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

As part of the Soviet Union, the Kazakh economy was dominated by the production of raw materials such as phosphorus, chrome, lead, zinc and silver. The post-Soviet economy still relies on these resources as well as oil and natural gas supplies. Russia takes 30 per cent of Kazakh exports and agriculture accounts for 11 per cent of GDP. Kazakhstan exports oil and oil products, ferrous metals, chemicals, machinery, grain, wool, meat and coal.

Agriculture, including stock-raising, is highly developed, particularly in the central and south-west of the republic. Grain is grown in the north and north-east, and cotton and wool produced in the south and south-east. In 1999 12.5 million tonnes of wheat and 3.5 million tonnes of barley were grown.

The opening of the Caspian Consortium pipeline in 2001, from western Kazakhstan's Tengiz oilfield to the Black Sea, has significantly boosted Kazakhstan's energy industry. However, the country has also attempted to reduce its dependency on oil by diversifying the economy with light industry.

The labour force is divided by 30 per cent engaged in industry, 20 per cent in agriculture and 50 per cent in services. The tenge was floated on 5 April 1999 in a bid to reduce the trade deficit.

GNI – US$20,100 million (2001); US$1,350 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 13.2 per cent (2001)

Exports to UK	34,333,000	51,851,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Kazakhstan has several important ports on the Caspian and Aral seas. Kazakhstan's size makes internal air travel essential, and the country has 392 airports. There are 13,601 km of railways, and 81,331 km of highways. The Syr Darya and Irtysh rivers constitute 3,900 km of waterways.

MEDIA

There are several public television broadcasters operating in Kazakhstan including Kazakh Television and Khabar TV (which is broadcast in Russian). Popular newspapers include Ak Zhayik, Akmolinskaya Pravda and the English language title Almaty Herald. Although freedom of the press is protected by the constitution, opposition and privately owned media are subject to censorship.

CULTURE

In the 19th century Abai Kunanbaev (1845–1904) translated Russian works into Kazakh, and so founded Kazakhstan's literary culture, which until then had been chiefly oral. The capital city Almaty is home to the celebrated Abai Kazak Academic Opera and Ballet Theatre while the Kazakh Film Studio, founded in 1944, is noted for its contribution to world cinema.

KENYA

Jamburi ya Kenya – Republic of Kenya

AREA – 569,100 sq. km. Neighbours: Somalia (east), Ethiopia (north), Sudan (north-west), Uganda (west), Tanzania (south)

POPULATION – 31,293,000 (2001). The main tribal groups are the Kikuyu, Luhya, Luo, Kalenjin, Kamba and Masai. The official languages are Swahili, which is generally understood throughout Kenya, and English; numerous indigenous languages are also spoken

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 5,199 m (Mount Kenya) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The interior of the country is mostly arid desert but a fertile plateau can be found in the west. As an equatorial country, the climate of Kenya is humid with average temperatures reaching 27°C in February and 22°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Arabs and Persians settled on the Kenyan coast from the eighth century AD. By 1895, Kenya had become a British protectorate. Opposition to colonial rule, both armed and political, grew throughout the 20th century, and in 1944 Jomo Kenyatta formed the Kenya African Union (KAU). This nationalist organisation demanded reform which would give land to Africans. The Mau Mau rebellion of 1952–6 brought about a state of emergency which was not lifted until 1960. Elections in 1962 gave the Kenya African National Union party (KANU) a large majority. Kenya became a republic, with Kenyatta as president, in 1964.

Kenya was a one-party state between 1972 and 1992 (with KANU as the single party). In the legislative elections of 27 December 2002 KANU lost power to the National Rainbow Coalition (NARC) who gained 125 out of 210 seats. Mwai Kibaki of NARC won the simultaneous presidential election with 62.2 per cent of the vote. He took office on 30 December 2002 and the new cabinet was sworn in on 6 January 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is the President, directly elected for a five-year term, who is head of Government and appoints the Cabinet. The unicameral legislature, the Bunge (National Assembly), has 224 members, of whom 210 are directly elected for a five-year term, 12 appointed by the President, and two ex-officio members, the Attorney-General and the Speaker. In November 1999, an amendment to the Constitution was passed which limited the powers of the President over the National Assembly and affirmed the Bunge's supremacy.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Kenya's wealth of fertile land makes it an overwhelmingly agricultural country with up to 80 per cent of the population engaged in agricultural and horticultural production. The world's fourth largest producer of tea, it also grows coffee, maize, sugarcane and wheat.

In 2003 the IMF approved a three year Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility.

There has been considerable industrial development over the last 15 years. New industries are the production of steel, textiles, tyres and processing of dehydrated vegetables. Smaller schemes have added to the country's manufacturing base in consumer goods. There is an oil refinery in Mombasa supplying both Kenya and Uganda, and a fuel pipeline connects Mombasa and Nairobi.

Tourism generates some US$400 million per year but the industry was adversely affected during 2002 and 2003 by fears of terrorist attacks.

Principal exports are coffee and tea, which account for roughly one-third of total export earnings. Also exported are fruit, vegetables and agricultural products. Industrial machinery is the largest single import; other imports are transport equipment, petroleum and petroleum products, metals, pharmaceuticals and chemicals.

Kenya's natural resources include gold, limestone, soda ash, salt, rubies, garnets, wildlife and hydropower.

GNI – US$10,700 million (2001); US$350 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.1 per cent (2001)

INFLATION RATE – 5.9 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$5,700 million (2002)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$156 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$3,192 million (2001)

EXPORTS – US$1,944 million (2001)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Imports from UK	£158,864,000	£171,992,000
Exports to UK	216,461,000	217,126,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The Kenya Railways Corporation has 2,778 km of railways. There are also 67,000 km of road, of which 8,900 km are surfaced. The principal port is Mombasa, operated by the Kenya Ports Authority. International air services operate from airports at Nairobi and Mombasa.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are a number of television channels, including the state administered Kenya Broadcasting Corporation (KBC). Radio is a popular medium outside urban areas. There are six national newspapers that report a range of political views including The Daily Nation, The East African Standard and The East African.

Benga is a type of dance music derived from the Luo people from the west of the country. Nugigi wa Thiong'o (b. 1958) is one of Kenya's most celebrated authors and was the first East African to be published in English.

KIRIBATI

Ribaberikin Kiribati – Republic of Kiribati

AREA – 726 sq. km

POPULATION – 94,149 (2001 estimate): predominantly

Christian. The languages are I-Kiribati and English

CAPITAL – Tarawa (population, 36,717, 2000)

CURRENCY – Australian dollar ($) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Teirake Kain Kiribati (Stand Kiribati)

NATIONAL DAY – 12 July (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Red, with blue and white wavy lines in base, and in the centre a gold rising sun and a flying frigate bird

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 8.63 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1979)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.4 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 113 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Kiribati (pronounced Kiribas) comprises 36 islands: the Gilberts Group (17) including Banaba (formerly Ocean Island), the Phoenix Islands (8), and the Line Islands (11), which are situated in the south-west Central Pacific around the point at which the International Date Line cuts the Equator. Few of the atolls are more than 800 m in width or more than 3 m high.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Known as the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Kiribati was proclaimed a British protectorate in 1892. After the Second World War the islanders began to agitate for independence. This was postponed as Kiritimati (Christmas) Island became the site of British nuclear weapons tests in the 1950s and 1960s. Full independence came in 1979, and in 1999 Kiribati became a member of the United Nations.

Teburoro Tito won the presidential election of 1998 and was re-elected in elections held in January and February 2003. However, he was defeated in parliament after a vote of no confidence and resigned in March. Legislative elections were held on 9 and 16 May 2003 with the Maneaban Te Mauri (Protect the Maneaba) gaining 24 seats and Boutokaan Te Koaua (BTK, Pillars of Truth) winning 16 seats in the House of Assembly. Presidential elections took place on 4 July 2003 in which Anote Tong of the BTK defeated his brother, Harry Tong, with 47.4 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is head of state as well as head of Government and is directly elected. There is a House of Assembly of 41 members (39 elected members, the Attorney-General and a representative of the Banaban community from Rabi Island). Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet.

HEAD OF STATE

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Once rich in phosphates, Kiribati's natural resources were all but exhausted at the time of independence from the UK in 1979. Fishing and tourism are of great importance to the islands, and remittances from islanders working abroad account for over $5 million a year. The principal imports are foodstuffs, consumer goods, machinery and transport equipment. The principal exports are copra and fish. In May 2000, Japanese-funded improved port facilities at Betio were opened.

GNP – US$86 million (2000); US$950 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.0 per cent (1998)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£170,000	£32,000
Exports to UK	165,000	1,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Air communication exists between most of the islands and is operated by Air Kiribati, a statutory corporation. Air Marshall Islands operates a weekly service between Majuro, Tarawa, Funafuti and Nadi, and Air Nauru between Tarawa, Nauru and Nadi. Inter-island shipping is operated by a statutory corporation, the Shipping Corporation of Kiribati.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Kiribati has no domestic television, so radio forms the islands' main source of communication. There is one government run and one private weekly newspaper. Handicrafts and Tabiteuea, an indigenous martial art, are fundamental aspects of Kiribatian culture.

KOREA

Korea's southern and western coasts are fringed with innumerable islands, of which the largest, forming a province of its own, is Cheju. The Korean language is of the Ural-Altaic Group. Its script, Hangeul, was invented in the 15th century; prior to this Chinese characters alone were used. Despite the great cultural influence of the Chinese, Koreans have developed and preserved their own cultural heritage.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

United and independent since AD 668, Korea developed a civilisation distinct from Chinese and Japanese influences. Contact with outside cultures was discouraged by successive internal Korean empires until 1876, when Japan 'opened' the country. Subsequently, Japan, China and Russia competed for influence, with Japan emerging as the dominant state and annexing Korea in 1910. Japanese rule ended with its defeat in 1945, though Korea was divided along the 38th parallel: US troops occupying the south and Soviet troops occupying the north. The Republic of Korea was founded in the south on 15 August 1948, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) in the north on 9 September the same year.

A general election was held on 10 May 1948, and the first National Assembly met in Seoul on 31 May. The Assembly passed a constitution on 12 July and on 15 August 1948 the republic was formally inaugurated and American military government came to an end. Meanwhile, in the Soviet-occupied zone north of the 38th parallel the Democratic People's Republic had been established with its capital at Pyongyang. A Supreme People's Soviet was elected in September 1948, and a Soviet-style constitution adopted.

THE KOREAN WAR

Kim Il-sung, Stalin's choice for leader in North Korea, began to build a separate government in defiance of United Nations plans for nationwide elections which would eventually unify the country. Elections took place in the south in 1950, prompting a declaration of southern independence, and an invasion from the north.

A United Nations Command (UNC), a multi-national force with a large-scale US contingent, was established to assist the Republic of Korea. The force enjoyed some initial success, and pushed the DPRK forces back almost to the Chinese border. The entire peninsula was devastated by the war. Over one million people died from each side and North Korea was devastated by aerial bombardment.

An armistice was signed on 27 July 1953, with Korea divided along the 38th parallel and with neither side having gained territory. Talks between North and South Korea on the re-unification of the country have taken place intermittently. A non-aggression accord was signed between North and South Korea in 1991 and an agreement on the denuclearisation of the Korean peninsula was reached in 1992. A summit meeting between the presidents of North and South Korea took place on 13–15 June 2000 at which a communiqué was signed agreeing to promote economic co-operation, achieve reconciliation and eventually re-unify the two countries.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea occupies the northern half of the Korean Peninsula. Elevation extremes range from 2,744 m (Paektu-san) at the highest point to 0 m (Sea of Japan) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

At the end of the Korean war in 1953, Kim Il-sung began a process of Soviet-style reform in North Korea. Il-sung also developed Juche (self-reliance) an ideology which demanded North Korea's total economic independence.

Kim Il-sung died in 1994 and was pronounced 'Eternal President'. His son, Kim Jong-il became Chairman of the National Defence Commission, the second highest post in North Korea.

Kim Dae-jung who became president in South Korea in 1998, instituted a policy of engagement with the North designed to reduce tensions. Meetings between the two sides became increasingly frequent after a Joint Declaration was signed on 15 June 2000. This declaration obliged the two sides to work independently for national unification and to recognise the common elements in the two sides' proposals for federation-confederation.

In March 2001 North Korea withdrew contacts from South Korea because of what it perceived as US hostility. Contacts eventually resumed and ministerial co-operation and reunions between Northern and Southern families became more frequent. But in October 2002 it became apparent that North Korea was continuing with its nuclear weapons programme, in breach of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) and a number of other international agreements. Talks between the USA and North Korea, hosted and mediated by China and designed to resolve the nuclear issue, occurred in 2003 and February 2004. These talks agreed a Working Group to facilitate progress towards a peaceful resolution. As at August 2004, negotiations continued.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea provides for a Supreme People's Assembly, presently consisting of 687 deputies, which is elected from a single list of candidates every five years by universal suffrage. The Assembly elects a President for a five-year term, and the Central People's Committee. In turn, the Central People's Committee directs the Administrative Council which implements the policy formulated by the Committee.

The Administrative Council (36 members), the Government of North Korea, includes the Prime Minister and various ministers. In practice, however, the country is ruled by the Korean Workers' Party which elects a Central Committee; this in turn appoints a Politburo. The senior ministers of the Administrative Council are all members of the Communist Party Central Committee and the majority are also members of the Politburo.

Elections to the Supreme People's Assembly were held on 3 August 2003 in which only candidates from the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland were allowed to participate.

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Three to ten years

ECONOMY AND TRADE

North Korea is rich in natural resources such as coal, iron ore, magnesite, graphite, copper, zinc, lead, and precious metals. Japan developed heavy industry during its years of occupation at the beginning of the 20th century, however, low export levels, increasing debt and internal mismanagement sent the economy into a long decline that was compounded by the collapse of communism in the 1990s.

A series of disastrous harvests in the 1990s brought famine, and the centrally planned economy has not been able to pull North Korea out of its desperate condition. Industrial output is centred on coal, steel, chemicals and machine tools, but antiquated machinery and fuel shortages have meant capacity is at a fraction of pre-1989 levels.

A lack of arable land, collective farming, weather-related problems, and chronic shortages of fertilizer and fuel have reduced food production. There has been some relaxation of restrictions on farmers markets since 2003, meaning that some groups have been able to purchase extra food, but large sections of the population continue to suffer shortages.

The USA increased food aid to North Korea in May 1999 but political tension in 2002–3 over North Korea's nuclear programme has led to a reduction in international food and fuel aid.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

North Korea has 5,214 km of railways and 31,200 km of highways. There are some 2,253 km of navigable waterways.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There is no independent media in North Korea. All televisions and radios are pre-tuned to government stations which broadcast state propaganda. There are five national papers in circulation that include the titles Nodung simmum (Workers' Daily) and Minju Chosn (Democratic Korea). Traditional Korean arts and culture have been strongly promoted since the reign of Kim Il-sung.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Highland and mountainous areas account for around 70 per cent of the country's land area with elevation extremes ranging from 1,950 m (Halla-san) at the highest point to 0 m (Sea of Japan) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Seoul range from  $-4^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $29^{\circ}\text{C}$  in August.

HISTORY

On 12 March 2004 the South Korean National Assembly passed a motion to impeach President Roh Moo-hyun. The president had been accused of breaking a law which required public officials to be politically neutral. During the process Prime Minister Goh Kun became acting president, but immediately stepped down when the courts rejected Roh Moo-hyun's impeachment in May. Goh Kun himself resigned in May 2004, and was succeeded by Lee Hai-chan, who was appointed on 29 June.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new Constitution was adopted in 1988 following a year of political unrest. The President, who is Head of State, Chief of the Executive and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, is directly elected for a single five-year term. He appoints the Prime Minister with the consent of the National Assembly, and members of the State Council (Cabinet) on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The President is also empowered to take wide-ranging measures in an emergency, including the declaration of martial law, but must obtain the agreement of the National Assembly. The National Assembly of 273 members is directly elected for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Republic of Korea became the world's eleventh largest economy in 1997 and transformed itself from a predominantly agrarian country into one of the Asian 'miracle' economies with an annual GDP growth rate of eight per cent.

The effects of the Asian financial crisis began to be felt in the country in 1997 when Hanbo Steel, one of Korea's flagship companies, collapsed. The situation deteriorated further and the country was forced to appeal to the IMF for assistance. Per capita GDP fell and unemployment rose but strict financial policy by President Kim Dae-jung saw the country return to growth in 2000. Major manufacturing industries include steel, automobiles, shipbuilding, electronics, textiles, clothing and leather goods and chemicals. Tourism is a growing industry, with 5,320,000 foreign visitors in 2000.

Electronic products, machinery, metal goods, passenger vehicles, chemical products and fabric and clothing are the main exports. Electronic products, petroleum, machinery and chemical products are the main imports. The USA, Japan, the EU and China are the main trading partners.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

In 2000, there were 3,124 km of railway in commercial operation, of which 661 km were electrified. A high-speed railway line is being constructed between Seoul and Pusan and there are plans to build high-speed rail links between Seoul and Mokp'o and Seoul and Kangnŭng. There were 88,775 km of roads, of which 2,131 km are motorways. There are international airports in Seoul (Kimpo), Kimhae (near Pusan), Taegu and Cheju city. An international airport was opened at Inch'ŏn in March 2001. Pusan and Inch'ŏn are the major ports with Pusan serving the industrial areas of the south-east. The port of Inch'ŏn, 28 miles from Seoul, serves the capital, but development and operation at Inch'ŏn are hampered by tidal variations of 9–10 m.

EDUCATION

Primary education is free of charge and compulsory for six years from the age of six. Secondary and higher education is extensive with the option of middle school to age 15 and high school to age 18.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 0.9 per cent; (f) 3.6 per cent (2000)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Kuwait is an almost entirely flat and arid country with average temperatures ranging from 10°C in January to 37°C in July. Elevation extremes range from 306 m (unnamed location) at the highest point to 0 m (Persian Gulf) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Kuwait entered into 'The Special Treaty of Friendship' with Great Britain in 1899, in order to protect itself from Ottoman or Saudi domination. The borders between Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Iraq were drawn up in the 1920s and 30s and Kuwait became a sovereign country in 1961 when the Treaty ended. Britain retained a military presence in the country until 1971. Kuwait gained a written constitution in 1962 and the first elections to a National Assembly were held in 1963.

In 1990 Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait, abolished Kuwaiti sovereignty and proclaimed the country a province of Iraq. An international coalition force mounted a military campaign, Operation Desert Storm, which expelled Iraqi forces in 1991.

Rebuilding the country after the war was a priority throughout the 1990s. In 2003 the National Assembly rejected a proposal to give Kuwaiti women the right to vote. Shaikh Sabah, who became prime minister in July 2003, has expressed an intention to force the Assembly to return to this issue.

Elections to the National Assembly were held on 5 July 2003 in which Islamists won 21 of the 50 seats, government supporters won 14, Liberals won 3 and Independents won 12. On 13 July the Amir of Kuwait appointed Shaikh Sabah al-Ahmad al-Jaber al-Sabah as prime minister, thus separating the post from the role of heir to the throne for the first time since independence.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the constitution legislative power is vested in the Amir and the 50-member National Assembly, and executive power in the Amir and the Cabinet. The electorate consists of all Kuwaiti male nationals over 21 whose families have lived in the Emirate since before 1921. There are no political parties. There are six Governorates: Capital, Hawalli, Ahmadi, Al-Jahrah, Al-Farwaniya and Al-Asimah

The Army has 368 main battle tanks, 321 armoured personnel carriers and 450 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Navy has ten patrol and coastal vessels, based at Ras al-Qalaya. The Air Force has 81 combat aircraft and 20 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 10.7 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 15,500: Army 11,000, Navy 2,000, Air Force 2,500; Paramilitaries 6,600

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Kuwait has around nine per cent of the world's oil reserves and proven reserves of around 98 billion barrels. In the financial year 2002–2003, Kuwait earned US$10 billion from oil revenues. Income from foreign reserves and investment is also high. Petroleum accounts for 95 per cent of export revenues and 80 per cent of government income.

The country has a very large immigrant labour force. About 80 per cent of workers are non-Kuwaiti and are mainly comprised of Pakistanis, Indians, Iranians and a significant number of North Americans and Europeans.

Non-oil exports, mainly to Asian countries and the Indian sub-continent, have included chemical fertilisers, ammonia and other chemicals and metal pipes and building materials. Re-exports to neighbouring states traditionally accounted for a major proportion of non-oil exports but were brought to a halt by the Iraqi invasion. Major trading partners are Japan, the USA, the UAE, Saudi Arabia and Western Europe.

GNI – US$37,400 million (2001); US$18,270 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 13.0 per cent (1998)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 77 per cent (1997); secondary 65 per cent (1997); tertiary 19 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Kuwaiti newspapers are far more outspoken in their coverage of politics than newspapers in neighbouring Arab nations. KUNA (Kuwaiti News Agency) is the official media agency, Kuwait Times the English language daily newspaper and Radio Kuwait is the state radio broadcaster.

Kuwait is strongly influenced by Bedouin artistic traditions that include the Samri, Khamari and Tanboura; all traditional dances central to family and social occasions. The Dar al-Athar al-Islamiyah (Museum of Islamic Art) in Kuwait City houses a collection of over 20,000 rare Islamic artefacts.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Kyrgyzstan (formerly Kyrgyzia) lies between the Tien Shan mountain range in the north-east and the Pamir-Alai mountains to the south-west. Elevation extremes range from 7,439 m (Jengish Chokusu) at the highest point to 132 m (Kara-Darya) at the lowest. The principal rivers are the Naryn and the Chu.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

After a long period under Mongol, Chinese and Persian rule, the Kyrgyz became part of the Russian Empire in the 1860s and 1870s.

Kyrgyzstan became a constituent part of the Soviet Union in 1924, and became a full republic of the Soviet Union in 1936. Reform in the Soviet Union in the 1980s provoked an upsurge in nationalism in Kyrgyzstan, and agitation for independence. The Uzbek minority around the city of Osh, began to demand autonomy in 1989, and suggested that nearby Uzbekistan annex the region. This led to serious rioting in June 1990 between ethnic Uzbeks and Kyrgyz, in the city of Osh.

The demise of the Soviet Union was followed by the election of President Akayev in 1990, the only post-communist Central Asian leader who had not previously been head of the local communist party. Presidential elections held in 2000 were deemed to have failed to comply with democratic standards by the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) which monitored them. There have been persistent rumours of manipulation by President Akayev.

Following anti-government demonstrations in March 2003 in which five people were killed, Prime Minister Kurmanbek Bakiyev and his government resigned on 22 May. Nikolay Tanayev was confirmed as the new prime minister by parliament on 30 May and his cabinet was approved on 13 June 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is the President directly elected for a five-year term renewable once only. There is a bicameral legislature composed of a 60-member Legislative Assembly and a 45-member People's Assembly, both of which serve for five-year terms. In February 2003, amendments to the constitution gave President Akayev a right of veto over many acts of legislation. The President appoints the Prime Minister and the other members of the Government. The Assembly of the People of Kyrgyzstan, which comprises the leaders of the Republic's ethnic communities, was designated a consultative body in January 1997.

HEAD OF STATE

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Co-operating closely with the World Bank and the IMF since 1994, Kyrgyzstan has brought inflation down from 772 per cent in 1993 to 25.6 per cent in 1997. A privatisation programme suspended in 1997 because of fears that assets were being sold too cheaply, was re-instated in 1998. The Russian financial crisis pushed GDP growth down to 6 per cent per annum between 1996 and 1998.

Kyrgyzstan has a highly agrarian economy: agriculture represents 40 per cent of GDP. Though the country does not enjoy vast amounts of natural resources, there are deposits of gold, iron ore and mercury. However, debt remains large: 40 per cent of GDP in 1999 was spent on debt repayments.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Kyrgyzstan has 18,500 km of highways and 420 km of railways. There are 600 km of waterways and 61 airports.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are a large number of newspapers currently in circulation, several of which have affiliations to particular political parties. There are also a number of private and independent television and radio broadcasters. However, there have been attempts by the government in recent years to control the press and broadcasters. Any publications by Islamist fundamentalists are banned in Kyrgyzstan.

Until the 1930s the Kyrgyz language had an oral tradition of literature which included the epic poem Manas, which tells the history of the Kyrgyz people. One of the country's best-known writers is Chingiz Aitmatov (b. 1928).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The kingdom of Lane Xang 'the Land of a Million Elephants' was founded in the 14th century but broke up at the beginning of the 16th century into the separate kingdoms of Luang Prabang and Vientiane and the principality of Champassac, which came under French protection in 1893.

Japanese occupation during the Second World War spurred a Lao nationalist movement which proclaimed independence in 1945, though the French regained control of the country the following year. Full independence came in 1953. In 1964 the US began bombing Vietnamese forces using the Ho Chi Minh Trail in eastern Laos. This was supplemented by conflict between royalists and communists within Laos that was only resolved by a cease-fire in 1973.

In December 2000 the Lao People's Revolutionary Party (LPRP) celebrated 25 years in power. A general election to the enlarged 109-member National Assembly was held on 24 February 2002; all the candidates were approved by the LPRP, which won 108 seats with the remaining seat being won by an approved non-partisan candidate. The President, Prime Minister and Council of Ministers were confirmed in their posts by the National Assembly on 9 March 2002.

In 2003 Laos suffered some serious civil disturbances, including bombings and armed attacks on buses. Insurgents from the Hmong people have been blamed.

ECONOMY

The government of Laos is officially communist but has been forced to introduce some market reforms. Since 1986 a measure of private enterprise has been encouraged. The economy, however, was damaged during the Asian financial crisis which began in 1997.

Laos is still heavily dependent on subsistence agriculture which accounts for half of GDP and 80 per cent of employment. The seventh congress of the LPRP held in March 2001 defined the principal economic goal to be agricultural development. There is potential for increased hydroelectric power exports to Thailand and there are deposits of coal, tin, iron ore, gold, bauxite and lignite. Foreign investment in infrastructure began with the 1994 opening of the Friendship Bridge over the Mekong River border with Thailand which links road routes from Singapore to China.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Latvia is a flat, low-lying country that has its coast on the eastern shores of the Baltic Sea. Elevation extremes range from 312 m (Gaizinkalns) at the highest point to 0 m (Baltic Sea) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures in the capital city Riga range from  $-4^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $18^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Latvia came under Swedish occupation in the 16th century, and German control during the First World War. Independence was declared in 1918 but fighting continued to flare between the Bolsheviks and nationalists. The non-aggression pact between Germany and the Soviet Union saw Latvia come under Soviet control in the 1930s. This ended in 1941 when Germany invaded the Soviet Union and occupied Latvia.

Latvia suffered huge civilian losses during the Second World War, including the destruction of its large Jewish community. Many more Latvians died after the war in purges and deportations ordered by Stalin.

Latvian nationalist groups became increasingly powerful as communism began to crumble in the Soviet Union in the 1980s. A coup in the Soviet Union failed in 1991 but gave Latvians the chance to proclaim independence.

Elections were held in 1993, and throughout the 1990s Latvia was ruled by a number of brief coalition governments.

The New Era party (JL) became the largest party in the unicameral parliament (Saeima) in the general election held on 5 October 2002, winning 26 of the 100 seats. JL leader Einars Repse, was nominated prime minister and formed a coalition government led by the JL and including the Greens and Farmers Union (ZZS), For Fatherland and Freedom (TB-LNNK) and the First Party of Latvia (LPP). The prime minister and cabinet were approved by the Saeima by 21 November.

The LPP withdrew from the coalition on 28 January 2004, after the dismissal of LPP deputy prime minister Ainars Slesers. The government lost its parliamentary majority, and resigned on 5 February. Indulis Emsis of the ZZS was nominated prime minister on 20 February. His coalition cabinet, comprising members of the ZZS, LPP and the People's Party (TP), was approved by parliament on 9 March 2004.

Latvia joined the European Union in May 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive authority is vested in a Prime Minister and Cabinet of Ministers. Legislative power is exercised by the unicameral parliament (Saeima), which comprises 100 deputies each elected for four-year terms by proportional representation, with a five per cent threshold for parliamentary representation. The deputies elect a President of State, serving for a four-year term, who in turn appoints the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister appoints, and the Saeima approves, the Cabinet of Ministers.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Western economic markets take approximately 60 per cent of Latvian goods. The largest trading partners are Germany, Sweden and the UK. Most of Latvia's timber products go to the UK.

Latvia plans to join the European Monetary Union in 2005 and to adopt the euro in 2008, however, progress may be hampered by its GDP per capita, which is the lowest of the countries that joined the EU in 2004.

Important Latvian industries include the manufacture of buses, vans, cars, synthetic fibres, agricultural machinery, fertilisers, washing machines, radios, electronics, pharmaceuticals, processed foods and textiles.

Latvia is an agricultural exporter, specialising in cattle and pig breeding, dairy farming and crops, including sugar beet, flax, cereals and potatoes. In 2001, 13.5 per cent of the population was employed in agriculture, which accounted for 4.1 per cent of GDP. Natural resources include limestone, gypsum, peat and timber. Transit, services and banking are also large sectors with services contributing 70.6 per cent of GDP in 2001.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Lebanon forms part of the 'fertile crescent' – a region of well-irrigated land that connects Egypt to Iraq. Elevation extremes range from 3,088 m (Qurnat as Sawda') at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. Lebanon has a Mediterranean climate and average annual temperatures of 13°C in January and 29°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Lebanon came under the influence of the Ottoman empire in the 16th century, who were the first to unite the area into what is now modern Lebanon. Following the collapse of the Ottoman empire at the end of the First World War, Lebanon came under French rule, and independence came during the Second World War.

The 1943 National Pact gave Lebanon a complicated system of government designed to give a measure of power to all religions. By 1975 tensions between Christians and Muslims pushed Lebanon into civil war. The first war lasted from between 1975 to 1976 and pitted a coalition of Christian groups against Druze and Muslim militias, as well as the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) which had been expelled from neighbouring Jordan.

Fighting continued despite the presence of Syrian troops in the country, until 1982 when Israel, in an attempt to destroy the PLO, invaded.

Fighting continued throughout the 1980s. The kings of Morocco and Saudi Arabia and the President of Algeria met in 1989 to attempt to resolve the crisis. A seven-point peace plan was agreed and a cease-fire followed. Syria's withdrawal from Lebanon was negotiated, as was a plan to rid the Lebanese political system of religious influence but warfare resumed after the assassination of Rene Moawad, who had been elected president by a meeting of Lebanese deputies.

A fragile peace finally arrived in 1991, after 16 years of civil war. Elections in 1992 were peaceful but were boycotted by some communities. Further elections took place in 1996, and in 1998 the Lebanese Parliament voted General Emile Lahoud as president. The general election held on 27 August and 3 September 2000 was won by supporters of Rafik Hariri, who had been prime minister from 1992 to 1998. Hariri was appointed prime minister by President Lahoud on 23 October 2000 and named his cabinet, composed equally of Christians and Muslims, on 26 October. Hariri resigned with his entire cabinet on 15 April 2003, although he remained as 'caretaker' prime minister at the request of President Lahoud and was re-appointed on 17 April. A new cabinet headed by Hariri was approved on 30 April. Lahoud's presidency was due to end in November 2004.

SOUTH LEBANON

Israel invaded Lebanon and besieged Beirut in 1982. The Israeli army withdrew in 1985, but continued to occupy parts of south Lebanon with the Israeli Defence Force and a proxy army, the South Lebanon Army (SLA). Israel's intention was to create a buffer zone to stop attacks from the group Hezbollah which is financed, armed and trained by Syria and Iran. Israel withdrew from south Lebanon in May 2000 and the UN established a 'Blue Line' demarcating the border between Israel and Lebanon. While there have been continual breaches of the border, and the area remains tense, the two sides have not returned to all-out fighting.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The National Covenant (1943) is characterised by the division of power between the religious communities. The Executive comprises the President, Prime Minister and Cabinet. The President is elected by the National Assembly for a non-renewable six-year term and must be a Maronite Christian. The Prime Minister is appointed following consultation between the President and National Assembly and must be a Sunni Muslim. The 128-member unicameral National Assembly comprises equal numbers of Christians and Muslims although the speaker must be a Shia Muslim. Political parties are banned.

The constitution was amended on 15 October 1998 to allow the election of Gen. Lahoud as President. Serving State officials had previously been prohibited from standing for the presidency.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In the aftermath of the war foreign exchange was provided by remittances from Lebanese working abroad, banking services, manufacturing and farm exports, and international aid. In 1993 the Lebanese government launched 'Horizon 2000', a US$20 billion reconstruction programme. The initiative raised GDP by eight per cent in the following year, though this slowed to three per cent by 2003. The plan was also successful in reducing inflation. The government borrowed heavily to fund reconstruction, and debt is now a serious problem. Receipts from donor nations stabilised government finances throughout 2002 and 2003. Agriculture is an important part of the Lebanese economy and provides much of the country's exports. Principal exports include foodstuffs, chemical products, jewellery, machinery and electrical goods, textiles, metals and metal products, paper and paper products, and vehicles.

Principal imports are foodstuffs, machinery and electrical equipment, vehicles, chemical products, mineral ores, and metals and metal products. There is a free-trade agreement with Syria.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Lesotho mainly comprises a highland plateau region with some hilly and mountainous areas. Elevation extremes range from 3,482 m (Thabana Ntlenyana) at the highest point to 1,400 m (the junction of the Orange and Makhaleng rivers) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area was organised into a single territory by Moshoeshoe the Great around 1820. Later in the 19th century the Sotho people came under pressure from both the expanding Zulu nation and Europeans (the Boers) to give up land. In 1868, after fighting two wars with the Europeans, pressure from the Boers forced the Sotho to seek protection from the British government.

Basotholand, as it was known under British rule, gained independence in 1966, and was renamed Lesotho. Chief Jonathan was the first prime minister, but when he faced the country's first elections in 1970 and feared that his Basotho National Party might be defeated, he declared a state of emergency and suspended the constitution.

Lesotho was thereafter ruled by a Military Council until 1993. The Basotho Congress Party (BCP), who had contested the earlier, aborted elections, won a landslide victory. Serious civil disturbances following the ousting of the former military rulers led to another suspension of the constitution and dissolution of parliament. Mediation from the presidents of South Africa, Zimbabwe and Botswana restored democratic rule in 1994, and in 1995 the monarch, King Moshoeshoe II returned from the exile imposed on him by the Military Council in 1990.

Lesotho continued to be troubled by civil violence, and in 1998, following particularly severe disturbances, the Government established an Interim Political Authority to review the constitution. Elections in May 2002 returned the Lesotho Congress for Democracy to power.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

In September 1999 it was announced that the first past the post electoral system would be replaced by a new system incorporating a degree of proportional representation and that the number of seats in the National Assembly would be increased by 40 to 120.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Lesotho's economy is closely linked to South Africa, to which it exports its primary natural resource – water. Lesotho is self-sufficient in power from hydroelectricity facilities, however, Lesotho's economy is also reliant on remittances from miners working in South Africa. Tourism is being developed, especially in the Highlands.

The USA's African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) has gone some way to ameliorate rising unemployment by creating 45,000 jobs in the garment industry, and making Lesotho the second largest exporter in sub-Saharan Africa of garments to the USA. Subsistence agriculture continues to be the largest sector of Lesotho's economy engaging 86 per cent of the resident population. Around 35 per cent of the male labour force is employed in South Africa.

GNP – US$1,181 million (2000); US$580 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.5 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 6.1 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$735 million (2002)

IMPORTS – US$779 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$194 million (1998)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Exports to UK	1,116,000	516,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

A surfaced road links Maseru to several of the main lowland towns. The mountainous areas are linked by surfaced, gravelled and rough earth roads and tracks. Other roads link border towns in South Africa with the main towns in Lesotho. Maseru is also connected by rail with the main Bloemfontein-Natal line managed by South African Railways. There are a number of scheduled international air services in operation.

EDUCATION

There are over 1,200 primary and over 180 secondary schools, with emphasis being laid on agricultural and vocational education. The National University of Lesotho at Roma was established in 1975.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 27.6 per cent; (f) 6.4 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 31 per cent (1997); tertiary 2 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Lesotho has a mixture of state run and private media. Radio is the most important medium and reforms established in 1998 prompted the growth of a number of commercial stations. State run Radio Lesotho is the only national station. Lesotho's press publishes a range of weekly papers in both Sesotho and English.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Liberia sits just north of the equator, on the west African coast. There are low mountains in the north-east and rolling coastal plains in the west. Elevation extremes range from 1,380 m (Mount Wuteve) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Sea) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures are an almost constant 28°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The establishment of an independent state for freed slaves by the USA in 1847 began the history of the only west African country not to be colonised.

Throughout the 1980s Liberia's human rights record was poor; arbitrary rule and economic collapse led rebels from Charles Taylor's National Patriotic Forces of Liberia (NPFL) to revolt against the incumbent president Samuel Doe, a revolution ensued, which swiftly descended into civil war. In 1989 Taylor's troops overran the country, captured Doe and executed him. The fighting, however, took on an ethnic character with the Krahn and Mandingo peoples of the Armed Forces of Liberia (AFL) battling the Gio and Mano dominated NPFL.

The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) sent a peace-keeping force, ECOMOG, into the country in 1990 (ECOMOG forces, though drawn from across ECOWAS members, were dominated by Nigerian soldiers). ECOMOG forces fought alongside Liberian dissident forces in an attempt to oust Taylor. Sierra Leone allowed these forces to mount attacks on Liberia from its territory.

A UN arms embargo was imposed in 1992 but, despite a number of peace initiatives and cease-fires between 1991 and 1996, Liberia continued to suffer war, almost continuous political and economic instability, and human rights abuses.

A peace agreement in 1996 was signed in Abuja, Nigeria. The agreement was brought about by pressure from ECOWAS, and resulted in elections in 1997. Liberians, fearing that Charles Taylor would simply restart the civil war if he lost, gave Taylor 80 per cent of the vote.

This result did not address the causes of fighting in Liberia, and rebel groups continued to destabilise the country. Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD) were operating in the north of the country and were supported by Guinea. LURD were joined in the east of the country by Movement of Democracy for Liberia (MODEL). Both militia groups aimed to depose Taylor. By June 2003 MODEL controlled much of the east of the country and LURD were closing in on the capital, Monrovia. ECOWAS again sponsored peace talks, and these coincided with Sierra Leone's attempts to indict Charles Taylor for war crimes and crimes against humanity for his part in the Sierra Leonean civil war.

UN Security Council Resolution 1497 gave Nigerian forces a mandate to enter the country. Charles Taylor went into exile in Nigeria, and his vice president Moses Blah formed an interim government.

The International Contact Group on Liberia, launched in New York in September 2002, brought together a number of African and European countries, as well as the USA, to mediate between Liberia's different factions.

In September 2003 all factions in the Liberian conflict signed the Comprehensive Peace Agreement which created the National Transitional Government of Liberia (NTGL). Gyude Bryant, a former businessman leads the government which is made up of LURD, MODEL, Charles Taylor's forces and Liberian civil society. All these factions agreed to work towards elections in 2005. The UN Security Council passed resolution 1509 in September 2003 which established a peacekeeping force, UNMIL, of 15,000 soldiers to be deployed in Liberia.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Head of State is the Executive President, directly elected for a six-year term, who appoints the Cabinet. There is a bicameral legislature consisting of a 64-member lower chamber, the House of Representatives, which is directly elected for a six-year term, and a 26-member Senate, elected for a nine-year term. Under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement a 76-member National Transitional Legislative Assembly (NTLA) was inaugurated on 14 October 2003.

HEAD OF STATE

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The civil war of 1980–2002, has devastated Liberia's economy. Liberia is rich in timber, gold, diamonds and rubber, though the UN has imposed sanctions on the export of timber and diamonds. Agriculture centres around timber, rubber, coffee, cocoa, rice, cassava (tapioca), palm oil, sugarcane, bananas; sheep and goats. Much of the population has no mains electricity or running water. Since the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, foreign aid has greatly increased.

GDP – US$759 million (1998); US$248 per capita (2000)
ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.7 per cent (1998)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$2,032 million (2000)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£6,331,000	£4,966,000
Exports to UK	3,119,000	14,803,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The artificial harbour and free port of Monrovia opened in 1948. There are 10,300 km of roads, of which 628 km are surfaced, and 490 km of railway track. There are nine ports of entry, including three river ports. Robertsfield International Airport and Spriggs Payne airfield are currently being used for flights to other West African countries.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Radio is the main medium for news in Liberia. Many stations were shut down under former President Charles Taylor's rule, however, there is now a growing number of stations. Liberia has no television service.

A department of Indiana University in the USA has recently begun work on the 'Liberian Collections Project', an archive of official documents, taped recordings of traditional dance music and various artistic and cultural objects including carved masks and clothing.

LIBYA

Al-Jamāhīriyya Al-'Arabiyya Al-Lībiyya Ash-Sha'biyya Al-Ishtirākīyya – Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 16 (2001)

HIV / AIDS ADULT PREVALENCE – 0.2 per cent (2001)

DEATH PENALTY – Yes

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.1 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 3 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Libya's terrain is low-lying and arid, much of which is desert. There are some mountainous regions in the south and north-east of the country. Elevation extremes range from 2,267 m (Bikku Bitti) at the highest point to -47 m (Sabkhat Guzayyil) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Tripoli can range from 13°C in January to 31°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Libya has a long history of being conquered – Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Greeks, Romans, Vandals, and Byzantines periodically invaded, occupied and settled in Libya. It came under Arab influence in the seventh century AD. Between the sixteenth century and 1911, when the country was conquered by Italy, Libya was part of the Ottoman Empire. The Italians, after fierce resistance, made Libya a colony.

King Idris I declared independence on 24 December 1951, and Libya became the first country to achieve independence through a UN resolution.

The discovery of oil in Libya made the country wealthy but did not bring stability, and Idris was deposed in a military coup in 1 September 1969. The Revolutionary Command Council (RCC) abolished the monarchy and proclaimed the country the Libyan Arab Republic.

Colonel Muammar al-Gaddafi eventually became leader of the RCC and Head of State.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Colonel Gaddafi embarked on a programme for a brand of Islamic socialism and sought to export his revolutionary theories abroad. This brought him into increasing enmity with Western governments. In 1986 US war planes bombed targets around Tripoli and Benghazi in retaliation for a terrorist attack on a Berlin nightclub in which two American soldiers died.

A bomb on a Pan Am flight over Lockerbie, Scotland in 1988 was widely believed to be the responsibility of Libya, and the country's isolation deepened. Sanctions imposed by the UN were only relaxed when Gaddafi agreed to give up the suspects in the Lockerbie case to the International Court of Justice in 1998. In 2000 the trial of the two accused Libyans, Abdelbaset al-Megrahi and Khalifa Fhimah, began. In January 2001 al-Megrahi was found guilty of the bombing and sentenced to a minimum of 27 years in a Scottish prison. Fhimah was found not guilty and released. In August 2003, an initial compensation payment of US$27,000 million was agreed by the Libyan authorities. However, conditions were applied to the payment including the lifting of UN sanctions.

Since the 2003 General People's Congress, Gaddafi has made further moves to end Libya's isolation, such as economic reform to open Libya to international markets. In March 2004 UK Prime Minister Tony Blair met with Colonel Gaddafi following the Libyan leader's promise to allow UN nuclear weapons inspectors into the country.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

At a local level authority is vested in about 1,500 Basic and 14 Municipal People's Congresses which appoint Popular Committees to execute policy. Officials of these congresses and committees, together with representatives from unions and other organisations, form the 750-member General People's Congress, which normally meets twice each year. In addition, a number of extraordinary sessions are held throughout the year. This is the highest policy-making body in the country. The General People's Congress appoints its own General Secretariat and the General People's Committee, whose members head the Government departments which execute policy at national level. The Secretary of the General People's Committee has functions similar to those of a Prime Minister.

DEFENCE

The Army has about 800 main battle tanks, 1,000 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 945 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has one submarine, one frigate, nine patrol and coastal vessels, and seven armed helicopters at seven bases. The Air Force has 400 combat aircraft and 41 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 3.8 per cent of GDP
(2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 76,000: Army 45,000, Navy
8,000, Air Force 23,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – One to two years
(selective)

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is heavily dependent on the oil industry which remains in state control. Oil accounts for 95 per cent of total exports, 30 per cent of GDP and 75 per cent of revenue. Libya has a small population, and this gives the country a comparatively high per capita GNI. UN sanctions were lifted in 2003 and Libya has applied for WTO membership. In March 2004, the Royal Dutch/Shell Group announced that a preliminary agreement had been signed in Libya to develop the country's gas resources. There have also been moves to diversify the economy away from such large-scale reliance on oil. The manufacturing and construction sectors, which account for 20 per cent of GDP, have been expanded to include the production of petrochemicals, iron, steel and aluminium. Environmental conditions mean Libya does not have a large agricultural sector and imports 75 per cent of its food.

Principal exports are wool, cattle, sheep and horses, olive oil, and hides and skins. Principal imports are machinery and transport equipment, foodstuffs, livestock, and most construction materials and consumer goods.

Italy is Libya's main trading partner, other trading partners include the UK, France and Germany.

GNI – US$6,700 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 0.6 per cent
(1998)

IMPORTS – US$4,397 (2001)

EXPORTS – US$8,915 (2001)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$2,974 million surplus (1999)

Current Account – US$2,136 million surplus (1999)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£215,705,000	£241,056,000
Exports to UK	167,037,000	202,093,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are about 19,300 km of roads; the coastal road running from the Tunisian frontier through Tripoli to Benghazi, Tubruq and the Egyptian border, serves the main population centres. Main roads also link the provincial centres, and the oil-producing areas of the south with the coastal towns. Libya has had no railways in operation since 1965, though there are plans to reconstruct some systems.

EDUCATION

There are nine years of compulsory education. The Libyan education system allows for six years each at primary and secondary level.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 9.2 per cent; (f) 31.7 per cent
(2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 49.2 per cent (1997); tertiary 49.9 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The state maintains strict control over the media. Great Jamahiriya TV is the state run television broadcaster.

Berber and Tuareg folk culture has a strong influence on Libya. The rock paintings at Tadrart Acacus are believed to be at least 14,000 years old and in 1985 this area was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

LIECHTENSTEIN

Fürstentum Liechtenstein – Principality of Liechtenstein

AREA – 160 sq. km. Neighbours: Austria, Switzerland

POPULATION – 33,863 (2002). The language of the principality is Standard German. An Alemannic dialect is in general use. About 65.8 per cent of the population are Liechtensteiners, the remainder being mainly Swiss, Austrians and Germans.

Roman Catholicism is the religion of 80.4 per cent of the population; there is a Protestant minority

CAPITAL – Vaduz (population, 5,038, 2002)

CURRENCY – Swiss franc of 100 rappen (or centimes)

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Oben Am Jungen Rhein (Up On The Young Rhine)

NATIONAL DAY – 15 August

NATIONAL FLAG – Equal horizontal bands of blue over

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 79 (2001)

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 6.85
(2003)

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 10 (2001)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1987)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.2 per cent
(1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 212 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes in Liechtenstein range from 2,599 m (Garauspitz) at the highest point to 466 m (Ruggeller Riet) at the lowest. There is heavy snowfall in winter and average annual temperatures range from 0°C in January to 21°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Liechtenstein became an independent principality of the Holy Roman Empire in 1719 under the Emperor Charles VI, although there had been a state within the present boundaries since 1434. The French emperor Napoleon occupied the country but left in 1815, and the country declared permanent neutrality in 1868. Economic decline in the years following the First World War forced Liechtenstein into a customs and monetary union with Switzerland in 1921. Neither of the World Wars saw Liechtenstein's neutrality violated and the country became extremely prosperous as an international finance sector after the Second World War. Liechtenstein's monarchy has resisted attempts at modernisation. Prince Hans Adam II, who ascended the throne in 1989, threatened to remove himself as head of state when the government suggested a reduction in his powers in 1995.

The Patriotic Union (VU) and the Progressive Citizens' Party (FBP) governed the country in coalition from 1938 until the VU gained power in a general election of 1997. In the general election of 11 February 2001 the FBP won 13 seats and this new government took office on 5 April.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Liechtenstein is a constitutional monarchy. The Cabinet is appointed by the Prince on the advice of Parliament and consists of a head of Government and four ministers. The 25-member (Landtag), unicameral Parliament, serves for a four-year term. There is a threshold of eight per cent for parties to gain representation. The 19 March 2003 referendum approved constitutional reforms which would give the Monarch increased power, including authority to dismiss the Government and appoint an interim Prime Minister. The Monarch would also not be subject to the authority of the Constitutional Court.

HEAD OF STATE

HSH The Prince of Liechtenstein, Hans Adam II, born 14 February 1945; succeeded 13 November 1989
Heir, HSH Prince Alois, born 11 June 1968

SELECTED GOVERNMENT MEMBERS as at July 2004

Economy, Health, Social Matters, Hansjörg Frick

Foreign Affairs, Ernst Walch

Interior, Culture and Sports, Environment, Alois Ospelt

BRITISH AMBASSADOR, Basil Eastwood, CMG, resident at Bern, Switzerland

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Liechtenstein has a highly diversified economy with a light industrial base.

In 1991 Liechtenstein became a member of the European Free Trade Association, and joined the European Economic Area on 1 May 1995.

GNI – US$40,000 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.1 per cent (1998)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£4,731,000	£4,705,000
Exports to UK	23,799,000	27,580,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Liechtenstein has 250 km of highways, 18.5 km of railways, but no airports.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Liechtenstein relies on foreign broadcasters for television. Circulation for its two newspapers, Liechtenstein News and Liechtensteiner Vaterland, is under 10,000. Due in part to its small size, Liechtenstein's cultural identity has been profoundly influenced by its surrounding neighbours. Joseph Rheinburger (1839–1901) is perhaps the country's most famous composer.

LITHUANIA

Lietuvos Respublika – Republic of Lithuania

AREA – 64,800 sq. km. Neighbours: Latvia (north), Belarus (east and south), Poland and the Kaliningrad region of the Russian Federation (south-west)

POPULATION – 3,689,000 (2001): 80.6 per cent

Lithuanian, 8.7 per cent Russian, 7 per cent Polish, 1.6 per cent Belarusian, 2.1 per cent other minority ethnic groups. The majority are Roman Catholic (79 per cent), with Russian Orthodox (4.1 per cent) and Lutheran minorities. Lithuanian is the state language

CAPITAL – Vilnius (population, 542,287, 2001 estimate)

MAJOR CITIES – Kaunas; Klaipeda

CURRENCY – Litas of 100 centas, pegged to the euro, €1 = 3.45 litas

URBAN POPULATION – 69 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Lithuania contains over 2,800 lakes, many of which lie in the east of the country. Elevation extremes range from 292 m (Kalnas) at the highest point to 0 m (Baltic Sea) at the lowest. The climate is mainly continental and average annual temperatures range from  $-3^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $17^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Lithuania kept its pagan traditions for far longer than any other European country and only became fully Christian in the 15th century, when the Samogitians and the Aukstaitiai, the two main ethnic groups in the region, were converted.

In the 17th century much of Lithuania came under Russian rule. The country joined with Poland in rebelling against Russian domination twice in the 19th century, and it wasn't until 1861 that Lithuanians were emancipated.

During the First World War Lithuania was occupied by Germany, and Lithuanians took the end of the war as an opportunity to declare independence. This was short-lived, however, as a newly independent Poland occupied the country in 1919.

Lithuania was invaded and occupied when Germany invaded the Soviet Union during the Second World War. In 1944, the Soviet Union recaptured the country and confirmed its annexation.

Sajudis (The Movement) was Lithuania's pro-democracy group which formed as the Soviet Union began to collapse in the late 1980s, and the country declared independence, this time from the USSR, on 11 March 1990.

The government formed after the October 2000 general election was a minority-centre right coalition led by Rolandas Paksas. The coalition collapsed in June 2001 and Algirdas Brazauskas of the Social Democratic Party (SD), who had been Lithuania's last communist-era ruler and subsequently its president, formed a coalition government with the New Union (Social Liberals) (NS(SL)), whose withdrawal from the previous government had caused it to collapse. The new government was appointed on 5 July 2001.

Rolandas Paksas was elected president on 5 January 2003 but was later embroiled in allegations of corruption. Paksas was impeached on 6 April 2004. Valdas Adamkus was elected president in June 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1992 Constitution, the Head of State composed of a directly elected President, whose five-year term of office is renewable once only. Executive authority is vested in the Government, consisting of the Prime Minister, who is appointed by the President with the approval of the unicameral parliament (Seimas), and ministers appointed upon the recommendation of the Prime Minister.

Legislative power is exercised by the Seimas, composed of 141 members directly elected for four-year terms. Seventy-one members are elected in first past the post constituencies and 70 by proportional representation, with a five per cent threshold for representation. The constitution bans an alignment of Lithuania with any post-Soviet eastern alliance.

Air Force 1,150; Paramilitaries 14,600

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Attempts to transform Lithuania into a free-market economy directly after the fall of communism pushed the country into deep recession. Recovery in the mid-1990s was hampered by the Russian financial crisis of 1998 when Lithuania lost 20 per cent of its export market. Recovery has come courtesy of exports to the European Union, though unemployment remains high.

The EU now takes 50 per cent of Lithuania's exports and large-scale privatisation has led to Lithuania being confirmed as a functioning market economy by the European Commission. Lithuania joined the World Trade Organisation in 2001.

Lithuania has a diverse economy and industries include the mining and cutting of amber, metal-cutting machine tools, electric motors, television sets, refrigerators and freezers, petroleum refining, shipbuilding, furniture making, textiles, food processing, fertilizers, agricultural machinery, optical equipment, electronic components and computers.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There were 71,375 km of roads in 2000; there is a relatively well-developed railway system of 2,898 km running east to west and north to south and linking the major towns with Vilnius and Klaipeda, the main international port. Vilnius has an international airport.

EDUCATION

Lithuania re-established a national education system in 1990. Education is free of charge and compulsory from seven to 16 years, with the system comprising elementary schools (four years), nine-year schools (five years), and secondary schools (three years). The language of instruction is predominantly Lithuanian, but there are also Russian and Polish schools. There are 105 vocational schools and 65 colleges. Lithuania has eight universities and seven other institutes of higher education. Vilnius University, founded in 1579, is one of the oldest universities in eastern Europe.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 0.3 per cent; (f) 0.5 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – secondary 98 per cent (1997); tertiary 31 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The largest selling daily newspapers are Lietuvos Rytas and Lietuvos Aidas. There is a mix of public and private television broadcasters operating in Lithuania. BTV is the largest commercial company while LTV is the publicly run station.

Lithuanian language is divided into Low Lithuanian, common in the west, and High Lithuanian, common throughout the rest of the country. Famous Lithuanians include the feminist writer and activist Emma Goldman (1869–1940) and the artist Mikalojus Ciurlionis (1875–1911) whose work can be seen in the Ciurlionis Museum in the city of Kaunas.

LUXEMBOURG

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Ardennes, in the north of the country, form part of the Natural Germano-Luxembourg Park, which extends east into Germany. The south of the country is mainly fertile farmland and in the east is the wine-growing region of the Moselle Valley. Elevation extremes range from 559 m (Burgplatz) at the highest point to 133 m (Moselle River) at the lowest. The climate is mild and average temperatures range from 1°C in January to 22°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Count Sigefroid of Ardennes built a castle in Luxembourg in AD 963 and so established the Duchy of Luxembourg. Contested throughout the Middle Ages, and occupied by Napoleon until 1814, Luxembourg became autonomous under the Treaty of London in 1867 and declared itself neutral in international affairs.

German occupation during the Second World War prompted Luxembourg to give up its neutrality and join NATO and the United Nations to become one of the members of the Benelux group of countries. Luxembourg was a founder member of the European Economic Community in 1957.

Claude Juncker's Christian Social Party (CSV) won the legislative elections of 13 June 2004 with 36.1 per cent of the vote. Of the other two main parties, the Luxembourg Socialist Workers' Party (LSWP) won 23.4 per cent of the vote while the Democratic Party (DP) won 16.1 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

There is a Chamber of 60 Deputies, elected by universal suffrage for five years. Legislation is submitted to the Council of State.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Luxembourg's economy is dominated by steel production and this continues to comprise a quarter of the country's exports. Luxembourg has diversified its industrial sector to include rubber and chemicals. The financial sector now comprises 22 per cent of the GDP. Strong growth, low inflation and low unemployment mean that Luxembourg enjoys an exceptionally high standard of living. The small agricultural sector consists mainly of family owned farms. GNI – US$17,570 million (2001); US$39,840 per capita (2001)

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Macedonia was ruled from Constantinople as part of the eastern Roman Empire from the fourth century AD. Slav peoples settled the area in the seventh century and it was absorbed into Bulgaria in the ninth century. Contested by Serbs, Bulgarians and Byzantines, Macedonia came under Ottoman rule after the defeat of the Serbs in 1389.

The Treaty of San Stefano in 1878, brought about by the Russian defeat of Turkey, saw Macedonia pass, once more, to Bulgaria. Western European powers, unhappy at the prospect of a powerful Bulgarian ally of Russia, forced the country to be handed back to Turkey. Such events prompted the creation of a Macedonian nationalist movement: the Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organisation (IMRO).

Macedonia continued to be traded between the regional powers during the Balkan wars of 1912 and 1913, and the country was split between Serbia and Greece and remained so until German invasion in the Second World War. The majority of the IMRO fought a guerrilla campaign against the occupying German Army, and Macedonia was rewarded after the war with full republic status within Yugoslavia.

The collapse of communism prompted Macedonians to vote in a referendum for full independence on 8 September 1991. Inter-ethnic rivalry grew during the 1990s. Macedonia's ethnic Albanian population complained of deprivation of full civil rights, especially in recognition of cultural and educational equality.

Instability in neighbouring Kosovo spilt over into Macedonia in 2001. Ethnic Albanian insurgents of the National Liberation Army (NLA) mounted a series of attacks on government forces and on 9 April 2001 the opposing sides signed the Stabilisation and Association Agreement (SAA), which aimed to promote dialogue between Macedonia's different ethnic populations. The situation deteriorated, however, and led to the creation of a large number of refugees and internally displaced persons from all ethnicities.

NATO negotiated a cease-fire in June 2001. Peace talks facilitated by the European Union, NATO, the USA and the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) produced an agreement that aimed to disarm the NLA while securing it an amnesty and facilitating a way to address Albanian grievances. Under the terms of the agreement 3,000 NATO troops were deployed in August.

The process met with a high level of success. Much of the NLA was disarmed, and a large number of displaced persons returned to their homes. On 31 March 2003 NATO forces handed over peace-keeping duties to an EU force: Operation Concordia.

The Macedonian Parliament passed a law on 8 March 2002 which secured amnesty for those involved in the conflict. The Ohrid Framework Agreement, which followed the peace talks, has resulted in the pledge of €307 million in aid to Macedonia.

Elections to the National Assembly (Sobranie) were held on 15 September 2002. The largest group in the Assembly was Together for Macedonia (ZMZ), a coalition of the Social Democratic Alliance of Macedonia (SDSM) and the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP), with 59 of the 120 seats. The Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organisation – Democratic Party for Macedonian National Unity (VMRO-DMPNE) won 34 seats. A multi-ethnic coalition government, including members of the SDSM, the LDP and the ethnic Albanian Democratic Union for Integration (BDI), was named on 31 October 2002 and took office the following day.

President Trajkovski died in an aircraft accident in February 2004 which prompted an election in April. Prime Minister Branko Crvenkovski was voted President with 42.5 per cent of the vote in round one (14 April) and 60.6 per cent of the vote in round two (28 April). Hari Kostov was elected Prime Minister.

ECONOMY

Macedonia has attempted to transform its economy into a market-orientated one and introduced privatisation; by 1997, 45 per cent of the economy was in private hands. In April 2000, the government sold 65 per cent of Macedonia's largest bank, the Stopanska Bank, and parliament voted to return property expropriated during the period under communist rule. An economic co-operation agreement was signed by Macedonia and Albania in July 1999, covering energy, mining and trade. In 2000 63 per cent of GDP was produced by the service industries, 25 per cent by industry, and 12 per cent by agriculture.

The main exports are textiles, tobacco, wine, zinc, iron ore and iron products. The main imports are oil, energy, telecommunications equipment, metal goods, foodstuffs and pharmaceuticals.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Madagascar lies 240 miles off the east coast of Africa. The climate is mainly tropical along the coastline and average temperatures range from 9°C in July to 29°C in January. Central Madagascar is mountainous and elevation extremes range from 2,876 m (Maromokotro) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Second World War brought an invasion from the British as they attempted to prevent Japan from using the island as an Indian Ocean base. Madagascar was returned to the French at the end of the war. A post-war nationalist movement attempted to break away from France in 1947. The revolt was brutally crushed, but nationalist agitation continued throughout the 1950s and resulted in independence in 1960.

The military took control in 1972 following civil disturbances and, though Admiral Didier Ratsiraka attempted to civilianise the government in 1975, he pushed the country into close alliance with the communist world, and a genuine democracy movement only started in the 1980s. In 1992 Madagascar adopted the Third Republic constitution and the island became a parliamentary democracy.

Professor Albert Zafy was voted President in the election of 1992–3. His government was ineffective and marked by power struggles with the National Assembly. Prime Minister Norbert Ratsirahonana introduced some important monetary reforms in 1996, which came at the same time as the National Assembly's removal of Zafy.

Subsequently elected as President, Ratsiraka consolidated his power in a referendum in 1998.

Presidential elections in December 2001 were marked by allegations from both sides of vote-rigging. The situation declined into civil unrest and near civil war. The UN, African Union and President of Senegal all tried to mediate for peace, but by May 2001 Marc Ravalomanana had consolidated his position ahead of Ratsiraka. On 17 April 2002, Madagascar's High Constitutional Court annulled the December election results and ordered a re-count. The re-count showed that Ravalomanana was the clear winner with 51.5 per cent of the vote. Ravalomanana was sworn into office on 6 May 2002.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is directly elected and serves a five-year term. The legislature is bicameral. The National Assembly is directly elected and comprises 150 members. The Senate comprises 90 members, of whom two-thirds are elected by an electoral college and one-third are nominated by the President.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Malawi lies in south-eastern Africa and much of its eastern border is formed by Lake Malawi. The northern and central regions are plateaux, and the south is mainly highlands. Elevation extremes range from 3,002 m (Sapitwa) at the highest point to 37 m (Shire River) at the lowest. There is a wet season from November to May and average temperatures range from 9°C in June to 30°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Between independence in 1964 and May 1994, Malawi (formerly Nyasaland), was governed by Dr Hastings Banda of the Malawi Congress Party (MCP) as a one-party state. Banda's rule was distinguished by corruption, human rights abuses and economic mismanagement. Banda declared himself 'President for life' in 1971. In the 1990s democratic movements began agitating for reform and, aided by pressure from abroad, Banda was forced to transfer to multi-party democracy following a referendum.

Bakili Muluzi was elected president in 1994 and committed himself to a programme of poverty alleviation and a campaign against corruption. Muluzi was re-elected as president in 1999 and in 2002 he attempted to redefine the constitution and award himself the 'Presidency for life'. The legislative elections of 20 May 2004 saw the MCP win 60 seats in the national assembly while the United Democratic Front (UDF) secured 49. A presidential election was held the same day and Bingu wa Mutharika of the UDF won 35.9 per cent of the vote. The cabinet was dissolved on 21 May 2004 and a cabinet reshuffle, dominated by the UDF, was named on 13 June, and took office on 16 June.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

There is a Cabinet consisting of the President and Ministers. The unicameral National Assembly, which usually meets three times a year, consists of 193 members elected by universal suffrage for a five-year term.

ECONOMY

Malawi is a largely agricultural country but the land is threatened by over-population, deforestation and poor farming methods. Rising levels of silt threaten fish stocks in Lake Nyasa. Some 85 per cent of the workforce are engaged in agriculture and 90 per cent of these are subsistence farmers. Tobacco is a major industry and is supplemented by tea, sugar, sawmill products, cement and consumer goods. A number of light manufacturing industries have been established, mainly in agricultural processing, clothing/textiles and building materials. A prolonged drought caused famine throughout 2002–3.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Malaysia comprises the 11 states of peninsular Malaya plus Sabah and Sarawak. It occupies two distinct regions: the Malay peninsula, which extends from the isthmus of Kra to the Singapore Strait, and the north-western coastal area of the island of Borneo. Each is separated from the other by the South China Sea. Elevation extremes range from 4,100 m (Gunung Kinabalu) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. There are monsoon seasons in the south-west of the country from April to October and from October to February in the north-east. Average temperatures in Kuala Lumpur range from 22°C in January to 31°C in September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

An armed struggle for independence, which began in 1948, succeeded in 1957. The British colonies of Singapore, Sarawak, and Sabah (called North Borneo) joined a federation, thereby forming Malaysia in 1963. Singapore withdrew from the confederation in 1965, and Indonesia, which had opposed the formation of Malaysia, pressed its territorial claims in the east of the country. In 1963, Indonesian troops crossed into Malaysian territory. The confrontation was eventually resolved by the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Legislative elections on 21 March 2004 returned the Barisan Nasional party to power with 198 seats in the House of Representatives.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution provides for a federal Government and a degree of autonomy for the state Governments. It created a constitutional Supreme Head of the Federation (HM the Yang di-Pertuan Agong) and a Deputy Supreme Head (HRH Timbalan Yang di-Pertuan Agong) to be elected for a five-year term by the rulers from among their number. The Malay rulers are either chosen or succeed to their position in accordance with the custom of the particular state. In other states of Malaysia, choice of the head of state is at the discretion of the Yang di-Pertuan Agong after consultation with the Chief Minister of the state.

The Federal Parliament consists of two houses; the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate (Dewan Negara) consists of 69 members who serve a six-year term, 26 being elected by the Legislative Assemblies of the states (two from each) and 43 appointed by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong. The House of Representatives (Dewan Rakyat) consists of 193 members elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

According to the Constitution, each state shall have its own Constitution not inconsistent with the Federal Constitution, with the Ruler or Governor acting on the advice of an Executive Council appointed on the advice of the Chief Minister and a single-chamber Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assemblies are fully elected on the same basis as the Federal Parliament.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Maldives are a chain of coral atolls in the Indian Ocean, 643 km to the south-west of Sri Lanka. There are about 19 coral atolls comprising over 1,200 islands, 198 of which are inhabited. No point in the entire chain of islands is more than eight feet above sea-level. There is a tropical climate and daily temperatures rarely drop below 28°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Maldives converted to Islam in 1153 and Abu al-Barakat became the first of 84 sultans to rule the islands. An agreement was signed in 1887 which turned the Maldives into a British protectorate.

In 1932 the Maldives' first constitution was drawn up and in 1953 the sultanate was completely abolished and a republic was proclaimed. Within a year the new president was overthrown and the sultan returned to power. True independence was achieved in 1968 and the Maldives became a full member of the commonwealth in 1985. In the presidential elections of 2003, Maumoom Abdul Gayoom won 90.3 per cent of the vote. Legislative elections were due to take place in November 2004.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Tourism accounts for one-third of GDP. Over 90 per cent of government tax revenue comes from import duties and tourism-related taxes. Fishing accounts for six per cent of GDP. Agriculture and manufacturing have declined because of a dearth of labour and cultivatable land, and this means that most food must be imported. Industry concentrates on the manufacture of clothes, boat-building and handicrafts.

The terrain is mainly arid desert with some hills in the north-east. Elevation extremes range from 1,155 m (Hombori Tondo) at the highest point to 23 m (Sengal River) at the lowest. Average annual temperatures range from 17°C in January to 31°C in September.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In 1883 Mali became a French colony but remained undeveloped throughout the colonial period. It gained independence in 1960 and President Mobido Keita declared a single-party state. Keita was overthrown by a military coup in 1968. The army governed until 1991 when General Moussa Traore oversaw a transition to civilian Government. Alpha Oumar Konare was elected as president in 1992, however, he and his government were toppled by popular protests and rioting in the following year. Further elections in 1997 were suspected by opposition parties of being rigged, and the opposition refused to recognise the results.

Former military leader and independent candidate Amadou Toumani Touré won the presidential election held on 12 May 2002. In the legislative elections of 13 July 2002 the Alliance For Democracy in Mali (ADEMA) was initially thought to have retained the majority of seats in the Assembly after a low turnout with many void votes; this result was overturned on 10 August by the constitutional court which declared that the Spirit 2002 coalition had won the largest number of seats.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is based primarily on subsistence farming and animal husbandry, although gold and phosphate mining and cotton farming, processing and manufacture are also important. Mali remains one of the world's poorest countries but saw some positive signs in 2003 when a good harvest pushed up cotton production by 48 per cent and cereals by 34 per cent; furthermore a rise in the price of gold significantly increased revenue. However, conflict in Côte d'Ivoire cut Mali off from an important source of imports. In 2003 Mali was eligible for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Malta is an archipelago of six islands located in the Mediterranean sea; Malta, Gozo and Comino are the largest. Elevation extremes range from 253 m (Ta'Dmejrek) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is warm and temperate with average summer temperatures reaching 30°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Sovereign Military Order of Malta (known as the Knights of St John) ruled the Maltese Islands from 1530 until 1798. During this time, the fortified city of Valletta was built. Occupied by Napoleon then liberated by Britain, the island became a British colony in 1814, and Malta developed into a substantial naval base.

Malta became extremely strategically important in the Second World War. An attempt by Germany and Italy to capture the island saw it blockaded for five months and subjected to aerial bombardment. The entire population of the island was awarded the George Cross, the UK's highest award for civilian bravery, in 1942.

Malta gained independence in 1964 and voted in favour of joining the EU by referendum on 8 March 2003, by a narrow margin of 3.6 per cent or 19,500 votes.

Elections to the unicameral parliament of 65 members are held every five years by a system of proportional representation; to ensure that a party receiving more than 50 per cent of the votes obtains a parliamentary majority, extra seats may be allocated to that party.

Elections held on 12 April 2003 were again won by the Nationalist Party (PN) with 35 seats; the Labour Party, which opposed EU accession, gained 30 seats. The victory confirmed the pro-EU referendum result; Edward Fenech Adami was sworn into office as prime minister on 15

April 2003. In March 2004, Adami resigned his post to stand for the presidency. He was elected on 29 March 2004.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Malta has low unemployment, low inflation and consistent growth rates. The public sector accounts for a large proportion of revenue – 49 per cent of GDP. The country only produces 20 per cent of its own food, has limited access to fresh water (there is an increasing reliance on desalination) and has no domestic sources of energy. However, tourism is a successful part of the economy with over one million tourists visiting Malta in 2001. There is also a significant ship-building and ship-repair industry. The chief exports are processed food, electronics, textiles, and other manufactures. The principal imports are foodstuffs, fodder, beverages and tobacco, fuels, chemicals, textiles and machinery.

GNI – US$3,640 million (2001); US$9,210 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.7 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 2.4 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 5.3 per cent (1999)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$10,600 million (1999)

IMPORTS – US$2,592 million (2001)

EXPORTS – US$1,917 million (2001)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$511 million deficit (2002)

Current Account – US$180 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£227,041,000	£258,750,000
Exports to UK	171,705,000	186,994,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The main ports are Marsaxlokk and Valletta. There are 2,254 km of highways, no internal waterways or railways, and one airport.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge at all levels and compulsory between the ages of five and 16. There are ten junior lycées, 18 secondary schools and five centres catering for low achievers. The Junior college prepares students specifically for a university course. Tertiary education is available at the University of Malta. The Malta College of Arts, Science and Technology provides technical and vocational courses at post-secondary level.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 8.6 per cent; (f) 7.2 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1999); secondary 100 per cent (1999); tertiary 21 per cent (1999)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are seven major daily and weekly news publications.

Nicholas S. Cammillier (1798–1856) is perhaps Malta's most famous artist.

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Republic of the Marshall Islands

AREA – 181 sq. km

POPULATION – 70,822 (2001 estimate): 99 per cent are Micronesian. Almost half the population is under 15.

About 60 per cent of the population is concentrated on the two atolls of Majuro and Kwajalein. The population is Christian, primarily Protestant, but with a substantial Catholic minority. Marshallese and English are the official languages

CAPITAL – Dalap-Uliga-Darrit, on Majuro Atoll (population, 20,000)

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 5.03 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1986)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.3 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 343 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Marshall Islands consist of 29 atolls and five islands in the Pacific Ocean. There is a wet season from May to November and average temperatures range from 25°C in January to 31°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Marshall Islands were claimed by Spain in 1592 but were left undisturbed by the Spanish empire for 300 years. In 1886 the Marshall Islands formally became a German protectorate. In 1914 Japan took control of the islands on behalf of the allied powers. During the Second World War US armed forces seized the islands from the Japanese after intense fighting. In 1947 the USA entered into agreement with the UN Security Council to administer the Micronesia area, of which the Marshall Islands are a part, as the UN Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The islands became internally self-governing in 1979, and the US-UN trusteeship administration came to an end on 21 October 1986, when a Compact of Free Association between the USA and the Republic of the Marshall Islands came into effect. By this agreement the USA recognised the Republic of the Marshall Islands as a fully sovereign and independent state. The UN Security Council terminated the UN Trust Territory of the Pacific in relation to the Marshall Islands and recognised its independence in December 1990. A new Compact of Free Association was negotiated in 2003.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

The Compact of Free Association places full responsibility for defence of the Marshall Islands on the USA. The US Department of Defense retains control of islands within Kwajalein Atoll where it has a missile test range. In 2000 the government of the Marshall Islands petitioned the US for US$2.7 billion to fund medical care for victims of radiation from US nuclear tests in the islands in the 1940s and 1950s and to rectify environmental damage.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Republic is a democracy based on a parliamentary system of government. The Executive is headed by the President, who is elected by the Nitijela from among its members. The President serves for a four-year term. The legislature has one chamber, the Nitijela of 33 members, and the Council of Chiefs (Iroij) of 12 members, which has an advisory role.

The United Democratic Party (UDP) won the parliamentary elections in November 1999 and in November 2003. A presidential election in January 2004 saw Kessai Note return to office.

HEAD OF STATE

SELECTED GOVERNMENT MEMBERS as at July 2004

Finance, Brendan Wase

Foreign Affairs, Gerald Zackios

Internal Affairs and Welfare, Rien Morris

BRITISH AMBASSADOR, HE Ian Powell, resident at Suva, Fiji

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is largely dependent on aid from the USA. An agreement was signed in 1986 which granted the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia US$3.5 billion over 20 years. It is thought that the Marshall Islands has great potential in marine resources and seabed mineral deposits.

GNP – US$102 million (2000); US$1,950 per capita (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Mauritania's terrain is arid and flat, with some hilly regions in the centre of the country. Temperatures range from 16°C in January to 41°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Mauritania became part of France's west African protectorate in 1903 and became a French colony in 1920. The country became the Islamic Republic of Mauritania on 28 November 1960 and joined the Arab League in 1973.

Throughout the 1970s Mauritania was troubled by unrest in Western Sahara. The Polisario Front, an organisation dedicated to independence for the region, launched attacks against Mauritanian troops and in 1978 Mauritania renounced all claims to Western Sahara.

By 2003 several years of drought had left thousands of Mauritians facing food shortages. This led to serious civil disturbance and an attempted coup.

The National Assembly election held in October 2001 was won by the Republican Democratic and Social Party (PRDS) which gained 64 of the 81 seats. The presidential election of November 2003 saw Col. Maaouya Ould Sid Ahmed Toya re-elected for a fourth term of office with 67 per cent of the vote.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Mauritania has a diverse range of natural resources ranging from mineral deposits to rich fishing waters off the coast, but both these resources are threatened by over-exploitation. Mauritania has recently been discovered to have reserves of oil and is now one of four oil-refining countries in west Africa.

In 2002, Mauritania had $188 million of debt wiped out because of its status in the Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Mauritania's main ports are Bogue, Kaedi, Nouadhibou, Nouakchott and Rosso. There are 717km of railways and 7,720 km of highways. Mauritania operates ferry services on the Senegal River.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Television and radio services in Mauritania are state owned. There are seven main national press publications.

Traditional Mauritanian culture is centred on the nomadic tribes and their jewellery making and goldsmithing skills.

MAURITIUS

Republic of Mauritius

AREA – 1,864 sq. km

POPULATION – 1,171,000 (2001): Asiatic races (Hindus 51.8 per cent, Muslims 16.5 per cent, Chinese 2.8 per cent), and persons of European (mainly French) extraction, mixed and African descent (28.6 per cent).

English is the official language but French may be used in the National Assembly and lower law courts. Creole is the most commonly used language and several Asian languages are also used

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Mauritius is an island group lying in the Indian Ocean approximately 885 km east of Madagascar. The island is mainly low-lying and elevation extremes range from 828 m (Mont Piton) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. There is a tropical climate, modified by south-east trade winds, and average temperatures range from 25°C in July to 31°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The French began to colonise the island in the 18th century, but in 1810 they were deposed by a British invasion. The British abolished slavery in 1835, but started to import thousands of indentured labourers from India to work on the sugar plantations.

Mauritius became independent on 12 March 1968. The Labour Party/Mouvement Militant Mauricien coalition (LP/MMM) won a landslide victory in 1995 and Dr Navinchandra Ramgoolam, became prime minister. The general election held on 11 September 2000 was won by the coalition of the Mauritian Socialist Movement and the Mauritian Militant Movement, who won 54 of the 62 directly elected seats. On 15 February 2002 President Cassam Uteem resigned after refusing to sign a controversial anti-terrorism bill. His successor, Angidi Chetiar, also refused to sign the bill and resigned on 18 February. On 19 February the bill was signed into law by interim President Arianga Pillay, and a presidential election held on 25 February was won by Karl Offman.

Offman resigned on 1 October 2003 and was replaced by Sir Anerood Jugnauth on 7 October 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is head of state and is elected by the National Assembly. The Prime Minister, appointed by the President, is chosen for being the member of the National Assembly who appears best able to command the support of the majority of members of the Assembly. Other ministers are appointed by the President acting on the advice of the Prime Minister.

The National Assembly serves a five-year term and consists of 62 elected members (the island of Mauritius is divided into 20 three-member constituencies and the Island of Rodrigues returns two members), and eight specially elected members. Of the latter, four seats go to the 'best loser' of whichever communities on the island are under-represented in the Assembly after the general election, while the four remaining seats are allocated on the basis of both party and community. In November 2001 the National Assembly approved amendments to the constitution giving a considerable degree of autonomy to Rodrigues, including the establishment of an 18-member regional Assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Since independence Mauritius has diversified its economy from a predominantly agricultural base into one concentrating on the industrial, financial and tourism sectors. Agriculture continues to play a part and the island exports sugarcane, tea, corn, potatoes, bananas, pulses, and fish. Sugarcane, which was the main reason for the island to be developed by colonialists from the 17th century onwards, is grown on 90 per cent of cultivated land and produces 25 per cent of the island's export earnings. The Government is attempting to establish a free port and an expansion of offshore banking services. Information technology is also being given high priority.

Most foodstuffs and raw materials have to be imported while most of the sugar produced is exported, mainly to Britain.

GNI – US$4,600 million (2001); US$3,830 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Port Louis, on the north-west coast, handles the bulk of the island's external trade. The international airport is located at Plaisance.

EDUCATION

Primary education is free of charge and compulsory. There are a number of facilities offering vocational training. The Institute of Education is responsible for training primary and secondary school teachers and for curriculum development.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 12.1 per cent; (f) 18.6 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 6 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Freedom of expression is guaranteed in the constitution and four daily newspapers and eight weekly publications offer a range of political viewpoints. The Mauritius Broadcasting Corporation is state owned and runs television and radio services. Satellite television is available and private radio stations began broadcasting in 2002. Créole culture exerts an exceptionally strong influence on the island.

RODRIGUES AND DEPENDENCIES

The Island of Rodrigues, formerly a dependency but now part of Mauritius, is about 350 miles east of Mauritius, with an area of 40 square miles. The population is 35,776 (2000). The islands of Agalega and St. Brandon are dependencies of Mauritius. Total population 289 (2002).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Mexico's terrain varies from low coastal plains to high mountains. Elevation extremes range from 5,700 m (Volcan Pico de Orizaba) at the highest point to –10 m (Laguna Salada) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Mexico City range from 23°C in October to 30°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Between 1200 and 600 BC the Olmecs appeared in the lowlands of southern Veracruz and Tabasco. The Zapotecs of Oaxaca developed their civilisation in 300 BC and in 250 BC the Maya began to build the massive stepped pyramids in the Yucatan peninsula. The Aztecs, who came to the region in the 14th century, formed Mexico's final great indigenous empire.

Hernán Cortés, landed at modern Veracruz on 21 April 1519. The effect of the Spanish arrival on Mexican civilisation was devastating. It is now estimated that around 24 million people of the indigenous population died between the conquest and the early 17th century.

Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla instigated an independence movement on 16 September 1810 and independence came in 1821. Mexico suffered extreme instability, civil war and invasion throughout much of the 19th century. War with the USA in 1845 led to the loss of vast areas of land under the Treaty of Guadeloupe Hidalgo; Britain, France and Spain sent military forces to reclaim massive debts in 1862 and in 1864 the French installed the Archduke Maximilian as emperor. Porfirio Díaz ruled as a dictator between 1878 and 1911. He can be credited with beginning the industrialisation of Mexico, but his tenure was also marked by terrible repression that led to an attempted Marxist revolution in 1910.

After the Second World War, Mexico continued to be troubled by unrest, but the country also underwent development, partly due to the exploitation of oil reserves. President Carlos Salinas de Gortari introduced market reforms in the 1990s and tied Mexico into the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) in 1994. These reforms led to a degree of social upheaval and, fearing for the status of the already marginalised indigenous peoples, the Zapatista movement began an insurgency in the south of the country.

In the presidential and legislative elections of July 2000, Vicente Fox, the Partido de Accion Nacional (PAN) candidate, was elected as president and the PAN-led alliance gained 224 of the 500 Chamber of Deputies seats. However, in the 2003 legislative elections the political landscape altered with PAN losing its majority to the Partido Revolucionario Institucional (PRI). PAN won 153 seats while the PRI secured 241.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Congress of the Union consists of a Senate of 128 members, elected for a six-year term, and of a Chamber of Deputies (Cámara de Diputados), at present numbering 500, elected for a three-year term. The head of Government is the President, who is elected for a six-year term and may not be re-elected.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

The Republic is a Federal one of 31 states and the federal capital. The states are administered by a Governor and their own Chamber of Deputies.

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12 months (four hours per week) by lottery

ECONOMY AND TRADE

One of the major effects of NAFTA membership, which tripled Mexico's trade with Canada and the USA, was to establish a number of large factories in northern Mexico, devoted to the assembly of goods for the US market. It is hoped that trade agreements made with the EU in 2000 and Japan in 2004, may further increase trade.

Tobacco, chemicals, iron and steel, petroleum, mining, textiles, clothing, motor vehicles, and tourism are all major industries in Mexico. Mexico's wealth of cultivatable land means agriculture is diverse and productive; major products include corn, wheat, soy beans, rice, beans, cotton, coffee, fruit, tomatoes, beef, poultry, and dairy products. Agriculture accounts for four per cent of GDP and 18 per cent of the labour force. Principal exports include oil, cars, auto engines, fruits and vegetables, shrimps, coffee, computers, cattle, glass, iron and steel pipes, and copper. Major imports include computers, auto assembly material, electrical parts, car and truck parts, powdered milk, corn and sorghum, vehicles, sound-recording and power-generating equipment, chemicals, industrial machinery, pharmaceuticals and specialised appliances.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Televisa used to control all Mexican broadcasting but now competes with other channels. There are six national newspapers, including Chapas, Baja California and Diario de Chihuahua, and many independent radio stations.

Pre-Columbian civilisation has significantly influenced contemporary Mexican culture. Important cultural figures include the mural painters Diego Rivera (1886–1957) and José Clemente Orozco (1883–1949), as well as writers Octavio Paz (1914–98) and Carlos Fuentes (b. 1928).

FEDERATED STATES OF MICRONESIA

AREA – 702 sq. km

POPULATION – 134,597 (2001 estimate). The population is Micronesian and predominantly Christian. English (official) and eight other languages are used in different parts of the Federated States:

Yapese, Ulithian, Woleaian, Pohnpeian, Nukuoran, Kapingamarangi, Chuukese and Kosraean

FEDERAL CAPITAL – Palikir, on ΨKolonía (Pohnpei)

CURRENCY – Currency is the US$

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Patriots of Micronesia

NATIONAL FLAG – United Nations blue with four white stars in the centre

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – male 64.4; female 68.8 (2001)

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 5.1 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1986)

POPULATION BELOW POVERTY LINE – 26.7 per cent (2001)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.2 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 165 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Federated States of Micronesia comprise more than 600 islands extending 2,900 km across the archipelago of the Caroline Islands in the western Pacific Ocean. Elevation extremes range from 791 m (Totolom) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate of Micronesia is tropical with an almost constant 30°C temperature.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Inhabited since around 4,000 BC by migrants from the Philippines and Indonesia, Micronesia came into contact with Europeans in 1521. The islands were purchased by Germany from Spain in 1899 but were surrendered to Japan during the First World War. The Japanese received a mandate from the League of Nations to govern the islands in 1920.

During the Second World War the USA dislodged the Japanese from the islands and they became a Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands administered by the United Nations. A constitution was adopted in 1979 and full independence came in 1986 under a Compact of Free Association with the USA.

Joseph J. Urusemal was elected by congress as President in May 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution separates the executive, legislative and judicial branches. There is a Bill of Rights and provision for traditional rights. The executive comprises a federal President and Vice-President, both of whom must be chosen from amongst the four nationally elected Senators. There is a single-chamber Congress of 14 members, four members elected on a state-wide basis, and ten members elected from Congressional districts apportioned by population.

The judiciary is headed by the Supreme Court, which is divided into trial and appellate divisions. Below this, each state has its own judicial system.

The Compact of Free Association (CFA) places full responsibility for the defence of the Federated States of Micronesia on the USA.

The Federated States of Micronesia is a federal republic of four constituent states: Chuuk, Kosrae, Pohnpei and Yap. Each of the constituent states has its own Government and legislative system.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Micronesia is highly dependent on aid from the USA. The islands have few mineral resources apart from deposits of phosphate. Subsistence farming and fishing are the primary economic activities (though climate change and over-fishing threaten both these activities). The islands' extreme isolation hampers the development of tourism. The CFA with the US in 1986, provided for US$1.3 billion in financial assistance over 15 years until 2001. Since then assistance from the US has been gradually reduced. In 2002 aid to Micronesia was US$100 million.

Exports include fish, black pepper, tropical fruits and vegetables, coconuts, tapioca, betel nuts and sweet potatoes.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Following the fall of the Roman empire and centuries of occupation by numerous invaders, Moldova developed as a coherent state within Romania during the Middle Ages. By the 18th century Moldova was at the centre of a power struggle between Russia, Turkey, Romania and Austria. By 1812, following the Treaty of Bucharest, Moldova had been divided between Russia and Romania, the latter naming its share Bessarabia.

The territory was annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940. After 1947 it was known as the Moldavian Soviet Socialist Republic (MSSR). Strong nationalist sentiment reappeared as President Gorbachev introduced reform in the Soviet Union in the 1980s. The territory declared independence in 1991 but was unable to prevent the country being divided along ethnic lines. Russians, Ukrainians and Gagauz began to work towards a separate state in the Transdnistria region. Armed clashes between Transdnistrian separatists and Moldovan government forces followed in 1992. Several hundred people died and thousands fled to the Ukraine. A fragile peace settlement guaranteed Moldovan territorial integrity but failed to reach a final status solution for Transdnistria.

Negotiations resumed in 1997 and a high degree of Transdnistrian autonomy within a Moldovan state became a possible solution. However, no final agreement was reached. Another round of negotiations in the summer of 2002 were overseen by the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) and mediator states, Russia and Ukraine. By February 2003 a proposal which made provision for a new Moldovan constitution and guaranteed Transdnistria federal status within Moldova was drafted. The question of the exact degree of autonomy that Transdnistria would enjoy remains the major barrier to a final agreement.

European Union involvement in the dispute accelerated in 2003 when the EU announced a visa ban on Transdnistrian officials opposed to settling the dispute. The EU has further threatened restrictive measures against any Transdnistrians thought to be intent on delaying political progress.

The general election of February 2001 was won by the Communist Party of Moldova (PCM), who obtained 71 seats. The new parliament elected the PCM leader, Vladimir Voronin, as President on 4 April 2001 and approved a new government, led by Vasile Tarlev, an independent member of parliament.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

In July 1994 the Moldovan Parliament adopted a new Constitution which established a presidential parliamentary republic and provided for autonomous status for the Gagauz region, which was given its own elected National Assembly. The unicameral Parliament is directly elected for a four-year term. It has 101 members. The President is elected by Parliament and must obtain the support of at least 61 Deputies. If no candidate achieves this, Parliament must be dissolved and a general election held.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The agricultural sector accounts for 23 per cent of GDP. Principal crops include: wheat, corn, barley, tobacco and sugar beet.

Moldova is heavily dependent on the precarious Russian economy. Borrowing from the World Bank and IMF was often interrupted throughout the 1990s by Moldova's failure to meet the conditions of its loans. This process was repeated in 2003 when the IMF announced it would not be continuing with an aid package because Moldova had not met the agreed requirements.

Thirty per cent of the workforce has sought employment in other countries.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Moldova has 12,657 km of highways and 1,300 km of railways. Its 36 airports handle 3,900 departures per year.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Freedom of media expression is guaranteed by the constitution. There are five main newspapers and state run Moldovan television and radio stations (of which there are one each) which compete with a single commercial channel.

Historically, Moldovan culture has been heavily influenced by Romanian folk culture which is highly important to the population; the ancient ballad Miorita is central to this tradition.

MONACO

Principauté de Monaco – Principality of Monaco

AREA – 2 sq. km. Neighbour: France

POPULATION – 34,000 (2001). Only 7,175 residents have full Monégasque citizenship and thus the right to vote. The official language is French. Monégasque, a mixture of Provençal and Ligurian, is also spoken

CAPITAL – Monaco

CURRENCY – Euro (€) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Hymne Monégasque (Monégasque Anthem)

NATIONAL DAY – 19 November

NATIONAL FLAG – Two equal horizontal stripes, red over white

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 79 (2001)

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 12.82 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1962)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.1 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 17,282 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 140 m (Mount Agel) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. Monaco has a Mediterranean climate with average temperatures that range from 10°C in January to 23°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Monaco has been ruled by the Grimaldi family since the 13th century. Monarchical France recognised Monaco's independence in the 15th century, but Revolutionary France annexed it in the 18th century. Monaco did not regain its independence until 1861 and the principality remains under French protection.

Prince Rainier III ascended the throne in 1949. He decreased the extent to which the Monégasque economy is dependent on gambling and guided Monaco to full membership of the UN in 1993. In 1962 a new constitution was proclaimed. Capital punishment was abolished, female suffrage was introduced and a supreme court was established.

Legislative power is held jointly by the Prince and a unicameral, 24-member National Council elected by universal suffrage. Executive power is exercised by the Prince and a four-member Council of Government, headed by a Minister of State, who is nominated by the Prince from a list of three French diplomats submitted by the French Government. The judicial code is based on that of France. In the legislative elections of 9 February 2003 the Union for Monaco (UPM) won 21 seats, defeating the National and Democratic Union, which had been in power for most of the previous 40 years.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Monaco's economy benefits from real estate revenue, financial services, some light industry and tourism. A major construction project was undertaken in 2001 to extend the harbour facilities to accommodate cruise ships. Since the state collects no taxes from individuals or businesses it has become a tax haven for the wealthy, and non-Monégasques make up 84 per cent of the population. The Grimaldi family retains monopolies in a number of sectors, including tobacco, the telephone network, and the postal service.

GNI – US$25,000 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 3.3 per cent (1998)

MEDIA

Radio Monte-Carlo started broadcasting across France in the 1960s and Italy in the 1970s. Monaco does not have an indigenous daily press (French newspapers are widely available) but does publish two weekly journals.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Mongolia, most of which is at least 1,000 m above sea level, forms part of the central Asiatic plateau and rises towards the west in the mountains of the Mongolian Altai and Hangai ranges. The Gobi region covers much of the southern half of the country and contains sand deserts interspersed with semi-desert. Elevation extremes range from 4,374 m (Nayramadlin Orgil) at the highest point to 518 m (Hoh Nuur) at the lowest. The winter climate in northern Mongolia is extreme and average temperatures in the capital city, Ulaanbaatar, range from  $-27^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $19^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Mongolian tribes, comprised of Turks and Uighurs, led a fiercely independent existence until the 12th century when they were united by Tamburlaine who combined the dispersed tribes and led them on an expedition of conquest which extended the Mongol empire from Beijing to the Caspian Sea. Recognising Tamburlaine's role in Mongolian unification, his subjects named him Genghis Khan. Kublai Khan, Ghenghis's grandson, is credited with establishing Mongolia's 'Golden Age', through the consolidation of the empire that, by his reign in the 13th century, stretched from Hungary to China and as far south as Vietnam.

The empire declined after Kublai's death in 1294, and Mongolia entered a period of great instability and eventual domination by the Chinese Manchu dynasty in 1691. Independence from China did not come until 1911 when the Manchu dynasty collapsed. Mongolian revolutionaries, with Soviet help and encouragement, established the Mongolian People's Republic (MPP) in 1924. This was swiftly absorbed by Stalinist tendencies and Mongolia did not emerge from Soviet domination until 1990.

The Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (MPRP) dominated the country's politics after the fall of communism until 1996 when an alliance of nationalists and social democrats displaced them. This Democratic Alliance (DA) proposed a swift transition to a market economy, the elimination of corruption and a reduction in social inequalities, but the DA itself became the focus of corruption scandals and a transition to a free market caused large-scale social disruption.

Natasagiyn Bagabandi was re-elected as president in May 2001 with 58.13 per cent of the total vote. Legislative elections held in June 2004 saw the Revolutionary People's Party of Mongolia (RPPM) win 36 out of the 76 seats in the State of Great Assembly. The Motherland Democracy Party secured 34 seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new Constitution was approved in January 1992 and established a democratic parliamentary system of Government. The President is directly elected for a term of four years. The unicameral legislature is the State Great Hural (Ulsyn Ikh Khural), which has 76 members elected for a four-year term by a simple majority amounting to at least 25 per cent of the votes cast. In July 2000 a constitutional amendment came into force which gives the President the right to dissolve the Great State Hural if it is unable to reach agreement on appointing a Prime Minister.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In recent years the economy has shown signs of growth. A 12.4 per cent increase in the price of copper (which, along with cashmere, is Mongolia's main export commodity) in 2003 delivered an increase in exports. Ample mineral deposits of gold, copper, tin, coal, uranium and tungsten are being exploited and gold mining has increased steadily since 1990. In 2002 11 tons of gold were extracted from mines. Mining, however, has played a part in environmental degradation in the country and other environmental problems such as desertification (caused in part by the rapid conversion of virgin land to agriculture, so accelerating soil erosion), over-grazing and deforestation are increasing. This poses a threat to Mongolia's agrarian sector which makes up 20.6 per cent of GDP. The semi-desert areas of the Gobi region provide pasture for sheep, goats, camels, horses and some cattle. In the steppe areas to the north of the Gobi pasturage is better and livestock more abundant.

Mongolia joined the World Trade Organisation in 1997 and two years later the international donor community pledged over $300 million per year at the Consultative Group Meeting held in Ulaanbaatar. Mongolia has been successful in attracting foreign investors and since 1990, 2,400 foreign companies have invested more than US$800 million into mining, agriculture processing and infrastructure.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Mongolia has 1,815 km of railways and 49,250 km of highways of which many of the rural roads are unsurfaced.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are five daily newspapers including Onoodor, with the biggest circulation, and Unen the organ of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party, and the country's oldest publication. Television is a mixture of state and privately owned broadcasters.

Tibetan Buddhism and nomadism both influence Mongolian society. Each year many devout Mongolians leave their homes (gers) in order to make the pilgrimage to Lhasa in Tibet.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 4,165 m (Jbel Toubkal) at the highest point to –55 m (Sebkha Tah) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Rabat range from 7°C in January to 29°C in July, although summer temperatures in the desert interior can reach 41°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The end of Spanish rule in 1492 caused economic and social decline in Morocco. It was not until the 17th century that the country regained its pre-eminence in the area when the Alawite family founded a dynasty which survives to the present day.

By 1912 France occupied the entire country. European rule saw tens of thousands of French citizens move into Morocco. A Berber rebellion was crushed in 1926, and Morocco was instrumental as a base for the allies to attack and drive the Germans from North Africa during the Second World War.

Morocco became independent of France in 1956 (though the coastal towns of Ceuta and Melilla remained under Spanish control) under Sultan Mohammed V who became King the following year. Mohammed V was succeeded by his son Hassan II, who annexed the mineral-rich Western Sahara region in 1975.

King Hassan was succeeded by his son, Crown Prince Sidi Mohammed, in 1999. Morocco has since been attempting to move away from the absolute monarchy of King Hassan's era. The Parliamentary elections in 2002 were held to be the most democratic the country had ever witnessed. The Union Socialiste des Forces Populaires (USFP) and the Independence Party remained the two largest parties. Driss Jetou was appointed prime minister on 9 October and a coalition government was named on 8 November 2002.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The King nominates the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, appoints the members of the Council of Ministers. The Government is responsible both to Parliament and to the King. There is a bicameral legislature. The House of Representatives (Majlis al-Nuwab) has 325 members elected for a five-year term by universal suffrage using a first past the post system. The Chamber of Councillors (Majlis al-Mustashareen) has 270 members, 60 per cent of whom are elected by local councils, 20 per cent by employers' associations and 20 per cent by trade unions. One-third of its members are elected every three years.

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 196,300: Army 175,000, Navy 7,800, Air Force 13,500; Paramilitaries 50,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 18 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Morocco has a large agrarian sector and 50 per cent of the labour force is engaged in agricultural production, representing 20 per cent of GDP. There are a number of environmental issues connected with agriculture such as desertification and soil erosion from farming. Raw sewage has contaminated some water supplies. Cereal production is of high importance and the country produces 107,000 metric tonnes per year.

Morocco has some mineral reserves, mainly phosphate rock. Other industries include food processing, textiles and leather goods while tourism is becoming increasingly important. The main imports are petroleum products, machinery, chemical products, iron and steel and grain and textiles. The EU, with which an association agreement was signed in 1995, is Morocco's largest trading partner and in 1998 awarded Morocco grants totalling US$98 million.

Similar to many countries in North Africa, Morocco has a significant population of emigrant workers. Large numbers of Moroccans have left to work in the EU and provide remittances.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 1,907 m of railways linking the major towns. There are 60,449 km of roads; an extensive network of 30,374 km of surfaced roads covers all the main towns. Royal Air Maroc is the national airline.

EDUCATION

Education is compulsory between the ages of seven and 16. There are government primary, secondary and technical schools. At Fez there is a theological university of great repute in the Muslim world. There is a secular university at Rabat. Schools for special denominations, Jewish and Catholic, are permitted and may receive government grants. American schools operate in Rabat and Casablanca. There is an English language university in Ifrane.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 86 per cent (1997); secondary 39 per cent (1997); tertiary 11 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are three daily newspapers, one of which is state owned. State owned television and radio compete with a private broadcaster. Rai is a form of music which developed in Algeria but has become popular in Morocco.

WESTERN SAHARA

Al-Jumhūriyya al-'Arabiyya as-Šahrāwiyya ad-Dimuqrāṭiyya
– Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic

AREA – 252,120 sq. km. Neighbours: Morocco (north), Algeria (north-east), Mauritania (east and south)

POPULATION – 244,943 (2000 estimate). Arabic is the official language. Hassaniya and Moroccan Arabic are the main spoken languages; Spanish is widely spoken in the towns. Almost all the population is Sunni Muslim

CAPITAL – El-Aaiūn (population, 139,000, 1990 estimate)

NATIONAL FLAG – Three horizontal stripes of black, white and green with a red crescent and a five-pointed star in the centre and a red triangle based on the hoist

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 3.4 per cent (1999)

POPULATION DENSITY – 1 per sq. km (1999)

Following Spanish withdrawal from Western Sahara in 1975, the territory was divided between Morocco and Mauritania. Mauritania withdrew in 1979 leaving Morocco in sole possession. This, however, was contested by Polisario, an armed group dedicated to the independence of Western Sahara.

Fighting has carried on at differing levels of intensity ever since. Around 180,000 Sahrawi's have been driven into exile; some to Algeria, some to Mauritania. A cease-fire agreed in 1988 and brokered by the UN finally came into force in 1991. Plans for a referendum on the area could not overcome the differences between the Moroccan government and Polisario, and the situation has been deadlocked ever since.

Talks between the Moroccan government and Polisario in 2000 were centred on the question of autonomy for Western Sahara within Morocco. A draft agreement that was proposed by the Moroccan government was rejected by Polisario.

In 2002 Morocco reiterated its support for autonomy for Western Sahara but insisted that it remain part of Morocco. Speaking on the 25th anniversary of the Green March, the movement that saw 350,000 volunteers cross into the territory and claim it for Morocco, King Hassan dismissed the UN plan for a settlement as 'obsolete' and 'inapplicable'.

Former US Secretary of State James Baker, prior to his resignation in 2004 as the UN Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, had proposed a period of autonomy followed by a referendum. This was accepted by Polisario, but not by Morocco.

As at August 2004, the status of Western Sahara has not been determined by the UN and although the cease-fire remains intact, it is estimated that over 100,000 landmines and items of unexploded ordnance remain in the region.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

There are high plateaux in the north-west of Mozambique and mountains in the west. Elevation extremes range from 2,436 m (Monte Binga) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with average temperatures in the capital Maputo ranging from 26°C in July to 30°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Between the 10th and 14th centuries Mozambique was a stronghold of Bantu civilisation. Trade with India and the Arabian peninsula grew and migrants from both these regions settled in the area.

The Portuguese explorer Vasco de Gama arrived in 1498, and, over the next three centuries the Portuguese exploited Mozambique for gold, ivory, spices and slavery. Though Portugal developed the country into a colony in the 16th century, it did not completely dominate it until 1914. Proximity to the South African gold mines led to the development of Mozambique as an important trading post.

The Salazar dictatorship in Portugal, which ruled between 1932 and 1968, outlawed the private company concessions which had operated as de facto rulers over much of Mozambique. Full independence from Portugal came in 1975 but fighting between faction groups ensued. The Frente de Libertação de Moambique (Frelimo) and the Resistência Nacional de Moambique (Renamo) led the country into a bloody civil war that lasted from the early 1980s until 1992, when the two sides signed the Rome Peace Accord.

Presidential and legislative elections were held on 3–5 December 1999. The incumbent, Joaquim Chissano (Frelimo), won the presidential election with 52.3 per cent of the vote. Frelimo also won the legislative election, gaining 133 seats to Renamo's 117, amid allegations by Renamo of vote-rigging. No other parties were able to secure the five per cent of the total vote necessary to obtain representation. Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for early 2005.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is directly elected and serves for a five-year term, which is renewable only twice consecutively. The unicameral legislature, the Assembly of the Republic (Assembleia Da Republica), is directly elected for a five-year term and comprises 250 members.

HEAD OF STATE

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture accounts for 26 per cent of GDP and employs 83 per cent of the labour force. Shellfish, cotton, cashew nuts, sugar and coconuts make up important agricultural exports, and there are considerable oil, gas, mineral and hydro-electric resources. However, large-scale economic problems remain. The reconstruction of infrastructure and the country's industrial base following the civil war has been hampered by floods. The agricultural sector has also been affected by drought in 2002 and 2003.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are a total of 3,123 km of railways, 30,400 km of highways and 3,750 km of navigable waterways. Mozambique has 158 airports although only 22 of these have surfaced runways. A railway has been commissioned to link Mozambique to South Africa and there are plans to develop a similar corridor, linked by rail and road between Malawi and Zambia.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Freedom of speech is guaranteed in the constitution and there are two daily newspapers and three weekly publications plus two television broadcasters. Radio remains the main media outlet for the majority of the population with UNESCO and the Government funding around 40 stations.

Mia Couto (b. 1955) is one of Mozambique's most famous poets.

MYANMAR

DEATH PENALTY – Yes

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.2 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 67 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 5,881 m (Hkakabo Razi) at the highest point to 0 m (Andaman Sea) at the lowest. Myanmar has a tropical climate with a wet season from May until October. Average temperatures range from 16°C in January to 36°C in July, although summer temperatures in the centre of the country can reach up to 43°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Myanmar (previously known as Burma) had a fraught relationship with the British empire in India at the beginning of the 19th century. Throughout the first half of the century border disputes often spiralled into border clashes and eventually invasions. This led to the annexation of Myanmar as part of British India in 1885 following the third Anglo-Burmese War.

The British separated Myanmar from India in 1937 and independence came in 1948, though this was followed by serious civil disturbances.

An army revolt in 1962 installed General Ne Win. Ne Win was replaced in 1989 by General Saw Maung, head of the State Law and Order Council (SLORC). Pro-democracy forces, notably the national League for Democracy (NLD) under Aung San Suu Kyi, continued to oppose military rule, and in 1990 Aung San Suu Kyi won elections despite being under house arrest. The military ignored the election results, repressed the NLD and continued to rule Myanmar by diktat. Aung San Suu Kyi was released from house arrest in 1995, but her movements continued to be restricted by the government.

The State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) detained several hundred NLD members in September 1998 to thwart the NLD's plan to convene a 'People's Parliament' representing the assembly, which would have resulted from the 1990 general election. Instead, the NLD set up an interim representation committee to act on behalf of the 'People's Parliament'. UN-brokered talks between Aung San Suu Kyi and the government began in 2000 and since then about 400 dissidents have been released from prison and Aung San Suu Kyi was released from house arrest in May 2002. However, the reconciliation talks have stalled and in May 2003 Aung San Suu Kyi was taken into 'protective custody' following clashes between her supporters and those of the government.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution was effectively abrogated in 1988 when the executive and legislature were abolished and replaced by the SLORC. There are no permitted political parties.

INSURGENCIES

Since independence in 1948 the government has fought various armed insurgent groups, the largest of which were derived from the Kachin, Kayin (Karen), Karenni, and Wa ethnic groups but the Shan, Mon, Arakan and Chin ethnic minorities have also formed armed groups.

Since 1992, as a result of government offensives, 15 ethnic groups have signed cease-fire agreements with the government. In November 1999, the government launched a military offensive against Kayin (Karen) National Union (KNU) guerrillas and their allies in Karen state.

The UK government and non-governmental organisations maintain that human rights abuses against Myanmar's ethnic minorities continue. The United Nations Commission for Human Rights (UNHCR) passed a resolution on 21 April 2004, under co-sponsorship with the EU, to express concern over these alleged abuses.

The Army has some 100 main battle tanks and 270 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has 73 patrol and coastal vessels at six bases. The Air Force has 113 combat aircraft and 29 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 5.0 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 350,000: Army 325,000, Navy 16,000, Air Force 15,000; Paramilitaries 107,250

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Myanmar is extremely rich in natural resources such as timber (it is the world's largest exporter of teak), jade pearls, rubies and sapphires. Fertile soil makes it an excellent environment for agriculture and it enjoys oil and gas deposits. However, the military junta controls all the major industries and the economy is characterised by corruption, mismanagement and massive human rights abuses such as the alleged use of forced labour. The principal imports are capital goods, chiefly transport equipment, machinery and plant, consumer goods and semi-manufactures.

In July 1997, Myanmar became a member of ASEAN. In 1997 the EU stripped Myanmar of trading privileges and the USA imposed economic sanctions; in July 2003 the USA imposed further sanctions on the government.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The Irrawaddy river and its chief tributary, the Chindwin, are important waterways, the main stream being navigable 900 miles from its mouth and carrying much traffic. The chief seaports are Rangoon, Mawlamyine (Moulmein), Akyab (Sittwe) and Patheingyi (Bassein).

The railway network covers 3,955 km, extending to Myittha on the Upper Irrawaddy. There are 2,452 miles of highways and 14,318 miles of other main roads. The airport at Mingaladon, about 13 miles north of Rangoon, handles limited international air traffic.

EDUCATION

Most children attend primary school, and nearly five million are currently enrolled; in middle and high schools, enrolment is over two million. There are 16 universities, nine degree-awarding colleges and 87 other higher education institutions.

Vocational training is provided at 17 teacher training institutes and schools, 11 technical institutes, 17 technical high schools, 17 agricultural institutes and schools, and 41 vocational schools.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 11.0 per cent; (f) 19.4 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 5 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Nearly all the media outlets in Myanmar are controlled by the government. Four national publications and two television stations are all owned and controlled by the state. Democratic Voice of Myanmar is an opposition radio station broadcasting on short-wave from Norway.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Kalahari desert covers a large area of eastern Namibia and the terrain is almost completely arid and dry. Elevation extremes range from 2,606 m (Konigstein) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Average temperatures range from 21°C in July to 36°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Namibia was annexed by Germany in the 19th century but passed into the control of South Africa at the end of the First World War. With the creation of the apartheid system in 1949, South Africa extended parliamentary representation to the white population of Namibia only. Throughout the 1950s the plight of Black Africans in Namibia led to agitation for independence and the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) began an armed struggle against South African dominance in 1966.

In 1978 UN Security Council Resolution 435 issued proposals for Namibian independence but full independence was not achieved until 21 March 1990.

The presidential elections of 1999 were won by the incumbent President, Sam Nujoma, and by the South West Africa People's Organisation of Namibia (SWAPO) respectively. In the 72-seat National Assembly SWAPO has 55 seats, the Congress of Democrats and the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance seven seats each, and other parties three seats. In August 2002, Prime Minister Hage Geingob was replaced by Theo-Ben Gurirab. Parliamentary and presidential elections were due to take place in mid-November 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Namibia has an Executive President as Head of State who exercises the functions of Government with the assistance of a Cabinet headed by a Prime Minister. The President is directly elected for a maximum of two five-year terms; in November 1998, Parliament approved an amendment to the Constitution allowing President Nujoma to stand for a third term of office in the 1999 elections. There is a bicameral legislature consisting of the 72-member National Assembly, elected for a five-year term, and the National Council, whose 26 members are indirectly elected by the regional councils from among their own members. The National Council is elected for a six-year term, and its main function is to review and consider legislation from the National Assembly. The constitution can only be changed by a two-thirds majority in the National Assembly.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Nauru is one of three low-lying phosphate rock islands in the Pacific Ocean. The climate is tropical, with average daily temperatures an almost consistent 29°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

From 1888 until the First World War Nauru was administered by Germany. In 1920 it became a British Empire-mandated territory under the League of Nations, administered by Australia. A trusteeship superseding the mandate was approved in 1947 by the UN and Nauru continued to be administered by Australia until it became independent on 31 January 1968.

President Rene Harris was defeated in a parliamentary vote on 8 January 2003 and was replaced by Bernard Dowiyogo who died on 9 March 2003. Derog Gioura was elected to succeed him on 20 March, but following the legislative elections of 3 May 2003, Ludvig Scotty was elected as president. In 2004, Scotty was dismissed in a vote of no confidence. Rene Harris was named as the new president and he appointed a new government on 22 June 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Parliament has 18 members including the Cabinet and Speaker. Voting is compulsory for all Nauruans aged over 20, except in certain specified instances. Elections are held every three years. The Cabinet is chosen by the President, who is elected by the Parliament from amongst its own members, and comprises not fewer than five nor more than six members including the president.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The southern region of Nepal, the Terai, forms approximately 23 per cent of the total land area. The central belt is hilly, but with many fertile valleys, leading up to the snowline at about 4,880 m. Elevation extremes range from 8,850 m (Mt Everest) at the highest point to 70 m (Kanchan Kalan) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Khatmandu range from 2°C in January to 28°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Nepal emerged as a nation in the middle of the 18th century when it was unified by the warrior Raja of Gorkha, Prithvi Naryan Shah, who founded the present Nepalese dynasty. Power was seized by Jung Bahdur in 1846. He assumed the title Rana and his dynasty ruled the country until after the Second World War. During this time, the role of the Nepalese monarchy was purely ceremonial. In 1950–1 a revolutionary movement broke the hereditary power of the Ranas and restored the monarchy to its former position. King Mehndra proscribed all political parties and assumed direct powers in 1960. In 1962 he introduced a new constitution embodying a tiered, partyless system of panchayat (council) democracy.

Agitation for political reform led to the abolition of the panchayat system in April 1990. A new constitution was drawn up in November 1990 and established a multiparty, parliamentary system of government and a constitutional monarchy.

Between 1991 and 2001, politics was extremely factionalised and the country witnessed frequent changes of government. Nepal suffered great social instability and violence when the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) began an insurgency in 1996. Beginning in the remote west of the country the Maoists concentrated on disrupting elections and intimidating officials. The troubles spread throughout the country and prompted a brutal backlash from the authorities. Both the communist insurgents and Nepalese police have been implicated in human rights abuses and atrocities. After the deaths of up to 7,000 people a cease-fire was unilaterally adopted by the government and almost immediately reciprocated by the insurgents in July 2001. Fighting not only resumed but intensified in November 2001, when a state of emergency was declared and the Nepalese army became fully engaged. A second cease-fire was negotiated in 2003 but quickly broke down and clashes between the insurgents and security forces have been ongoing.

In June 2001 the royal family was devastated by the murder of King Birendra and several family members by Crown Prince Dipendra, who subsequently killed himself. Prince Gyanendra was pronounced King on 4 June.

Prime Minister Girija Prasad Koirala resigned in July 2001 and was replaced by former Prime Minister Sher Bahadur Deuba. In May 2002 Deuba asked the King to dissolve parliament and call early elections, but in October 2002, Deuba asked the King to delay elections owing to increased Maoist violence. The King dismissed Deuba on 7 October and dissolved parliament, and Lokendra Bahadur Chand was appointed to head the government on 12 October. Chand resigned in May 2003 after a failed attempt by politicians to reopen parliament, which had remained dissolved since October 2002, and in June 2003, the King appointed Surya Badahur Thapa as Prime Minister. Sher Bahadur Deuba was appointed Prime Minister on 2 June 2004. He formed a coalition cabinet that was appointed on 5 July 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The King retains joint executive power with the Council of Ministers. The bicameral legislature consists of a 205-member House of Representatives, directly elected for a five-year term, and a 60-member National Council comprising 50 who are indirectly elected for a six-year term and ten royal nominees.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

A low-lying country, the terrain of the Netherlands is characterised by its many canals and coastal dikes. The climate is temperate with average temperatures ranging from 0°C in January to 23°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Following a revolt against Spanish rule under the leadership of William of Orange, the northern provinces were united by the Union of Utrecht (1579) and in 1581 independence was declared. Dutch economic and military power flourished in the 17th and 18th centuries, however, the Netherlands were overrun by France in the late 18th century, becoming part of the French Empire until 1814 when the southern and northern regions were united into one kingdom. In 1830, the southern provinces seceded to form Belgium and the Duchy of Luxembourg was made an independent state in 1867.

The Netherlands was neutral during the First World War, but during the Second World War the country was invaded by Germany and occupied for five years.

The post-war period was marked by economic expansion, membership of the EU and the construction of a liberal welfare state. The Netherlands was one of the first countries to adopt the euro as its currency.

The general election of 22 January 2003 resulted in a marginal win for the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) with 23 out of the 75 seats; the Partij van de Arbeid (PvdA) gained 19 seats. After four months of talks a new coalition, comprised of members of the CDA, the Volkspartij voor Vrijheid en Democratie (VVD) and the Democrats 66, led by Balkenende, was sworn into office on 27 May 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The States-General consists of the Eerste Kamer (First Chamber) of 75 members, elected for four years by the Provincial Councillors; and the Tweede Kamer (Second Chamber) of 150 members, elected for four years by voters of 18 years and upwards.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.6 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 53,130: Army 23,150, Navy 12,130, Air Force 11,050; Paramilitaries 6,800

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Despite employing a mere four per cent of the labour force, agricultural exports such as fruit, flower bulbs and cut flowers form a major part of Dutch economic activity and the country is ranked third in the world for the scale of its agricultural industries. Produce includes wheat, rye, barley, sugarcane, cattle, poultry, pig farming and dairy products. There is also an important fishing industry.

The Dutch have adopted and developed the 'polder model' of industrial relations. This is characterised by policy making by consensus and has ensured good industrial relations in the country. The industrial sector involves the manufacture of electrical machinery and equipment, metal and engineering products, chemicals and petroleum, construction and micro-electronics. The service industries represent 70 per cent of the Dutch economy and 80 per cent of Dutch trade takes place with other EU countries.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

New Zealand consists of a number of islands in the South Pacific Ocean, and also has administrative responsibility for the Ross Dependency in Antarctica. The two larger islands, North Island and South Island, are separated by a relatively narrow strait. The remaining islands are much smaller and widely dispersed.

Much of the North and South Islands is mountainous. The principal range is the Southern Alps, extending the entire length of the South Island. The North Island mountains include several volcanoes, two of which are active. Elevation extremes range from 3,764 m (Mt Cook) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Christchurch range from 1°C in July to 24°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Settled by Polynesian tribes since the ninth century, the Dutch navigator, Abel Tasman, sighted the coast of New Zealand in 1642 but did not land. The British explorer James Cook circumnavigated New Zealand and landed in 1769, the year in which the islands were claimed by the British. In 1840 the Treaty of Waitangi established British sovereignty with Maoris retaining some territorial rights. In 1941 New Zealand was created a separate colony distinct from New South Wales and in 1907 the designation was changed to 'The Dominion of New Zealand'.

Following the general election of 27 July 2002, the state of the parties in the House of Representatives was:

Labour Party (LP) 52 seats, National Party 27, New Zealand First 13, ACT New Zealand 9; Green Party 9; United Future 8; Jim Anderton's Progressive Coalition (PC) 2. The Labour Party and the Progressive Coalition formed a minority administration.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of state is the British sovereign, represented by the Governor-General appointed on the advice of the New Zealand Government. The Prime Minister and the Cabinet are appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the unicameral legislature, the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives has 120 members, elected for a three-year term. A non-binding referendum, held simultaneously with the general election in November 1999, approved a reduction in the number of members to 100 in future parliaments. There is no written constitution. The judicial system comprises a High Court, a Court of Appeal and district courts having both civil and criminal jurisdiction.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.2 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 8,610: Army 4,430, Navy 1,980, Air Force 2,200

ECONOMY AND TRADE

New Zealand's economy is diverse and enjoys strong manufacturing and service industries as well as a successful agricultural sector. Historically, New Zealand has traded primarily with Britain, but since the UK joined the EU New Zealand has developed much stronger export links with Asia, especially Japan. Australia and the USA are also trading partners. The major industries are food processing, wood and paper products, wool, textiles, dairy products, iron and steel. Some 32 per cent of New Zealand's total output is from the export of goods and services. Between 70 and 80 per cent of exports are agricultural products, mainly wheat, barley, fruits, vegetables, dairy products and meat.

Non-metallic minerals such as coal, clay, limestone and dolomite are more important than metallic ones. Of the metals, the most important are gold and ironsand. Natural gas deposits in the offshore Taranaki Maui field and onshore fields are increasingly exploited and used for electricity generation.

GNI – US$51,000 million (2001); US$13,250 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The national railway system is owned and operated by Tranz Rail Ltd. There are 4,439 km of railway track. There are international airports at Auckland, Christchurch and Wellington.

EDUCATION

Schools are free of charge and compulsory between the ages of six and 15. There are 2,226 state and 56 private primary schools and 320 state and 23 private secondary schools. There are seven universities and 25 polytechnics.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 63 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The broadcasting sector was deregulated in 1988. Two public networks, Television New Zealand and Maori TV, compete with four main private networks. There are three main national daily papers and a large number of radio stations, including Ruai Mai, a Maori owned and operated broadcaster.

New Zealand's cultural history is long and complex, stretching back to the first Maori settlers who brought the art form Whakapapa, a type of oral genealogy, to the island. Notable cultural figures include the writers Katherine Mansfield (1888–1923) and Hone Tuwhare (b. 1922), the poet Sam Hunt (b. 1946) and the filmmakers Jane Campion (b. 1954) and Peter Jackson (b. 1961).

TERRITORIES

TOKELAU (OR UNION ISLANDS)

Tokelau is a group of atolls, Fakaofu, Nukunonu and Atafu. It was proclaimed part of New Zealand as of 1 January 1949. The Council of Faipule, composed of one elected representative from each atoll, was established in 1992 to govern Tokelau when the General Fono was not in session. The position of Ulu-o-Tokelau (leader) is rotated among the three Faipule members annually. The General Fono has 48 seats and its members are chosen by each atoll's Council of Elders (Taupulega) to serve a three-year term. The Tokelau Amendment Act, passed by the New Zealand Parliament in 1996, conferred legislative power on the General Fono.

THE ROSS DEPENDENCY

The Ross Dependency is defined as all the Antarctic islands and territories between 160° E. and 150° W. longitude which are situated south of the 60° S. parallel, including Edward VII Land and portions of Victoria Land.

ASSOCIATED STATES

COOK ISLANDS

Included in the realm of New Zealand since 1901, the Cook Islands group consists of the islands of Rarotonga, Aitutaki, Mangaia, Atiu, Mauke, Mitiaro, Manuae, Takutea, Palmerston, Penrhyn or Tongareva, Manihiki, Rakahanga, Suvarrow, Pukapuka or Danger, and Nassau. Queen Elizabeth II has a representative on the islands, and there is a New Zealand High Commissioner. Since 1965 the islands have been in free association with New Zealand and enjoyed complete internal self-government, executive power being in the hands of a Cabinet consisting of a Prime Minister and five other ministers. There is a 25-member Legislative Assembly.

Prime Minister, Dr Robert Woonton

NIUE

A New Zealand High Commissioner is stationed at Niue, which since 1974 has been self-governing in free association with New Zealand. Executive power is in the hands of a premier and a Cabinet of three drawn from the Assembly of 20 members. The Assembly is the supreme legislative body.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Nicaragua has extensive coastal plains that rise to central interior mountains. Elevation extremes range from 2,438 m (Mogoton) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is generally tropical near the coast with average temperatures in Managua ranging from 20°C in January to 34°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Spanish colonisation of Nicaragua began in 1523 but independence from Spain was granted in 1821.

The assassination of liberal politician Augusto C. Sandino followed by rigged elections saw dictator General Somoza installed in 1934. The Somoza dynasty ruled Nicaragua until 1979 when a popular revolt against the regime led by the Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional (FSLN), popularly known as the Sandinistas, was successful in seizing control. However, after ten years in power and a civil war against US-backed anti-communist guerrillas, the Sandinistas lost their parliamentary majority in elections held in 1990. A coalition of former opposition parties, the Unión Nacional de Opositora (UNO), formed a Government and the civil war came to an end.

In presidential and legislative elections held on 4 November 2001, Enrique Bolaños Geyer of the Liberal Constitutionalist Party (PLC) was elected President and the PLC gained 47 seats in the National Assembly, with the FSLN winning 43 seats. The Government is formed by a coalition led by the PLC.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The head of Government is the President, elected for a five-year term, not immediately renewable. The President appoints the Cabinet. There is a unicameral legislature, the National Assembly, with 90 members directly elected for a five-year term.

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 18–36 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Nicaragua was devastated by Hurricane Mitch in 1998. Reconstruction spurred economic recovery but a drop in demand for agricultural products meant that growth could not be sustained. The agriculture sector is threatened by deforestation, soil erosion and water pollution.

The agricultural and food processing industries include coffee, sugar, bananas and sesame; cattle rearing and seafood fishing. Light industrial goods are also produced. Considerable quantities of foodstuffs are imported as well as cotton goods, jute, iron and steel, machinery and petroleum products.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The inter-American Highway runs between the Honduras and the Costa Rican borders; the inter-Oceanic highway runs from Corinto on the Pacific coast via Managua to Rama, where there is a natural waterway to Bluefields on the Atlantic; there are 15,478 km of roads and 252 miles of railway. The main airport is at Managua. The chief port is Corinto in the Pacific.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are three daily newspapers including El Nuevo Diario, a pro-Sandinista publication. Canal 6, the state owned broadcaster, competes with three commercial networks to provide television services. There are a large number of radio stations.

Nicaraguan culture blends Caribbean and Latin American influences and is widely regarded as a forerunner of Central America's literary production. Celebrated writers include Rubén Darío (1867–1916), Joaquín Pasos (1914–47) and Pablo Cuadra (1912–2002).

Elevation extremes range from 1,944 m (Mt Greboun) at the highest point to 200 m (Niger River) at the lowest. Average temperatures range from 24°C in January to 34°C in May.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

French imperial expansion into west Africa resulted in Niger coming under French control in 1898. The post-imperial era, which began when the country achieved full independence in 1960, did not bring stability. A coup in 1974 ushered in a period of military dictatorship, and it was not until 1990 that the constitution was amended to allow for multi-party democracy. Elections did not take place until 1993. By 1995 the relationship between the President, Mahamane Ousmane, and Prime Minister,

Hama Amadou, had deteriorated to the point that the military used the political deadlock to mount a coup.

Brigadier Ibrahim Barre Mainassara seized power in January 1996, and though he allowed opposition parties to contest elections his victory in July 1996 was condemned as fraudulent by the international community. Mainassara's rule was unpopular and resulted in a rebellion by the Tuareg people which was only resolved through a peace process mediated in Algiers.

Peace in Niger has been interrupted by violent ethnic clashes and popular agitation calling for the removal of Brigadier Mainassara who was eventually killed in a further coup in 1999. A presidential election was held in November 1999 and won by Mamadou Tandja of the National Movement for Society in Development (MNSD). In the simultaneous legislative elections the MNSD won an overall majority in the National Assembly. Presidential elections were due to take place in October 2004 with legislative elections due in late November 2004.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The cultivation of groundnuts and the production of livestock are the main industries and provide two of the main exports. Other agricultural products include millet, cassava and sugarcane. Agriculture accounts for 90 per cent of the labour force; most of this is at subsistence level. There are large uranium deposits at Arlit and Akouta. Gold deposits exist north-west of Niamey.

Civil unrest in neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire has deprived Niger of access to vital ports and made the export of the country's commodities more expensive and difficult.

Environmental problems facing Niger include overgrazing, deforestation, desertification and the destruction of wildlife through poaching. The country qualified for debt relief in 2000.

GNI – US$1,939 million (2000); US$180 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 3.4 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 2.9 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$1,638 million (2000)

IMPORTS – US$400 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$280 million (2002)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are no ports, harbours or railways. There are 10,100 km of highways, though less than 1,000 km of these are surfaced. The Niger River is navigable from the capital, Niamey, to the Benin frontier between December and March.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Radio, the most important form of communication in the country, is a growing sector and the state owned broadcaster competes with a number of private stations. A single state owned daily newspaper competes with a proliferating number of private publications.

Niger is the hub of Tuareg culture. One of Niger's most celebrated writers is Oum Ramatou (b. 1970).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Sokoto Caliphate, a powerful Muslim empire, dominated the region from the late 18th century.

The abolition of slavery by the British in 1807 led to several other powers attempting to exploit Nigeria's slave trade. This, in turn, led to British annexation of Lagos in 1861. British power in Nigeria established the Oil Rivers Protectorate in 1885 and the Niger Coast Protectorate in 1894. By 1914 British military expeditions had united the whole of modern Nigeria into a single political and administrative body under the control of the British Empire.

Full independence in 1960 released considerable ethnic tensions. The Igbo people began to agitate for secession following fierce anti-Igbo riots. These were sparked by an attempted coup by several Igbo army officers that resulted in the deaths of a number of government officials. The situation deteriorated into civil war when the Igbo proclaimed the Republic of Biafra in 1967. Biafra surrendered and returned to Nigeria in 1970.

Political stability proved impossible to implant in Nigeria and the 1970s and 1980s were tormented by coups and periods of semi-military rule. In 1993, General Sani Abacha seized power.

The death of Abacha in 1998 allowed the beginnings of a return to civilian rule. His successor, General Abdulsalami Abubakar, instituted a number of democratic reforms that led to the election of Olusegun Obasanjo of the People's Democratic Party (PDP) in 1999.

In legislative elections on 12 April 2003 the PDP retained its majority in both houses of parliament, and on 19 April 2003 Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo was returned to office for a second term with 61.9 per cent of the vote.

The debate on Shari'ah law has exacerbated divisions between Muslims and Christians and there have been sporadic clashes in which hundreds of civilians have been killed.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The country is a federal democratic republic. The President is directly elected for a four-year term, renewable only once. As head of the Government, the President appoints the Federal Executive Council, which must be approved by the Senate. The National Assembly is bicameral; the House of Representatives has 360 members and the Senate has 109 members, both elected for a four-year term.

Several predominantly Muslim northern states introduced the Islamic Shari'ah legal system during 2000, which President Obasanjo had declared unconstitutional on 1 November 1999. Bauchi adopted Shari'ah law in June 2001.

FEDERAL STATES

Originally comprising three regions, the Federation is now divided into 36 states and the Federal Capital Territory: Sokoto, Zamfara, Kebbi, Niger, Kwara, Kogi, Benue, Plateau, Nassarawa, Taraba, Adamawa, Borno, Yobe, Bauchi, Gombe, Jigawa, Kano, Katsina, Kaduna, Federal Capital Territory, Oyo, Osun, Ogun, Lagos, Ekiti, Edo, Delta, Rivers, Bayelsa, Abia, Imo, Ebonyi, Anambra, Enugu, Cross River and Akwa Ibom.

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 78,500: Army 62,000, Navy 7,000, Air Force 9,500; Paramilitaries 82,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Nigeria is the leading sub-Saharan oil producer, accounting for 2.3 million barrels per day. Oil accounts for 20 per cent of GDP, 65 per cent of budgetary revenues and 95 per cent of foreign exchange earnings. Debt relief was suspended in 2002 after Nigeria found it could not meet the imposed spending and exchange rate targets imposed by the IMF.

Agricultural crops include cocoa, peanuts, palm oil, corn, rice, sorghum, millet, cassava (tapioca) and yams. Apart from crude oil, Nigeria has reserves of coal, tin and columbite.

Environmental problems include soil degradation, deforestation, urban air and water pollution and the loss of arable land due to oil spills. There is large-scale migration from rural to urban areas, further threatening the agrarian sector.

There are 194,394 km of roads. The Nigerian railway network, which is controlled by the Nigerian Railway Corporation, has 3,557 km of track. The principal international airlines operate from Lagos, Kano and Port Harcourt.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are nine main daily newspapers, supplemented by weekly publications. The Nigerian Television Authority (NTA) is a state run broadcaster operating alongside a large number of private and commercial networks. Radio provides Nigerians with their main access to the media.

Nigeria has a strong literary heritage. Wole Soyinka (b. 1934) is the country's best known poet and was winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1986. Novelist Chinua Achebe (b. 1930) developed the African novel into a form which documented the impact of colonialism on African societies. Nigeria's most famous musician is Fela Kuti (1938-97).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Norwegian coastline is deeply indented with numerous fjords and fringed with rocky islands. The surface is mountainous, consisting of elevated and barren tablelands separated by deep and narrow valleys. Elevation extremes range from 2,469 m (Galdhopiggen) at the highest point to 0 m (Norwegian Sea) at the lowest. At the North Cape the sun does not appear to set from about 14 May to 29 July, causing the phenomenon known as the Midnight Sun; conversely, there is no apparent sunrise from about 18 November to 24 January. Average temperatures in Oslo range between -7°C in February to 22°C in August, however, winter temperatures in the north can drop to -15°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Norway became a unified country under rule of King Harald Fairhair in AD 900. The accession of Magnus VI (1319) unified the Norwegian and Swedish crowns until his son became King Haakon VI of Norway in 1343. The monarchies of Norway and Denmark were united in 1380. In 1814 Norway was ceded to Sweden until Norway became fully independent in 1905.

Neutral throughout the First World War, Norway was invaded by Germany in 1940. The Norwegian monarchy and government fled into exile in London and did not return until 7 June 1945.

King Haakon VII, a popular monarch who had reigned throughout the war years, died and was succeeded by his son, Crown Prince Olav. His death in 1991 brought King Harald V to the throne.

Norway joined NATO in 1949 and was a founder member of the European Free Trade Association in 1960. The Labour Party governed from 1945 to 1965 during which time an extensive welfare state was established.

A general election was held on 10 September 2001, in which no party won an outright majority. The Labour Party (DNA) has the largest number of seats (43) but three parties, the Conservative Party (H), the Christian Democratic Party (KrF) and the Liberal Party (V), agreed to form a coalition government, and on 19 October Kjell Magne Bondevik of the KrF was appointed Prime Minister.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Although a referendum in 1972 rejected membership of the EC, and the ruling centre-right coalition collapsed in 1990 over the question of EC membership the Storting voted in 1992 to apply to join the EC. Negotiations with the EU concluded on 1 March 1994 with a proposed accession date of 1 January 1995, however, in a national referendum on 28 November 1994 the electorate voted against joining the EU by 52.4 per cent to 47.6 per cent.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1814 constitution, the 165-member unicameral legislature, the Storting, is directly elected for four years. The Storting elects one-quarter of its members to constitute the Lagting (Upper Chamber), the other three-quarters forming the Odelsting (Lower Chamber), dividing when legislative matters are under discussion.

DEFENCE

Norway is a member of NATO. The Army has 170 main battle tanks, 157 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 189 armoured personnel carriers. The Navy has six submarines, three frigates and 15 patrol and coastal vessels at three bases. The Air Force has 61 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.9 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 26,600: Army 14,700, Navy 6,100, Air Force 5,000

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12 months plus refresher training

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Norwegian economy relies primarily upon its oil and gas sectors and fisheries. The third largest oil exporter after Saudi Arabia and Russia, Norway's net exports of oil and petroleum products reached 3.1 million barrels per day in 2002. In 2001 oil and gas accounted for 36 per cent of all exports. The chief imports are motor vehicles, ships and machinery, clothing, foods and textiles.

Shipping freight services are also significant with Norwegian companies controlling 10 per cent of the world's shipping fleet. The export of timber and aluminium is also important.

As a safeguard against the decline of oil and gas stocks, Norway has invested its budget surpluses into the Government Petroleum Fund, now worth about US$ 43,000 million.

GNI – US$160,800 million (2001); US$35,630 per capita (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Oman lies at the eastern corner of the Arabian peninsula. The north and the south of the country are divided by nearly 643 km of desert. The Hajjar mountain range runs from north-west to south-east, and elevation extremes range from 2,980 m (Jabal Shams) at the highest point to 0 m (Arabian Sea) at the lowest. Average temperatures range from 12°C in January to 44°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Oman began to build an empire in the Middle East from the eighth century AD and remained unchallenged until the arrival of the Portuguese in the 16th century. A century long period of Portuguese occupation was brought to a close in 1650. A second Omani empire flourished, and by the 19th century had reached the African coast and Central Asia where Omanis controlled Baluchistan in modern Pakistan.

As the empire declined in power, Oman was subject to internal disputes. Sultan Qaboos bin Said came to power in 1970 and began to modernise the country.

Basic Law was adopted in 1996 and established a succession mechanism, codified the system of Government and developed political and legal systems. On 4 October 2003 elections for the Consultative Council were held. This poll marked the first time all Omanis over the age of 21 (including women) had been allowed to vote. Two women were elected to the Council.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

In 1996 the Sultan issued the Basic Statute of the State which decreed Oman to be a Hereditary Absolute Monarchy. Effective political power remains with the Sultan, who rules by decree and is advised by the Cabinet of Ministers, which he appoints. The Sultan is advised by the Council of State (Majlis al-Dawlah), whose 41 members are appointed by him. The 83-member Consultative Council (Majlis ash-Shura) has been directly elected since September 2000. The Council has the right to review Legislation, question Ministers and make policy proposals.

 Paramilitaries 4,400

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy of Oman is primarily dependent on the export of oil and gas although the agriculture and fishing sectors are also important. Oil production began in 1967 and accounts for 80 per cent of Government revenue. The natural gas industry is being developed, as is tourism and communication technology.

Agriculture is limited, accounting for just 2.1 per cent of GDP, and produces dates, limes, bananas, alfalfa and vegetables.

Oman joined the World Trade Organisation (WTO) in November 2000 and has since embarked on a process of privatising its utilities.

GDP – US$14,162 million (1998); US$7,811 per capita (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 76 per cent (1997); secondary 67 per cent (1997); tertiary 8 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The only television broadcaster is the state controlled Oman TV. Satellite television is popular. There are, however, a large number of newspapers including four national dailies.

PAKISTAN

Islāmī Jamhūriya-e-Pākīstān – Islamic Republic of Pakistan

AREA – 770,900 sq. km. Neighbours: Iran (west), Afghanistan (north and north-west), China (north-east), the disputed territory of Kashmir, India (east)

POPULATION – 144,971,000 (2001); 95 per cent Muslim, 3.5 per cent Christian, about 1 per cent Hindu, and 0.5 per cent Buddhist. Urdu is the national language, but is only spoken by a small minority of the population. The most widely used language is Punjabi, followed by Sindi and Pushto. English is widely used in business, government and higher education

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

There are mountainous regions in the north of the country that include the Karakoram and Himalayan ranges. Elevation extremes range from 8,611 m (K2) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The climate of Pakistan varies greatly. Average temperatures in Islamabad range from 2°C in January to 40°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Mughal rule during the 16th and 17th centuries eventually gave way to British domination and Kashmir, Ladakh, the Punjab and Sind all came under British control by 1857.

A constitution was adopted in 1956. It established the country as two territories, West and East Pakistan (East Pakistan being made up of the majority Muslim state of Bengal), which, since they were divided by India, had no land contact. President Mirza initiated the country's first military coup in 1958. A second war with India was lost in 1965 and, in 1971, East Pakistan became Bangladesh. Pakistan and Bangladesh accorded one another mutual recognition in 1974.

Pakistan subsequently experienced further conflict with India, military rule and greater economic decline until the death of General Zia ul-Haq in 1988. He was succeeded in an election by Benazir Bhutto, the first woman to become an elected prime minister of a Muslim country. She was succeeded by Nawaz Sharif in 1997.

In 20 June 2001, Gen. Musharraf dismissed the elected president and assumed the presidency himself. The extension of Musharraf's presidency for a further five years was approved by referendum in April 2002. In August 2002 President Musharraf granted himself new powers, including the right to dissolve parliament and dismiss the Government.

In the elections to the National Assembly on 10 October 2002, 77 of the 342 seats were won by the Pakistan Muslim League (Qaid-i-Azam-PML-Q), making it the largest single party, and it also gained a majority in the senate elections in February. Mir Zafarullah Khan Jamali was elected prime minister on 21 November 2002 and both he and the new cabinet were sworn in on 23 November. Since the 2002 elections, the National Assembly has been unable to function fully because of procedural disruption by members opposed to the president. On 21 August 2003 the North-West Frontier Province voted to introduce Shari'ah law. On 26 June 2004, Zafarullah Khan Jamali resigned as prime minister. He was replaced by Chaudhry Shujaat Hussain.

INSURGENCY

Since early 1994 there has been civil disorder in the Sind province, especially in Karachi, in two conflicts: armed militants of the Mohajir Qaumi Movement (MQM), which represents Urdu-speaking Indian Muslims who fled India at partition and their descendants, who are fighting for an autonomous Karachi province; and the armed conflict between Shia and Sunni fundamentalists. During 2002 there were attacks against Christians and Westerners, which were thought to be the work of Islamic militants opposed to Pakistan's support for the US-led war on Afghanistan.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

The conflict with India over Kashmir flared up in May 1999 when India launched air attacks on Muslim insurgents who had occupied mountainous regions inside India-controlled Kashmir. Small-scale conflicts continued but in December 2001, India and Pakistan assembled troops along the common border and during May and June 2002 there was concern that the conflict could spiral into a nuclear exchange. Following intense international diplomatic activity, the threat of war receded and, by the beginning of 2004, relations between the two countries improved when the Indian Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee visited Pakistan for further peace talks.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The legislature is bicameral, but was suspended following the coup in October 1999. Under the Constitution, the Majlis as-Shoora (National Assembly) serves a five-year term and comprises 342 members, of whom 272 are directly elected, 10 represent religious minorities and 60 are co-opted women. The Senate has 100 members. The four provinces each have a provincial assembly and are represented in both legislative chambers.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

There are six provinces in Pakistan (population census 1998): Baluchistan (6,511,000), Federal Capital Territory Islamabad (805,000), Federally Administered Tribal Areas (3,138,000), North-West Frontier Province (17,555,000), Punjab (72,585,000) and Sind (29,991,000).

HEAD OF STATE

DEFENCE

The Army has some 2,427 main battle tanks, 1,251 armoured personnel carriers and 19 attack helicopters. The Navy has ten submarines, eight frigates, nine patrol and coastal vessels, six combat aircraft and nine armed helicopters based at Karachi. The Air Force has 374 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 3.9 per cent of GDP (2001)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 620,000: Army 550,000, Navy 25,000, Air Force 45,000; Paramilitaries 294,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture accounts for 44 per cent of the labour force producing cotton, wheat, rice, sugarcane, fruits, vegetables, milk, beef and mutton. Significant manufacturing industries include cotton yarn, thread, and fabrics. Food processing, pharmaceuticals and construction materials are also important. Principal exports are cotton yarn and cloth, carpets, rice, petroleum products, textiles, leather and fish. Pakistan's massive military expenditure has restricted growth in the economy. Principal imports are petroleum products, machinery, fertilisers, transport equipment, edible oils, chemicals and ferrous metals.

The country has seen large-scale emigration of its labour force to the Middle East (these workers provide important remittances) and this has produced a growth in the use of child labour within Pakistan.

GNI – US$60,000 million (2001); US$420 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.6 per cent (2000)

Exports to UK	488,618,000	532,456,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 86,597 km of roads and 7,344 km of railways. There are major seaports at Karachi and Port Qasim. The main airports are at Karachi, Islamabad, Lahore, Peshawar and Quetta. Pakistan International Airlines operates domestic air services between the principal cities as well as international services.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge to upper secondary level. The system consists of five years of primary education (five to nine years), three years of middle or lower secondary (general or vocational), two years of upper secondary, two years of higher secondary (intermediate) and two to five years of higher education in colleges and universities.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 40.1 per cent; (f) 68.9 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 3.0 per cent (1991)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are eight national newspapers, and the state owned broadcaster, Pakistan Television Corporation Ltd., competes with several private networks. In 2004, the government had granted licences for a number of satellite television and radio stations.

Pakistan is rich in the remains of the earliest Buddhist and Hindu civilisations, as well as the distinct architecture of the Mughal period.

Important Pakistani writers include the poet Allama Muhammad (1877–1938) and the Urdu novelist Altaf Fatima (b. 1929).

PALAU

Belu'u era Belau-Republic of Palau

AREA – 458 sq. km

POPULATION – 20,000 (2001); 13,900 live on Koror and Babelthap. The population is Micronesian, and predominantly Roman Catholic with a Protestant minority. Palauan and English are the official languages

 DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1994)
 POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.6 per cent
 (1990–2001)
 POPULATION DENSITY – 44 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Republic of Palau consists of 340 islands and islets in the western Pacific Ocean, of which only eight are inhabited. Elevation extremes range from 242 m (Mt Ngerchelchau) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The islands are mainly low-lying and have a tropical climate with a wet season from May to November. Average daily temperatures are an almost constant 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Britain became Palau's main trading partner in the 18th century, but did not colonise the islands. Control of the islands passed to Germany in 1889, who exploited the country for its labour force and coconut plantations. Japanese occupation in 1914 eroded much of Palau's indigenous culture.

The USA liberated Palau from Japan during the Second World War and administered the island thereafter. The island became a Trust Territory in 1947 and entered into a Compact of Free Association with the USA in 1982. This entailed the USA recognising the Republic of Palau but retaining some rights to parts of the island for 50 years and assuming responsibility for defence.

Palau eventually adopted its own constitution in 1980 and full independence in 1994. Tommy Remengesau became president in 2000.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the President and Vice-President, who are directly elected for a four-year term; the President appoints the Cabinet. There is a bicameral legislature (Olbiil era Kelulau) composed of the 16-member House of Delegates (one member elected from each of the 16 constituent states) and the 14-member Senate. There is also a Council of Chiefs to advise the President on matters concerning traditional law and customs. Each of the 16 component states have their own elected governors and legislatures.

HEAD OF STATE

President, Tommy Remengesau, elected 7 November 2000, took office 19 January 2001
Vice-President, Health, Sandra Pierantozzi

SELECTED GOVERNMENT MEMBERS as at July 2004

Commerce and Trade, Otoichi Besebes
Justice, Michael Rosenthal
Minister of State, Temmy Shmull

BRITISH AMBASSADOR, HE Ian Powell, resident at Suva, Fiji

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture is largely on the subsistence level and fishing plays a large part in the economy. Agricultural production is centred on crops such as coconuts, copra, cassava and sweet potatoes. Palau's economy is greatly dependent on the tourism industry, which caters for around 50,000 tourists a year. Many other industries are influenced by tourism, such as the production of arts and crafts. The island also derives an income from the sale of licences to fishing fleets.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Panama gained its independence from Spain in 1821 and joined the confederacy of Gran Colombia (comprising Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia). Towards the end of the 19th century France attempted to construct a canal linking the Atlantic and Pacific oceans across Panama. The attempt failed and cost the lives of an estimated 20,000 workers. The US government eventually intervened and the canal was completed in 1914. Panama had gained its independence from Colombia in 1903 but did not attain full control over the canal until 1999.

General Noriega seized control of Panama in 1984 and instigated a period of military rule but was deposed in a US-led invasion in 1986. Noriega was captured in 1990 and sentenced to 40 years imprisonment in 1992 on money laundering and drug-trafficking charges.

The presidential elections of May 2004 were won by Martín Torrijos Espino of the Partido Revolucionario Democrática (PRD), who gained 47.4 per cent of the vote. In the legislative elections of the same year the PRD won 41 of the 71 seats in the Legislative Assembly.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Legislative power is vested in a unicameral Legislative Assembly of 71 members; executive power is held by the President, assisted by two elected Vice-Presidents and an appointed Cabinet. Elections are held every five years under a system of universal and compulsory adult suffrage.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Papua New Guinea consists of the eastern half of the island of New Guinea, plus several more outlying islands. Elevation extremes range from 4,509 m (Mt Wilhelm) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest.

Average temperatures range from 28°C in August to 31°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In 1884 a British protectorate, British New Guinea, was proclaimed over the southern coast of New Guinea (Papua) and the adjacent islands, which were annexed outright in 1888. In 1906 the territory was placed under the authority of Australia. The northern areas were under German administration between 1884 and 1914, when they were occupied by Australian troops and in 1921 became a League of Nations mandate administered by Australia. The territories were occupied by Japan between 1942 and 1945.

In 1989 a civil conflict between the Bougainville Revolutionary Army and the Papuan central authorities began and lasted for nine years. A final resolution was reached in 2001, and the last Papuan government forces left in 2003.

Following elections in June 2002, the National Alliance Party (NAP) was the largest party in Parliament, and on 5 August 2002, the NAP leader Sir Michael Somare was elected prime minister for the third time and formed a coalition cabinet.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Elections are held every five years. The National Parliament comprises 109 elected members, 20 from regional electorates, the remainder from open electorates. The head of state is the British sovereign, represented by the Governor-General, who is appointed by Parliament for a six-year term. Provincial Governments were abolished in 1995, and replaced with Councils combining local and national politicians and headed by an appointed Governor.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Papua New Guinea's economy is divided between modern industries such as gold and copper mining and petroleum, and traditional industries like farming and fishing. Corruption, political instability and unresolved land compensation has discouraged foreign investment.

Subsistence farming employs 85 per cent of the population. Over the last decade public services have deteriorated and the advances made in public health in the years following independence have not been sustained.

There are extensive mineral deposits throughout Papua

New Guinea, including copper, gold, silver, nickel, bauxite and commercial deposits of oil and natural gas, but exploitation is hampered by the terrain and poor infrastructure.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 21,433 km of roads, the most important road being that linking Lae with the populous highlands. Air Niugini operates regular services to other countries in the region, as well as internal air services. Several shipping companies operate cargo services to Australia, Europe, the Far East and USA. There are very limited cargo and passenger services between the main ports, outports, plantations and missions.

Papua New Guinea has communication links with Australia, Guam, Hong Kong, the Far East and the USA via submarine cables.

MEDIA

EMTV is the country's sole television broadcaster. Radio is of vital importance due to Papua New Guinea's widely scattered population and low levels of literacy. The state run National Broadcasting Corporation runs a radio network which competes with the commercial NAU FM. There are two daily newspapers and a number of weekly publications.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 875 m (Cerro Pero) at the highest point to 46 m (the junction of Rio Paraguay and Rio Parana) at the lowest. Average temperatures in the capital Asunción range from 23°C in June to 34°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Spanish colonisation of Paraguay began in the early 16th century and the capital city Asunción was founded on 15 August 1537. Paraguay became independent from Spain in 1811 with José Gaspar Rodríguez de Francia ruling until his death in 1840. His successor instigated a period of reform and modernisation which ended in 1865 with the catastrophic War of the Triple Alliance. This war against Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina not only resulted in the loss of tens of thousands of square miles of Paraguayan territory, but it also resulted in many deaths. Paraguay did not recover for the rest of the 19th century, and the years leading up to the Second World War were marked by social instability.

General Alfredo Stroessner took power in 1954 but his rule was marked by corruption and human rights abuses. His own ousting in a coup in 1989 paved the way for eventual democratic rule and the first elections took place in 1993.

Though Paraguay has continued to be troubled by attempted coups and large-scale corruption, it conducted further elections in 1998. In the presidential and legislative elections on 27 April 2003, the National Republican Association-Colorado Party (ANR-PC) remained the largest party in Congress, winning 16 out of the 45 seats; its candidate, Nicanor Duarte Frutos, won the presidential election with 37.1 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution provides for a two-chamber legislature consisting of a 45-member Senate and an 80-member Chamber of Deputies, both directly elected for a five-year term. Deputies are elected on a regional basis, the number of seats allocated to each regional department being directly proportional to the department's population. Voting is compulsory for all citizens over 18. The President is elected for a five-year term and may not be re-elected. The Vice-President may only contest the presidency if he resigns his post six months before the election. The President appoints the Council of Ministers, which exercises all the functions of Government.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Paraguay has a large agricultural sector, much of it on a subsistence level, accounting for 27 per cent of GDP. Agricultural production is centred on cassava, seed cotton, sugarcane, corn, wheat, root crops such as sweet potatoes, and fruits such as bananas and oranges. Livestock – cattle, horses, pigs and sheep – is an important aspect of the farming industry. The country has few mineral resources and the main industries are sugar refining, cement production and textiles. The country faces problems such as the lack of infrastructure and national debt and environmental challenges include deforestation and water pollution. In 2004, Congress began to draft a new economic plan that would increase value added tax and strengthen the country's tax and administration infrastructure.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Peru is traversed by the Andes, running parallel to the Pacific coast. There are three main regions, the Costa, west of the Andes; the Sierra or mountain ranges of the Andes, which include the Punas or mountainous wastes below the region of perpetual snow, and the Montaña or Selva, which is the vast area of jungle stretching from the eastern foothills of the Andes to the eastern frontiers of Peru. Elevation extremes range from 6,768 m (Nevado Huascaran) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Lima range from 16°C in July 26°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Incas came to pre-eminence in Peru in the 15th century and the country was conquered by the Spanish in the early 16th century.

Nationalist aspirations grew throughout the 18th century and the Spanish Empire was deposed. The revolutionaries Jose de San Martin, Simon Bolivar and General Antonio Jose de Sucre fought a long campaign of liberation. San Martin declared Peruvian independence on 28 July 1821 but it was not until 1824 that the Spanish forces were finally defeated at Ayacucho. Spain, however, did not recognise Peru's independence until 1879.

Throughout the remainder of the 19th century and a large part of the 20th, Peru suffered periods of oppressive military rule and was troubled by border disputes with its neighbours. The last general to rule the country was General Francisco Morales Bermudez who guided the country to democracy in 1980 and won an election in May of that year. Civilian rule, however, did not bring stability. Two left wing insurgent groups, Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path) and Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru (MRTA), began to challenge the State in the 1980s. Both organisations were finally defeated in 1998, although only after many thousands had been killed by both the government and insurgent sides. Hyperinflation due to economic mismanagement and political instability followed, and in 1990 an unknown college lecturer, Alberto Fujimori, was elected president on a promise of economic reform.

A general election was held on 8 April 2001 in which the Peru Possible (PP) party won 43 seats and the Peruvian Aprista Party (APRA) won 28 seats. The presidential election was held in two rounds on 8 April and 3 June and was won by the PP candidate, Alejandro Toledo, who was sworn in as president on 28 July, becoming the first Amerindian to hold the position. However, Toledo's period in office has been dogged by frequent cabinet reshuffles. A sixth cabinet was appointed in 2004.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

A 78 km stretch of the border with Ecuador has been in dispute since 1960. In 1995 an inconclusive border war was fought between the two countries, and in July 1995 a demilitarised zone was established around the disputed area. Four guarantor countries (Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the USA) adjudicated the claims of both countries and produced an agreement which was signed on 26 October 1998 by the presidents of Ecuador and Peru, formally ending the dispute. In 1999 Peru and Chile finally implemented accords first agreed in 1929 to end a border dispute.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution, promulgated in December 1993, provides for the President to be able to serve two terms; a constitutional panel approved a Bill in August 1996 allowing President Fujimori to stand for a third term in office. The unicameral legislature, the Congress of the Republic, has 120 members, directly elected for a five-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Peru has significant mineral wealth (including gold, though much of this has been exhausted). In addition to this, important industries include petroleum, shipbuilding, textiles, food processing and metal fabrication. Agriculture is centred on coffee, cotton, sugarcane, rice, wheat, potatoes, corn, plantains and coca.

Since 1990 the government has launched a radical free-market restructuring programme which has rebuilt the foreign exchange reserves, reduced inflation, cut subsidies and import tariffs, freed interest rates and privatised most state firms. Foreign investment has been encouraged and has grown dramatically.

Peru faces a range of environmental challenges such as deforestation, soil erosion and desertification, all of which are on the increase and may affect the economy. Peru's substantial coastal fishing resources are threatened by pollution from mining wastes.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Media freedom has greatly improved since the end of the Alberto Fujimori administration. Commercial television and radio receives a higher market share than the state networks. There are six national daily newspapers and a host of commercial radio broadcasters. The state owned Television Nacional de Peru competes with three commercial broadcasters including America TV and Panamericana.

Mestizo architecture and Cuzco painting are a fusion of Spanish and indigenous styles that have greatly influenced European art. José María Arguedes (1911–69) is one of Peru's most celebrated novelists.

THE PHILIPPINES

Republika ng Pilipinas – Republic of the Philippines

AREA – 298,200 sq. km

POPULATION – 77,131,000 (2001). The inhabitants are of Malay stock, with admixtures of Spanish and Chinese blood in many localities. The Chinese minority is estimated at 500,000, with smaller numbers of Spanish, American and Indian.

About 90 per cent are Christian, predominantly Roman Catholics. Most of the remainder are Muslims or indigenous animists. The official languages are Filipino and English. Filipino is based on Tagalog, one of the Malay-Polynesian languages. English, the language of government, is spoken by at least 44 per cent of the population. Spanish is now spoken by a very small minority

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The principal islands of the Philippines (area in sq. km) are: Luzon (104,688); Mindanao (94,630); Samar (13,080); Negros (12,710); Palawan (11,785); Panay (11,515); Mindoro (9,735); Leyte (7,214); Cebu (4,422); Bohol (3,865) and Masbate (3,269). Other groups are the Sulu islands (capital, Jolo), Babuyan and Batanes; the Calamian islands; and Kalayaan Islands. Elevation extremes range from 2,954 (Mt Apo) at the highest point to 0 m (Philippine Sea) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with average temperatures ranging from 23°C in January to 31°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Philippines were conquered by Spain in 1565 and colonial rule lasted until 1898 when US troops captured Manila in the American-Spanish war. The country remained under US control until 1946 when the Republic of the Philippines came into existence.

Similar to many countries emerging from colonialism, the Philippines suffered a period of post-imperial instability. In 1965 Ferdinand Marcos seized power, and declared martial law seven years later. Communist and Islamic insurgencies broke out in several parts of the Philippines, and by 1983 the country was suffering a full political crisis. Rigged elections in 1986 led to the People's Power Revolution, which brought Corazon Aquino to office. A fresh constitution adopted in 1987 planted democratic politics in the Philippines.

Fidel Ramos, who was elected president in 1992, built on the work of his predecessor by instigating peace talks with both the communist and Islamic rebels. Ramos was succeeded by Joseph Estrada in 1998. It was under Estrada's premiership that the peace process with the communist insurgents and the main Islamist insurgent group, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), began to stall. The situation was complicated by the emergence of Abu Sayyaf, another Islamist group that began a spate of violent kidnappings. Muslim unrest at Government repression of these groups, as well as general dissatisfaction with Estrada led to his removal in a second People's Revolution.

Gloria Macapagal Arroyo became president in January 2001. She quickly moved to re-establish peace talks with the MILF, and the National Democratic Front (NDF), a front organisation for the communist insurgents. The talks with the MILF, though often interrupted by violence, eventually achieved a cease-fire in 2003.

Progress with the NDF has proved more problematic. The insurgents and government forces continued to clash and it was only in February 2004 that peace talks resumed.

Presidential elections were held on 10 May 2004. However, the process of collecting and collating the votes was severely delayed and as at August 2004, results were unavailable.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Legislative authority is vested in a bicameral Congress. The House of Representatives has 250 members, of whom 204 are directly elected and 46 appointed by the President for a three-year term. The Senate has 24 members, of whom 12 are re-elected every three years.

The Autonomous Region of Mindanao consists of four provinces: Sulu, Tawi-Tawi, Lanao del Sur and Maguindanao. There is a 24-member Regional Assembly and a Governor.

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 106,000: Army 66,000, Navy 24,000, Air Force 16,000; Paramilitaries 44,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Major industries in the Philippines include food processing and fishing, electronics assembly, textile manufacture, pharmaceuticals, chemical production and petroleum refining. The country still has a large agricultural sector with 45 per cent of the labour force employed, producing rice, coconuts, corn, sugarcane, bananas and pineapples.

The Philippines experienced GDP growth of 4.5 per cent in 2003 and 6.4 per cent in the first quarter of 2004. This was boosted by growth in agricultural exports and the service industries. Remittances from Filipinos working abroad are also vital to the economy. There are high levels of debt and a large budget deficit. The government is attempting to introduce market reforms but investor confidence has suffered from recent political turmoil and insurgency.

Agriculture and fishing industries face a number of environmental challenges. The country suffers soil erosion, deforestation and air and water pollution on a large scale. There is also pollution of coastal mangrove swamps which are important fish breeding grounds.

Poland's terrain is mostly flat plain, with mountains along the southern border. Elevation extremes range from 2,499 m (Rysy) at the highest point to –2 m (Raczki Elblaskie) at the lowest. The climate is continental and average temperatures in Warsaw range from –5°C in January to 24°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth ended with its partition by Russia, Prussia and Austria in 1795. This lasted until 1918 when independence was granted with the signing of the Treaty of Versailles.

German forces invaded Poland on 1 September 1939; on 17 September, Russian forces invaded eastern Poland, and on 21 September 1939 Poland was declared by Germany and Russia to have ceased to exist. At the end of the war, its frontiers were redrawn; eastern Poland was ceded to the Soviet Union in return for the German territory east of the rivers Oder and Neisse. A coalition government was formed in which the Polish Workers' Party (PWP) played a large part. In December 1948, the PWP and the Polish Socialist Party merged to form the Polish United Workers' Party (PUWP). A new constitution modelled on the Soviet constitution was adopted in 1952, and was modified in 1976.

As hopes for prosperity dwindled, labour organisation increased, backed by a committed intelligentsia, with workers' delegations convening under the Solidarity trade union banner, led by Lech Walesa. In 1981, the demoralised Communist government declared martial law and interned Walesa and other leaders, driving Solidarity underground. However continuing strikes eventually resulted in talks between Walesa and the PUWP early in 1989. Multiparty parliamentary elections were held later that year, in which Walesa was elected as president and the PUWP ceased to be the ruling party. The post-communist governments introduced a free-market economy but economic difficulties and a fragmented parliament led to a succession of short-lived governments, and Walesa was toppled from the presidency in 1995 by former Communists Aleksander Kwasniewski and Włodzimierz Cimoszewicz.

Kwasniewski, running for the Democratic Left Alliance (SLD), subsequently took political control and was then re-elected for a second presidential term in October 2000. Elections held on 23 September 2001 were won by an electoral alliance of the SLD and the Labour Union (UP), which won 216 seats in the Diet (Sejm) and 75 in the senate. A coalition government comprising the SLD, UP and the Polish Peasant Party (PSL) took office on 19 October. The PSL left the ruling coalition in March 2003 over its opposition to government on tax measures.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Poland became a member of NATO in March 1999, and joined the EU in May 2004. The country's international profile was raised following its support for the US-led military campaign in Iraq in 2003, when it took command of one of three peacekeeping sectors.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new constitution came into effect on 16 October 1997. The President, directly elected for a maximum of two five-year terms, appoints the Prime Minister and has the right to be consulted over the appointment of the foreign, defence and interior ministers. The National Assembly is the bicameral legislature, comprising a 460-member Sejm and a Senate of 100 members. Both houses serve a four-year term. The Senate is elected on a provincial basis.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Poland has vast mineral resources; there are large reserves of brown coal in central and south-western Poland and hard coal in Upper Silesia, the Walbrzych and Lublin regions; sulphur, copper, zinc, lead, silver, natural gas and salt are also produced.

Poland's major exports include machinery and vehicles, leather and textiles, metal goods, livestock, foodstuffs, luxury goods and chemical products. Its major imports are machinery and vehicles, chemical products, leather and textiles, livestock, foodstuffs, luxury goods and metal products. Germany is Poland's main trading partner.

In 1990, the government embarked upon a series of measures designed to introduce a free-market economy. The transition caused unemployment to double between 1990 and 1995 and it remains high. Industrial output has improved and the growth rate of GDP has increased although inflation remains high.

A programme has taken place to modernise the large agricultural sector and adapt it to the EU's common agricultural policy but the sector remains inefficient and future EU subsidy levels have been a major area of controversy, with corruption being one of the main concerns.

MEDIA

Poland's broadcasting network is the largest in eastern and central Europe, and there is freedom and diversity of information in the media, although laws against criticism of the political system are still in force. State owned TV (TVP) still has the largest share of the audience for its two national channels. State owned Polish radio reaches just over half the population and there are more than 200 other commercial local and regional stations on air. Poland has over 300 newspapers, most of them local or regional.

CULTURE

Major writers include Henryk Sienkiewicz (1846–1916), Nobel Prize winner for Literature in 1905; Boleslaw Prus (1847–1912); Stanislaw Reymont (1867–1925), Nobel Prize winner for Literature in 1924; Czeslaw Milosz (b. 1911), Nobel Prize winner for Literature in 1980; and Wislawa Szymborska (b. 1923), Nobel Prize winner for Literature in 1996.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain is mountainous north of the Tagus river, with rolling plains in the south. Elevation extremes range from 2,351 m (Ponta do Pico) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Portugal's climate is mild, with average temperatures in Lisbon ranging from 8°C in January to 28°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Portugal's recent history has been much influenced by its maritime past, when during the 15th and 16th centuries its empire covered Brazil and parts of China as well as vast areas of Africa.

The country was a monarchy from the 12th century until 1910, when an armed uprising in Lisbon drove King Manuel II into exile and a republic was imposed. A period of political instability ensued until the military intervened and abolished political parties in 1926. The constitution of 1933 gave formal expression to the corporative 'Estado Novo' (New State) which was personified by Dr Antonio Salazar, prime minister 1932–68. Dr Caetano succeeded Salazar in 1968 but his failure to liberalise the regime or to conclude the wars in the African colonies resulted in his government's overthrow by a military coup in April 1974. Great political turmoil followed until July 1976, a period in which most of the colonies gained their independence, but with the failure of an attempted coup by the extreme left in November 1975 the situation stabilised. Full civilian government was restored in 1982.

Macao, which had been a Portuguese colony since 1557, was transferred to Chinese sovereignty on 19 December 1999.

In the presidential election held in January 2001, Jorge Sampaio of the Socialist Party was re-elected, gaining 55.8 per cent of the total vote. The subsequent general election, held on 17 March 2002, saw the Social Democratic Party (PSD) become the largest party in the Assembly winning 102 seats. José Manuel Durão Barroso of the PSD was sworn in as prime minister on 6 April, leading a coalition government of the PSD and the People's Party (PP). Mr Barroso resigned in July 2004. His immediate successor was Pedro Santa Lopes who announced a new government, a coalition of the PSD and PP, on 17 July 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1976 Constitution, amended in 1982 and 1989, the President is elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage. The Prime Minister is designated by the largest party in the legislature. Legislative authority is vested in the 230-member Assembly of the Republic, elected by a system of proportional representation every four years. The President retains certain limited powers to dismiss the Government, dissolve the Assembly or veto laws.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Portugal has experienced rapid economic growth since joining the EU in 1986. It was one of 11 states to adopt the European single currency on 1 January 1999, and the euro replaced the escudo on 1 January 2002.

The chief agricultural products are wine, dairy products, potatoes, tomatoes, maize, meat, fruit, olives, wheat, fish and rice. There are extensive forests of pine, cork, eucalyptus and chestnut covering about 38 per cent of the country. Around 13 per cent of the workforce are engaged in agriculture, the highest percentage in the EU. The principal mineral products are limestone, granite, marble, copper, coal, kaolin and wolframite.

The country is moderately industrialised. The principal manufactures are motor vehicle components, clothing and footwear, textiles, machinery, pulp and paper, pharmaceuticals, foodstuffs, chemicals, fertilisers, wood, cork, furniture, cement, glassware and pottery. There are a modern steelworks and large shipbuilding and repair yards at Lisbon and Setúbal, working mainly for foreign shipowners. There are several hydroelectric power stations and two thermal power stations.

The main exports are textiles, clothing and shoes, machinery, automobile parts, wood, pulp, paper and cork, and minerals. Principal imports include machinery, vehicles, textiles, agricultural products, chemicals, oil and base metals.

MEDIA

Portugal's public broadcaster RTP enjoyed a monopoly until commercial TV was launched in 1992. Public radio networks are operated by RTP, while the Catholic church owns Radio Renascença. There are some 300 other local and regional commercial radio stations.

Principal national newspapers include the dailies Diário de Notícias, Publico, Correio da Manhã and Jornal de Notícias, the weekly Expresso, and the English-language The Portugal News.

CULTURE

Portuguese culture dates back to prehistoric times, as well as retaining traces of Roman and Arab influences. A rich archaeological legacy includes the prehistoric cave paintings at Escorial, the Roman township of Conimbriga, the Temple of Diana in Évora and the typical Arab-inspired architecture of such southern towns as Olhão and Tavira. Portugal's culture also benefited from other foreign influences, including Flemish, French and Italian. Celebrated Portuguese writers include José Cardoso Pires (1925–98), Fernando Pessoa (1888–1935) and José Saramago (b. 1922), winner of the 1998 Nobel Prize for Literature.

AUTONOMOUS REGIONS

Madeira and The Azores are two administratively autonomous regions of Portugal, having locally elected assemblies and governments.

MADEIRA is a group of islands in the Atlantic Ocean about 520 miles south-west of Lisbon, and consists of Madeira, Porto, Santo and three uninhabited islands (Desertas). Total area is 779 sq. km; population, 253,482 (2001). ΨFunchal in Madeira, the largest island, is the capital (population 103,961)

THE AZORES are a group of nine islands (Flores, Corvo, Terceira, São Jorge, Pico, Faial, Graciosa, São Miguel and Santa Maria) in the Atlantic Ocean; area 2,330 sq. km; population, 243,895 (2001). ΨPonta Delgada, on São Miguel, is the capital (population, 137,700). Other ports are ΨAngra, in Terceira (55,900) and ΨHorta (16,300)

QATAR

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain is mostly flat and barren with elevation extremes ranging from 103 m (Qurayn Abu al Bawl) at the highest point to 0 m (Persian Gulf) at the lowest. The country has a desert climate and average temperatures range from 23°C in January to 35°C in July. Humidity along the coast often reaches 90 per cent during the summer and average annual rainfall is below 75 mm.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Qatar was one of nine independent emirates in the Gulf in special treaty relations with the UK until 1971. On 2 April 1970, a provisional constitution for Qatar was proclaimed, providing for the establishment of a Council of Ministers and for the formation of a Consultative Council to assist the Council of Ministers in running the affairs of the state. There are no political parties or legislature; ministers are chosen by the Amir.

The Amir, who had ruled since 22 February 1972, was overthrown on 27 June 1995 by his son and heir, who assumed power as Amir the same day. An attempted coup in 1996 failed.

Municipal elections were held on 8 March 1999, the first in which women were allowed to vote and contest seats. In a referendum held on 29 April 2003, voters approved a new constitution, providing for a 45-member (Consultative) Council (Shura) of which 30 members will be directly elected and 15 appointed by the Amir. The first elections to the council are due to be held in 2005.

On 5 August 2003 the Amir named his younger son, Prince Tamim, as the crown prince to replace Prince Jassim, who had expressed a desire to give up the post.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is based largely on oil, gas and petrochemicals, which account for more than 55 per cent of GDP, roughly 85 per cent of export earnings, and 70 per cent of government revenues. The state-owned Qatar General Petroleum Corporation controls the industry, and is responsible for oil production onshore and offshore. The large reserves of natural gas in the North Field came into production in September 1991.

Other industries include a steel mill, a fertiliser plant, a cement factory, a petrochemical complex and two natural gas liquids plants. With the exception of the cement works at Umm Bāb, all these industries are at Musay'id, about 30 miles south of Doha. Qatar is also expanding its infrastructure, including electrical generation and water distillation, roads, houses, and government buildings. The chief imports are machinery and equipment, manufactures, foodstuffs, livestock and chemicals.

GNI – US$17,100 per capita (2001)

Exports to UK	28,667,000	54,931,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 1,210 km of roads, of which 1,089 km are surfaced. Regular air services provided by Gulf Air and Qatar Airways connect Qatar with the other Gulf states, the Middle East, the Indian sub-continent, Africa and Europe.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Qatar officially lifted its censorship of the media in 1995 and since then the press has been essentially free from government interference. Qatari satellite television – Al Jazeera, launched in 1997 – has become one of the most important broadcasters in the Middle East. Radio is state run by the Qatar Broadcasting Service (QBS), and the BBC World Service is available in Doha. The most popular newspapers are Al-Watan and the English-language Gulf Times.

Qatar is primarily a Bedouin culture, and the tribal ethos and a strong oral tradition still survives. Traditional Qatari dress is characterised by gold or silver embroidery, known as al-zari or al-qasab.

ROMANIA

România – Romania

AREA – 230,300 sq. km. Neighbours: Ukraine (north and east), Moldova (east), Bulgaria (south), Serbia and Montenegro (south-west), Hungary (north-west)

POPULATION – 22,388,000 (2001): 89.4 per cent Romanian, 7.1 per cent Hungarian, 1.7 per cent Roma, 0.5 per cent German, 0.3 per cent Ukrainian, 0.04 per cent Jews and other minorities. Religious affiliation: Orthodox 86.8 per cent, Roman Catholic 5 per cent, Reformed 3.5 per cent, Greek Catholic 1 per cent. Romanian is a Romance language with many archaic forms and admixtures from Slavonic, Turkish, Magyar and French

CAPITAL – Bucharest (population, 2,066,723, 2001 estimate)

POPULATION BELOW POVERTY LINE – 44.56 per cent (2000)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.3 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 97 per sq. km (2001)

URBAN POPULATION – 55 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain varies, from the plains of the Moldavian region to the thick forests of the Carpathian Mountains. Elevation extremes range from 2,544 m (Moldoveanu) at the highest point to 0 m (Black Sea) at the lowest. Romania has a continental climate and average temperatures in Bucharest range from  $-2^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $22^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Romania was incorporated into the Roman Empire in the early part of the second century AD but abandoned 200 years later when the imperial power of Rome fell into decline. After centuries of rule by invading and often disparate tribal forces, Romania was incorporated into the Ottoman Empire during the 15th century. Unification under a single native ruler came in 1859 and full independence was ratified under the Treaty of Berlin in 1878.

In 1947 Romania became 'The Romanian People's Republic' under the leadership of the Romanian Communist Party. A revolution that began on 17 December 1989 led to the overthrow and execution of Nicolae Ceauşescu, president since 1965. A provisional government abolished the leading role of the Communist Party and held free elections in May 1990.

In the elections held on 26 November 2000 the Social Democratic Party of Romania (PDSR) gained 155 seats in the chamber of deputies and 65 seats in the senate, becoming the largest party in both houses. The PDSR presidential candidate, Ion Iliescu, then won the presidential election held on 10 December, obtaining 66.83 per cent of the vote. On 27 December, the PDSR reached an agreement with other centre-right parties to enable it to form a workable minority government. Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for mid-November 2004.

Romania became a NATO member in April 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution of 1991 formally makes Romania a multiparty democracy that endorses human rights and a market economy. The Parliament comprises the Chamber of Deputies with 345 seats, of which 18 are reserved for ethnic minorities, and the Senate with 140 seats. Both houses are elected for a four-year term.

DEFENCE

The Army has 1,258 main battle tanks, 1,583 armoured personnel carriers and 177 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Navy has one frigate, 38 patrol and coastal vessels, and seven helicopters at four bases. The Air Force has 106 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 2.3 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 97,200: Army 66,000, Navy 7,200, Air Force 14,000; Paramilitaries 79,900

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 12 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Following the transition from communism in 1989, Romania's economy, which was characterised by state-owned and co-operative ownership, has been slowly reformed. Since 1996 the pace of privatisation and restructuring has quickened, subsidies have been reduced and prices liberalised. However, the country still suffers from widespread poverty, and corruption and red tape hinder foreign investment.

Agriculture employed 40.8 per cent of the workforce in 2000 and contributed 12.8 per cent of GDP. The principal crops are cereals, vegetables, flax and hemp. Vines and fruits are also grown, and extensive forests in the mountainous regions support an important timber industry.

There are plentiful supplies of natural gas, together with mineral deposits including coal, iron ore, bauxite, chromium and uranium.

Principal exports include textiles, metallurgical products, machinery components, minerals, chemicals, shoes and transport equipment. Italy, Germany, Russia, France and the UK are Romania's most important trading partners. The main imports are machines and equipment, minerals, textiles, chemicals and metallurgical products.

GNI – US$38,600 million (2001); US$1,720 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.3 per cent (2001)

INFLATION RATE – 22.5 per cent (2002)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 7.1 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$10,224 million (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$5,312 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$17,862 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$13,876 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$2,613 million deficit (2002)

Current Account – US$1,573 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£430,623,000	£507,927,000
Exports to UK	531,728,000	689,850,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 11,376 km of railways, over one-third of which are electrified. There are 153,358 km of roads of which 78,213 km are surfaced; there are 113 km of motorway. The principal ports are Constanța and Mangalia (on the Black Sea), Sufina (on the Danube Estuary), Galati, Braila, Giurgiu and Drobeta-Turnu Severin. The Danube and the Black Sea are linked by a canal.

EDUCATION

Primary and secondary education is free of charge and compulsory. There are state universities in seven cities, 66 private universities, six polytechnics, two commercial academies, and five agricultural colleges.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 1.0 per cent; (f) 2.8 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 78 per cent (1997); tertiary 22.5 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Romania has a dynamic media network with television audiences predominantly shared between the state owned Romania 1 and the private commercial stations Pro TV and Antena 1. Most households in Bucharest have cable TV. There are more than 100 private radio stations. State run Radio Romania operates four national networks and regional and local stations.

There are four main daily newspapers – Adevarul, Libertatea, Evenimentul Zillei and Romania Libera.

CULTURE

Romania has a rich folkloric heritage that survives in glass painting, folk music, traditional dance and epic oral literature. Celebrated figures include the philosopher Emil Cioran (1911–95), the composer George Enescu (1881–1955), the playwright Eugène Ionescu (1909–94) and the sculptor Constantin Brancusi (1876–1957).

RUSSIA

Rossiiskaya Federatsiya – Russian Federation

AREA – 16,888,500 sq. km. Neighbours: Norway, Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Belarus and Ukraine (west), Georgia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, China, Mongolia and North Korea (south). The Kaliningrad enclave borders Lithuania and Poland

POPULATION – 144,664,000 (2001): 87.5 per cent Russian, 3.5 per cent Tatar, 2.7 per cent Ukrainian, 1.3 per cent ethnic German, 1.1 per cent Chuvash, 0.9 per cent Bashkir, 0.7 per cent Belarusian and 0.7 per cent Mordovian. There are another six minorities with populations of over half a million and more than 130 nationalities in total. The Russian Orthodox Church is the predominant religion, though the Tatars and many in the north Caucasus are Muslims and there are Jewish communities in Moscow and St Petersburg. The language is Russian

CAPITAL – Moscow (population, 10,101,500, 2002 estimate), founded about 1147, became the centre of the rising Moscow principality and in the 15th century the capital of the whole of Russia (Muscovy). In 1325 it became the seat of the Metropolitan of Russia. In 1703 Peter the Great transferred the capital to St Petersburg, but on 14 March 1918 Moscow was again designated as the capital

MAJOR CITIES – St Petersburg, from 1914 to 1924 Petrograd and from 1924 to 1991 Leningrad. Other cities: Chelyabinsk; Kazan; Nizhny-Novgorod/Gorky; Novosibirsk/Novonikolayevsk; Omsk; Perm/Molotov; Rostov-on-Don; Samara/Kuibyshev; Ufa; Yekaterinburg/Sverdlovsk

CURRENCY – Rouble of 100 kopeks

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Russia, Sacred Our Empire (the former Soviet national anthem, with new lyrics)

NATIONAL DAY – 12 June (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Three horizontal stripes of white, blue and red

Russia occupies three-quarters of the land area of the former Soviet Union.

The Russian Federation comprises 89 members: 49 regions (oblast) – Amur, Arkhangelsk, Astrakhan, Belgorod, Bryansk, Chelyabinsk, Chita, Irkutsk, Ivanovo, Kaliningrad, Kaluga, Kamchatka, Kemerovo, Kirov, Kostroma, Kurgan, Kursk, Leningrad, Lipetsk, Magadan, Moscow, Murmansk, Nizhny-Novgorod, Novgorod, Novosibirsk, Omsk, Orel, Orenburg, Penza, Perm, Pskov, Rostov, Ryazan, Sakhalin, Samara, Saratov, Smolensk, Sverdlovsk, Tambov, Tomsk, Tula, Tver, Tyumen, Ulyanovsk, Vladimir, Volgograd, Vologda, Voronezh, Yaroslavl; six autonomous territories (krai) – Altai, Khabarovsk, Krasnodar, Krasnoyarsk, Primorye, Stavropol; 21 republics – Adygeia, Altai, Bashkortostan, Buryatia, Chechnya, Chuvash, Dagestan, Ingush, Kabardino-Balkar, Kalmykia, Karachai-Cherkessia, Karelia, Khakassia, Komi, Mari-El, Mordovia, North Ossetia (Alania), Sakha, Tatarstan, Tyva, Udmurt; ten autonomous areas – Aga-Buryat, Chuckchi, Evenki, Khanty-Mansi, Komi-Permyak, Koryak, Nenets, Taimyr, Ust-Orda-Buryat, Yamal-Nenets; two cities of federal status – Moscow, St Petersburg; and one autonomous Jewish region, Birobijan.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

There are three principal geographic areas: a low-lying flat western area stretching eastwards up to the Yenisei and divided in two by the Ural ridge; the eastern area between the Yenisei and the Pacific, consisting of a number of tablelands and ridges; and a southern mountainous area. Elevation extremes range from 5,633 m (Gora El'brus) at the highest point to –28 m (Caspian Sea) at the lowest. Russia has a very long coastline, including the longest Arctic coastline in the world (over 27,000 km).

The most important rivers are the Volga, the Northern Dvina and the Pechora, the Neva, the Don and the Kuban in the European part, and in the Asiatic part, the Ob, the Irtysh, the Yenisei, the Lena and the Amur, and, further north, Khatanga, Olenek, Yana, Indigirka, Kolyma and Anadyr. Lake Baikal in eastern Siberia is the deepest lake in the world.

Russia's climate varies dramatically, from the frozen tundra of the north Siberian plain, to the temperate regions of the far east. Throughout Russia, winters are cold while summers are hot in the south and relatively warm elsewhere. Rainfall is highest in the westerly mountain regions which have an average annual precipitation of up to 2,000 mm. Average temperatures in Moscow range from –16°C in January to 23°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Russia was formally created from the principality of Muscovy and its territories by Tsar Peter I (The Great) (1682–1725), who initiated its territorial expansion, introduced Western ideas of government and founded St Petersburg.

Discontent caused by autocratic rule, the poor conduct of the military in the First World War and wartime privation led to a revolution which broke out in March 1917. A power struggle ensued between the provisional government and the Bolshevik Party. This led to a second revolution in November 1917 in which the Bolsheviks, led by Lenin, seized power.

Civil war between 'red' Bolshevik forces and 'white' monarchist and anti-communist forces lasted until the end of 1922. During the civil war, Russia had been declared a Soviet Republic and other Soviet republics had been formed in Ukraine, Belorussia and Transcaucasia. These four republics merged to form the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) on 30 December 1922.

During the 1930s Joseph Stalin introduced a policy of rapid industrialisation under a series of five-year plans, brought all sectors of industry under government control, abolished private ownership and enforced the collectivisation of agriculture. Many ethnic minority groups suffered under Stalin's regime and it is estimated that up to 1.5 million people were deported to the Gulags of Siberia and the central Asian republics.

Mikhail Gorbachev became Soviet leader in March 1985 and introduced the policies of perestroika (complete restructuring) and glasnost (openness) in order to revamp the economy, which had stagnated since the 1970s, to root out corruption and inefficiency, and to end the Cold War. The retreat from total control by the Communist Party unleashed ethnic and nationalist tensions.

Following the defeat of an attempted coup by hardline communists in August 1991, effective political power was in the hands of the republican leaders, especially Russian President Yeltsin, and the Soviet Union began to break up as the constituent republics declared their independence. Gorbachev resigned as Soviet president on 25 December 1991 and the following day the USSR formally ceased to exist.

Russia was recognised as an independent state by the EC and USA in January 1992; it took over the Soviet Union's seat at the UN in December 1991.

A new Russian Federal Treaty was signed on 13 March 1992 between the central government and the autonomous republics. Tatarstan and Bashkortostan signed the treaty in 1994 after securing considerable legislative and economic autonomy.

In the presidential election held on 26 March 2000, Vladimir Putin won 52.94 per cent of the vote, and was formally inaugurated on 7 May 2000. Putin was re-elected to a second term as president by a landslide in March 2004, with 71.2 per cent of the vote.

In February 2004, President Putin dismissed Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov and his council of ministers. Putin named Mikhail Fradkov as prime minister on 1 March 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1993 Constitution enshrines the right to private ownership and the freedoms of press, speech, association, worship and travel, and states that Russia is a multiparty democracy. The President is directly elected for a maximum of two four-year terms. The Prime Minister takes over from the President in the event that he is unable to fulfil his duties. Legislative power is vested in the Federal Assembly, comprising the Federation Council (upper house) of 178 members, two elected by each of the 89 members of the Russian Federation; and the State Duma (lower house) of 450 members, of which 225 are elected by constituencies on a first past the post basis and 225 by proportional representation, with a five per cent threshold for representation.

The judicial system consists of a Constitutional Court of 19 members appointed for a 12-year term which protects and interprets the Constitution and decides if laws are compatible with it. The Supreme Court adjudicates in criminal and civil law cases. The Arbitration Court deals with commercial disputes between companies.

INSURGENCIES

The Chechen republic declared its independence in November 1991 after a nationalist coup in the republic and refused to sign the Russian Federal Treaty in March 1992. Civil war began in early 1994 between the Chechen government and armed opposition forces tacitly supported by the Russian government. The Russian military launched an invasion of Chechnya in December 1994 and captured Grozny, in February 1995.

Russian troops were withdrawn in January 1997 when presidential and legislative elections were also held in Chechnya. A treaty renouncing the use of force to resolve Chechnya's status was signed between Presidents Maskhadov and Yeltsin in May 1997.

Following an incursion by Islamic militants into Dagestan in August 1999, Russian forces launched air strikes and ground troops entered the territory, capturing Grozny and other Chechen-held towns in February 2000. Nevertheless, Chechen guerrilla attacks on Russian targets continued, and on 8 June 2000, President Putin imposed temporary direct presidential rule on Chechnya.

On 23 October 2002 Chechen separatists seized a Moscow theatre and held some 800 people hostage, a siege which only ended after Russian special forces stormed the building, killing most of the rebels and 119 hostages. Sporadic suicide bombings by Chechen rebels against Russian interests continue.

A referendum took place in Chechnya on 23 March 2003 in which the majority voted in favour of a new constitution promising autonomy for the republic but also stating that Chechnya was an integral part of the territory of the Russian Federation. Although progress towards peace continues, the situation in Chechnya remains delicate, and has been hampered by further acts of terrorism including the assassination of the Moscow-backed President Akhmat Kadyrov in May 2004. In September 2004, over 300 civilians were killed after terrorists took control of a school in Beslan.

DEFENCE

Since the demise of the Soviet Union the Russian armed forces have been considerably reduced. In November 2000 it was announced that the armed forces would be reduced to 850,000 personnel by 2005. Major army reform is planned for the period 2004–10, including the transition from conscription to voluntary service.

A joint CIS air defence system covers Russia, Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan.

The Strategic Nuclear Forces have 13 nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarines with 216 missiles, 735 intercontinental ballistic missiles and 100 anti-ballistic missiles.

The Army has about 21,870 main battle tanks, 25,975 armoured personnel carriers and armoured infantry fighting vehicles, and 1,700 helicopters. The Navy has 53 submarines, one aircraft carrier, seven cruisers, 14 destroyers, ten frigates, 88 patrol and coastal vessels, 217 combat aircraft and 102 armed helicopters. The Air Force has 1,736 combat aircraft.

Russia deploys forces in Armenia (3,500), Georgia (3,000), Moldova (1,000) and Tajikistan (7,800). Russia is the world's third largest contributor to peacekeeping operations. An agreement with Ukraine on the division on the Black Sea Fleet was signed in May 1997.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 4.8 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 809,600: Strategic Nuclear

Forces 149,000, Army 321,000, Navy 155,000, Air

Force 184,600; Paramilitaries 409,100

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 18–24 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Under the Soviet regime, an essentially agrarian economy in 1917 was transformed by the early 1960s into the second strongest industrial power in the world. However, by the early 1970s the concentration of resources on the military-industrial complex was causing the civilian economy to stagnate. Free market reforms were introduced by President Gorbachev, including the legalisation of small private businesses, the reduction of state control over the economy, and denationalisation and privatisation. The first stage of mass privatisation of state industries began in October 1992 and the central distribution system was abolished with effect from 1 January 1993. By February 1996, 80 per cent of the economy had been privatised.

From 1994 to 1996, the economy began to stabilise with economic reforms judged to have become irreversible.

The devaluation of the rouble in 1998 caused the return of growth in the Russian economy in 1999. The country ended 2003 with its fifth consecutive year of growth, averaging 6.5 per cent annually, and having improved its international position dramatically: foreign debt now stands at around 28 per cent of GDP, down from 90 per cent. Nevertheless, considerable problems remain to be overcome. The country's manufacturing base is dilapidated, its banking system weak, and widespread corruption has led to a lack of trust in banking institutions.

Russia has some of the richest mineral deposits in the world. Coal is mined in the Kuznetsk area, in the Urals, south of Moscow, in the Donets basin and in the Pechora area in the north. Oil is produced in the northern Caucasus, between the Volga and the Urals, and in western Siberia, which also has large deposits of natural gas. A pipeline to bring Caspian oil into Russia via Daghستان and North Ossetia is under construction. Oil production in 2000 was 323.3 million tonnes. Coal and gas deposits in Siberia and the far east (especially Yakutia) are being developed. The Ural mountains contain many precious natural resources including high-quality iron ore, manganese, copper, aluminium, platinum, precious stones, salt, asbestos, pyrites, coal and oil. Iron ore is also mined near Kursk, Tula, Lipetsk, in several areas in Siberia and in the Kola Peninsula. Non-ferrous metals are found in the Altai, eastern Siberia, the northern Caucasus, the Kuznetsk basin, the far east and the far north. Some 190 tonnes of gold were produced in 2003.

The vast area and the great variety in climatic conditions are reflected in the structure of agriculture. In the far north reindeer breeding, hunting and fishing are predominant. Further south, the timber industry is combined with grain growing. In the southern half of the forest zone and in the adjacent forest-steppe zone, the acreage under grain crops is larger and the structure of agriculture more complex. Between the Volga and the Urals cericulture is predominant (particularly summer wheat), followed by cattle breeding. Beyond the Urals is another important grain-growing and stock-breeding area in the southern part of the western Siberian plain. In 2001 85 million tonnes of grain was harvested, an increase of 20 million tonnes on 2000. In the extreme south cotton is cultivated. Vine, tobacco and other southern crops are grown on the Black Sea shore of the Caucasus.

Moscow and St Petersburg are still the two largest industrial centres in the country, but new industrial areas have been developed in the Urals, the Kuznetsk basin, Siberia and the far east.

Russia's main trading partners are Germany, the USA, Italy, China and the former Soviet states.

GNI – US$253,400 million (2001); US$1,750 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.6 per cent (1998)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The European area of Russia is well served by railways, but there are still large areas, notably in the far north and Siberia, with few or no railways. In 2001 there were 149,000 km of railways, of which 86,000 km were used for passenger transport.

The most important ports (Taganrog, Rostov and Novorossiisk) lie around the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov. The northern ports (St Petersburg, Murmansk and Arkhangelsk) are, with the exception of Murmansk, icebound during winter. Several ports have been built along the Arctic Sea route between Murmansk and Vladivostok and are in regular use every summer. The far eastern port of Vladivostok, the Pacific naval base of Russia, is kept open by icebreakers all the year round.

There are 95,900 km of waterways. The great rivers of European Russia flow outwards from the centre, linking all parts of the plain with the chief ports. They are supplemented by a system of canals which provide a through route between the White, Baltic, Black and Caspian Seas. The most notable are the White Sea–Baltic Canal, the Moscow–Volga Canal and the Volga–Don Canal linking the Baltic and the White Seas in the north to the Caspian Sea, the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov in the south.

MEDIA

The country's main national TV networks – Channel One, Radio Broadcasting company (RTR) and NTV are state-run. Many newspapers are privately owned while Russia's principal radio network is run by Russian State Television and RTR, alongside numerous regional and external services.

CULTURE

Russian is a branch of the Slavonic family of languages and is written in the Cyrillic script.

Before the westernisation of Russia under Peter the Great (1682–1725), Russian literature consisted mainly of folk ballads (byliny), epic songs, chronicles and works of moral theology. The 18th and 19th centuries saw the development of poetry and fiction. Poetry reached its zenith with Alexander Pushkin (1799–1837), Mikhail Lermontov (1814–41), Alexander Blok (1880–1921), the 1958 Nobel Prize winner Boris Pasternak (1890–1960), Vladimir Mayakovsky (1893–1930) and Anna Akhmatova (1888–1966). Celebrated figures in philosophy and literary theory include Mikhail Bakhtin (1895–1975) and Viktor Shklovsky (1893–1984). Fiction is associated with the names of Nikolai Gogol (1809–52), Ivan Turgenev (1818–83), Fyodor Dostoevsky (1821–81), Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910), Anton Chekhov (1860–1904), Maxim Gorky (1868–1936), Ivan Bunin (1870–1953), Mikhail Bulgakov (1891–1940), Mikhail Sholokhov (1905–84) and Alexander Solzhenitsyn (b. 1918).

Great names in music include Glinka (1804–57), Borodin (1833–87), Mussorgsky (1839–81), Rimsky-Korsakov (1844–1908), Rubinstein (1829–94), Tchaikovsky (1840–93), Rachmaninov (1873–1943), Scriabin (1872–1915), Prokofiev (1891–1953), Stravinsky (1882–1971), Shostakovich (1906–75), Gubaidulina (b. 1931) and Schnittke (1934–98).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain is mostly mountainous and includes the volcanic Virunga range in the north-west. Elevation extremes range from 4,519 m (Volcan Karisimbi) at the highest point to 950 m (Rusizi River) at the lowest. Rwanda has a tropical climate and there are two wet seasons from February to April and November to January. Average daily temperatures range from 15°C in January to 35°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Rwanda's history has been dominated by conflict between its two main ethnic groups, the Hutus and the Tutsis. In 1959, three years before independence from Belgian colonial rule, the Hutu population rebelled against Tutsi feudal domination, leading to the massacre of thousands of Tutsis. Some 150,000 fled into exile in Uganda and other neighbouring countries. Rwanda became an independent republic in July 1962.

Armed Tutsi exiles repeatedly attempted to invade Rwanda in the 1960s and 70s but were defeated by the predominantly Hutu army. Continued conflict left thousands dead over a period of 30 years. The exiles eventually formed the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) and, in October 1990, they again invaded the country, forcing the government to introduce a multiparty constitution in 1991. After the government reneged on a 1992 peace agreement, the RPF advanced on Kigali and forced it to restart negotiations, which led to the August 1993 Arusha peace accord.

In 1994, President Habyarimana, who had retained the interim presidency, died in a plane crash widely believed to have been caused by extremist sections of the Hutu army. The army and militia (interahamwe) then carried out acts of genocide against the Tutsi minority and moderate Hutus; 800,000 people were massacred in three months. Nevertheless, the RPF gradually re-established its control over the country, forcing the defeated government forces and two million Hutu refugees into exile. In July 1994 the RPF established a broad-based government of national unity in which moderate Hutus were given the presidency and premiership and the RPF took eight of the 22 seats.

A government report issued in 2002 revealed that 1,074,017 people, more than 93 per cent of them Tutsis, were killed between 1990 and 1994. Since then, work has been ongoing to deal with the aftermath of genocide, a task complicated by ongoing attacks by extremist Hutu insurgents and Rwandan involvement in civil war in the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo, which broke out in 1996.

However, repatriation of refugees and political reforms are under way. Rwanda held its first local elections in 1999, and its first presidential elections in August 2003, in which the RPF leader Paul Kagame received 95.1 per cent of the vote. A new constitution was approved in the same year, designed to achieve democracy while preventing another genocide, and not allowing any one ethnic group to dominate the government. An International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, based in Tanzania, has also been established and is working to bring those directly responsible for the 1994 genocide to trial.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 2003 Constitution the President is head of state and is directly elected for a seven-year term, renewable once only. The legislature is bicameral consisting of a National Assembly of 80 members elected by universal suffrage for a five-year term and a 26-member Senate.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Rwanda is the most densely populated country in Africa, with few natural resources and minimal industry. Around 90 per cent of the population is engaged in subsistence agriculture. Primary foreign exchange earners are coffee and tea, tin, hides, quinine and pyrethrum are also exported, although the lack of adequate transport infrastructure is a handicap. Rwanda was given IMF-World Bank Heavily Indebted Poor Country (HIPC) status debt relief in late 2000.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Rwanda has 12,000 km of roads, of which around 996 km are surfaced. The roads from Kigali to the major towns are good, but landslides do occur during the wet season.

MEDIA

Rwanda's network media is mainly government controlled. A privately run radio station began broadcasting in 2004. The BBC World Service, Voice of America and Deutsche Welle all broadcast in Kigali. There are a growing number of newspapers but they face government restrictions and generally exercise self censorship.

ST CHRISTOPHER AND NEVIS

The Federation of St Christopher and Nevis

AREA – 262 sq. km

POPULATION – 38,000 (2001). The language is English
 CAPITAL – ΨBasseterre (population, 12,200, 1994 estimate)

MAJOR TOWNS – ΨCharlestown, the chief town of Nevis

CURRENCY – East Caribbean dollar (EC$) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Oh Land Of Beauty

NATIONAL DAY – 19 September (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Three diagonal bands, green, black and red; each colour separated by a stripe of yellow.

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.9 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 145 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The State of St Christopher and Nevis is located at the northern end of the eastern Caribbean. It comprises the islands of St Christopher (St Kitts) (109.5 sq. km) and Nevis (58 sq. km). The central area of St Christopher is forest-clad and mountainous, rising to the 1,158 m (Mount Liamuiga) at the highest point. Nevis is separated from the southern tip of St Christopher by a strait two miles wide which is dominated by Nevis Peak, 985 m. The climate is tropical, influenced by north-east trade winds and average annual rainfall – principally during May to September – is 1,375 mm, with average daily temperatures of 24°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

St Christopher was the first island in the British West Indies to be colonised (1623). The Territory of St Christopher and Nevis became a State in Association with Britain in 1967, and subsequently an independent nation in September 1983.

On 10 August 1998 a referendum was held in Nevis on the question of independence from St Christopher; although 61.8 per cent voted in favour of secession, it fell short of the two-thirds majority needed for independence.

In the legislative election held on 6 March 2000, the Labour Party won all eight of the seats on St Christopher. On Nevis, the Concerned Citizens' Movement won two seats and the Nevis Reformation Party one seat.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the constitution, Queen Elizabeth II is Head of State, represented in the islands by the Governor-General. There is a central government with a ministerial system, the head of which is the Prime Minister of St Christopher and Nevis, and a National Assembly located on St Christopher. The National Assembly is composed of the Speaker, three Senators (nominated by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition) and 11 directly elected representatives, who serve for a five-year term. On Nevis there is a Nevis Island Administration, the head being styled Premier of Nevis, and a Nevis Island Assembly of five elected and three nominated members.

Governor-General, HE Sir Cuthbert Montraville Sebastian, CCMG, OBE, apptd 1996

SELECTED GOVERNMENT MEMBERS as at August 2004

Prime Minister, Finance, National Security, Planning, Development, Denzil Douglas

Deputy Prime Minister, Labour, Social Security, International Trade and Caricom Affairs, Telecommunications and Technology, Sam Condor

Foreign Affairs, Education, Timothy Harris

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy of the islands has been based on sugar for over three centuries. Tourism (the chief source of foreign exchange), offshore banking and light industry, concentrating on distilling, food processing, clothing and electronics, are now being developed. The economy of Nevis relies on farming, but a sea-island cotton industry is being developed for export.

The main exports are sugar, lobsters, beverages and electrical equipment. Foodstuffs, energy, machinery and transport equipment are the main imports.

GNI – US$300 million (2001); US$6,630 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.8 per cent (1999)

INFLATION RATE – 3.9 per cent (1999)

Imports from UK	£5,714,000	£8,282,000
Exports to UK	3,955,000	5,819,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The islands have a total of 320 km of roads, of which 136 km are surfaced, and 50 km of narrow-gauge railways on St Christopher that serve the sugarcane plantations. Basseterre is a port of registry and has deep-water harbour facilities. Robert Bradshaw international airport, on St Christopher, can take most large jet aircraft; Vance Amory international airport on Nevis can take small aircraft and has night-time night-landing facilities. The sea ferry route from Basseterre to Charlestown is 11 miles.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The government operates national television and radio stations; there are several private radio stations, and multi-channel cable TV offers a range of local and international TV stations.

The islands draw upon a mix of European, African and West Indian traditions. Architecture is predominantly colonial British and cricket is the national sport, but music and dance are very much West Indian and African.

ST LUCIA

AREA – 616 sq. km

POPULATION – 149,000 (2001). The official language is English. French creole is spoken by most of the population

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 17 (2001)

DEATH PENALTY – Yes

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.2 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 242 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

St Lucia, the second largest of the Windward group, is 43.5 km in length, with an extreme breadth of 22.5 km. The terrain is mountainous, with elevation extremes that range from 958 m (Mt Gimie) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is tropical and there is a wet season from June to September. The average daily temperature is 25°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Originally settled by Arawak and then Carib Indians from AD 800, the Island of St. Lucia saw Dutch forces arrive in 1600 and begin building the fortified base of Vieux. Possession of St Lucia was fiercely disputed and it constantly changed hands between the British and the French until 1814 when it was ceded to Britain by the Treaty of Paris. It became independent within the Commonwealth on 22 February 1979.

The St Lucia Labour Party maintained its majority in the House of Assembly in a general election on 3 December 2001, winning 14 seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Head of State is Queen Elizabeth II, represented on the island by a St Lucian Governor-General, and there is a bicameral legislature. The Senate has 11 members, six appointed by the ruling party, three by the Opposition and two by the Governor-General. The House of Assembly, which serves for a five-year term, has 17 elected members and a Speaker, who may be appointed from outside the House.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is mainly agrarian, with the manufacturing industry based on agricultural and food processing. The principal crops are bananas, coconuts, cocoa, mangoes, breadfruit, yam and citrus fruit. Attempts are being made to increase industrialisation and explore economic diversification, particularly in the offshore banking and tourism sectors.

The principal exports are bananas, coconut products (copra, edible oils, soap), cardboard boxes, beer, and textiles. The chief imports are flour, meat, machinery, building materials, motor vehicles, manufactured goods, petroleum and fertilisers.

GNI – US$620 million (2001); US$3,950 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.8 per cent (1998)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

St Lucia contains around 1,210 km of roads, of which 63 km are surfaced. The island has two airports: Hewanorra international airport in Vieux Fort, at the remote southern tip of the island, and Vigie airport in Castries, near the main tourist area. Castries also has a deep-water harbour.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

St Lucia's TV and radio outlets are mainly privately owned. The government operates a radio network, which broadcasts in English and Creole. There are no daily newspapers; the island's main newspaper is published three times a week.

The writer and poet Derek Walcott (b. 1930) is St Lucia's most celebrated cultural figure. Winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1997, Walcott's plays and poetry are a distinct blend of English, Caribbean and African literary traditions.

ST VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

AREA – 388 sq. km

POPULATION – 109,022 (2002 estimate). The language is English

CAPITAL – ΨKingstown (population, 13,857, 2000)

CURRENCY – East Caribbean dollar (EC$) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – St Vincent, Land So Beautiful

NATIONAL DAY – 27 October (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Three vertical bands, of blue, yellow and green, with three green diamonds in the shape of a 'V' mounted on the yellow band

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 6.08 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – Yes

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.7 per cent (2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 289 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The territory of St Vincent includes certain of the Grenadines, a chain of small islands stretching 40 miles across the Caribbean Sea between Grenada and St Vincent, some of the larger of which are Bequia, Canouan, Mayreau, Mustique, Union Island, Petit St Vincent and Prune Island. Elevation extremes range from 1,234 m (La Soufrière) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with an average daily temperature of 28°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

St Vincent was discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1498. It was granted by Charles I to the Earl of Carlisle in 1627 and after subsequent grants and a series of occupations alternately by the French and English, it was finally restored to Britain in 1783. St Vincent achieved full independence within the Commonwealth as St Vincent and the Grenadines on 27 October 1979.

After elections in 1998 the New Democratic Party (NDP), which had been in power since 1984, retained the majority of seats. However, following its approval of increased benefits for members of the legislature, it was forced by the opposition United Labour Party (ULP) to hold an early general election. This took place in March 2001 and was decisively won by the ULP, which obtained 12 seats. The NDP won the remaining three seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Queen Elizabeth II is Head of State, represented by a Governor-General. The House of Assembly consists of 15 elected Members and four Senators appointed by the government and two by the Opposition. It is presided over by a Speaker elected by the House from within or without it.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is based mainly on agriculture but the tourism and manufacturing industries have been expanding. The main products are bananas, arrowroot, coconuts, cocoa, spices and various other kinds of food crops, although these have suffered severely in some years from tropical storms. In common with other Windward Islands, St Vincent and the Grenadines are attempting to reduce their reliance on banana crops, following the EU decision in 1999 to phase out preferential treatment to former colonies over competitors from Latin America. Bananas accounted for 39 per cent of exports in 2002. The main imports are foodstuffs, textiles, lumber, chemicals, motor vehicles and fuel.

GNI – US$317 million (2001); US$2,740 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.2 per cent (1998)

INFLATION RATE – 0.2 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$192 million (2000)

IMPORTS – US$174 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$38 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Current Account – US$38 million deficit (2001)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£6,618,000	£9,142,000
Exports to UK	14,902,000	9,679,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The islands have around 1,040 km of roads, of which 320 km are surfaced. The main harbour is at Kingstown, and there are six airports, although none can accommodate international traffic.

MEDIA

The press is privately owned, and its freedom to criticise the government is guaranteed by the constitution. Most newspapers are published weekly. There are several private radio stations and a national radio service which is partly government funded. Television broadcasting is operated by the St Vincent and the Grenadines Broadcasting Corporation.

SAMOA

Ole Malo Tutoatasi o Samoa / Independent State of Samoa

AREA – 2,831 sq. km

POPULATION – 179,058 (2001 estimate), the largest numbers being on Upolu (114,980) and ŪSavai'i (43,150). The Samoans are a Polynesian people, though the population also includes other Pacific Islanders, Euronians, Chinese and Europeans. The main languages are Samoan and English. The islanders are Christians of different denominations

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 18.8 per cent; (f) 21.0 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 96 per cent (1996); secondary 45 per cent (1995)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Samoa consists of the islands of Savai'i, Upolu, Apolima, Manono, Fanuatapu, Namua, Nuutele, Nuulua and Nuusafee. All the islands are mountainous and volcanic, with elevation extremes ranging from 1,857 m (Mauga Silisili) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with a wet season from November to April. Average temperatures range between 22 and 30°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Formerly administered by New Zealand (latterly with internal self-government), Western Samoa became fully independent on 1 June 1962. The state was treated as a member country of the Commonwealth until its formal admission in August 1970. A constitutional amendment came into effect on 4 July 1997 changing the state's name to the Independent State of Samoa.

Suffrage was made universal following a referendum held in 1990. In the general election held on 4 March 2001, the Human Rights Protection Party won 23 seats, the Samoan National Development Party won 13 seats and 13 seats were won by independents.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1962 Constitution provides for a head of state to be elected by the 49-member Legislative Assembly (Fono) for a five-year term. Initially two of the four Paramount chiefs jointly held the office of head of state for life. When one of the chiefs died in April 1963, Susuga Malietoa Tanumafili II became head of state for life. The head of state's functions are analogous to those of a constitutional monarch. Executive Government is carried out by a Cabinet of Ministers.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture is the basis of the economy, employing about two-thirds of the labour force and supplying about 40 per cent of GDP and 90 per cent of exports. The principal cash crops (and exports) are coconuts (copra, oil and cream), cocoa and bananas. Efforts are being made to develop fishing on a commercial scale. Manufacturing is very small in scope and concerned largely with processing agricultural products, but is being encouraged by the government.

The tourism industry is an expanding sector, accounting for 25 per cent of GDP; about 88,000 tourists visited the islands in 2001.

GNI – US$1,490 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.1 per cent (1998)

Exports to UK	81,000	347,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 790 km of roads, of which 332 km are surfaced. Upolu contains the harbours of Apia and Mulifanua, and Savai'i the harbour of Salelologa. Most international flights land at Faleolo Airport, 35 km west of Apia on Upolu.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are two daily papers, one weekly and one fortnightly. The government operates the sole TV service, Televis Samoa, and there are three FM radio stations and one state run commercial radio service.

Traditional dancing (siva), and longboat racing (fautasi) play a major part in Samoan culture. Kirikiti, the Samoan version of cricket, is a popular sport.

SAN MARINO

Repubblica di San Marino – Republic of San Marino

AREA – 61 sq. km. Neighbour: Italy

POPULATION – 27,336 (2001 estimate). The official language is Italian and the religion is Roman Catholic

CAPITAL – San Marino (population, 4,357, 1994), on the slope of Monte Titano

CURRENCY – Euro (€) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Inno Nazionale (National Anthem)

NATIONAL DAY – 3 September

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 3 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 426 per sq. km (1999)

URBAN POPULATION – 87 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 755 m (Monte Titano) at the highest point to 55 m (Torrente Ausa) at the lowest. The climate is Mediterranean, characterised by cool winters and warm summers, with moderate rainfall throughout the year. Average annual precipitation is 762 mm while average temperatures range between -6°C in January to 25°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

San Marino is a small republic in the hills near Rimini, on the Adriatic, founded, it is said, by a pious stonemason of Dalmatia in the fourth century. The republic resisted papal claims and those of neighbouring dukedoms during the 15th to 18th centuries, and its integrity and sovereignty is recognised and respected by Italy. San Marino became a member of the UN in 1992.

Following a general election in 2001, the number of seats held in the Grand and General Council was as follows: Christian Democratic Party (PDCS) 25, the Socialist Party (PSS) 15, the Progressive Democratic Party (PPDS) 12, others 8.

The PDCS and the PSS formed a coalition government, later joined by the Party of Democrats (PD), which collapsed in June 2002. The PSS, the PD and the Popular Democratic Alliance (APDS) formed a new coalition, which collapsed in December 2002, following which another coalition was formed, which comprises the PSS and the PDCS.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Executive power is vested in the Congress of State composed of ten ministries under the presidency of the two heads of state, who are elected at six-monthly intervals (every April and October). Legislative power is exercised by the 60-member Great and General Council which is elected for a five-year term. A Council of Twelve forms in certain cases a Supreme Court of Justice.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The islands of São Tomé and Príncipe are situated in the Gulf of Guinea, off the west coast of Africa. Elevation extremes range from 2,024 m (Pico de São Tomé) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with a wet season from October to May. Average daily temperatures are an almost constant 30°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The islands were first settled by the Portuguese in 1493 and became important suppliers of sugarcane, cocoa and coffee in the 18th and 19th centuries. The islands gained independence from Portugal in July 1975; democratic reforms were instituted in the late 1980s, and the first multiparty elections were held in 1991.

In the presidential election which took place on 29 July 2001, Fradique de Menezes of the Independent Democratic Alliance was elected with 56.31 per cent of the vote. Legislative elections were held on 3 March 2002, in which the Movement for the Liberation of São Tomé and Príncipe (MLSTP-PSD) won 24 of the 55 seats in the National Assembly. The Force for Change Democratic Movement-Democratic Convergence Party (MDFM-PCD) won 23 seats and the Ue Kedadji coalition (UK) won 8 seats. Gabriel Costa of the MLSTP-PSD was appointed prime minister on 26 March and a government of national unity, comprising members of all three parties and independents, was sworn in on 8 April. The president dismissed Costa and the entire government on 26 September 2002. A new government was named on 7 October, led by Maria das Neves de Sousa.

On 16 July 2003 the government was toppled during a week-long military coup which took place while the president was visiting Nigeria. De Menezes returned to São Tomé after a democratic rule was reached with the coup leaders; a general amnesty was given to the perpetrators.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A multiparty constitution was approved by referendum in August 1990 under which the President, who is directly elected, serves a five-year term and may stand for a second term. The 55-seat unicameral National Assembly (Assembleia Nacional) is elected for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture accounts for nearly a quarter of GDP and employs nearly 40 per cent of the workforce, with cocoa accounting for 86 per cent of exports in 1997. Drought and mismanagement have led to declining cocoa production, which has resulted in balance of payments deficits, although strengthening prices helped to boost export earnings in 2003.

In April 2000, the IMF approved a three-year credit of US$8.7 million to support the government’s 2000–2 economic programme. A further debt-reduction package worth about US$200 million was agreed by the IMF and World Bank in December 2000. Principal trading partners are Portugal, Spain, Netherlands and the UK.

In 2001, São Tomé and Nigeria reached an agreement on the exploration of oil reserves in the Gulf of Guinea.

GNI – US$43 million (2000); US$280 per capita (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Saudi Arabia comprises most of the Arabian peninsula. The Nejd ('plateau') extends over the centre of the peninsula, including the Nafud and Dahna deserts. The Hejaz ('the boundary') extends along the Red Sea coast to Asir and contains the holy towns of Mecca (Al-Makkah) and Medina (Al-Madinah). Asir (meaning inaccessible) is so named for its mountainous terrain, and, with the coastal plain of the Tihama, lies along the southern Red Sea coast from the Hejaz to the border with Yemen. Elevation extremes range from 3,133 m (Jabal Sawda) at the highest point to 0 m (Persian Gulf) at the lowest. Yemen is the only region to enjoy substantial rainfall. The east and south-east of the country are low-lying and largely desert. The climate is hot and dry with average temperatures in Riyadh ranging from 21°C in January to 42°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Modern-day Saudi Arabia was formed in 1932 when the head of the Saud dynasty, Abdul Aziz al-Saud, united the disparate regions of the Arabian Peninsula. Britain recognised al-Saud as an independent ruler, King of the Hejaz and of Nejd and its Dependencies, in 1927. On 23 September 1932 al-Saud was proclaimed as king and the country became known as the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990, Saudi Arabia accepted the Kuwaiti royal family and some 400,000 refugees while allowing Western and Arab troops to deploy on its soil for the liberation of Kuwait the following year. The continuing presence of foreign troops after Operation Desert Storm remained a source of tension between the royal family and the public until the US military withdrawal to neighbouring Qatar in 2003.

In May 2003, suicide bombers suspected of having links with al-Qa'eda killed 35 people – including a number of foreigners – in Riyadh, and further attacks have taken place in 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Saudi Arabia is a hereditary monarchy, ruled by the sons and grandsons of Abdul Aziz al-Saud, in accordance with Islamic Shari'ah Law. The line of succession passes from brother to brother according to age, although several sons of al-Saud renounced their right to the throne. All sons and grandsons of al-Saud must be consulted before a new king accedes to the throne.

In 1992 King Fahd announced a new Basic Law for the system of government based on Shari'ah Law and including rules to protect personal freedoms. The Constitution is defined as the Holy Koran (Qur'an) and the Sunnah (the teachings and sayings of the Prophet Muhammad). The King and the Council of Ministers (established in 1953) retain executive power. A Consultative Council (Majlis-ash-Shura) of a Chairman and 120 members appointed by the King was set up to share power with, and question, the Government and to make recommendations to the King. The Majlis-ash-Shura debates Government policy in the areas of budget, defence, foreign and social affairs. Members of the ruling al-Saud family are excluded from membership of the Council, which serves a four-year term and takes decisions by majority vote. Cabinet ministers serve for four years, with the possibility of a two-year extension.

In 1993 the country was reorganised into 13 provinces: Riyadh; Makkah; Al-Madinah; Al Qasim; Eastern; Asir; Tabuk; Ha'il; Northern Border; Jizan; Najran; Baha; Al-Jawf. Each province has a Governor appointed by the King and a council of prominent local citizens to advise the Governor on local government, budgetary and planning issues.

DEFENCE

The Army has 1,055 main battle tanks, 3,150 armoured personnel carriers, 970 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 12 attack helicopters. The Navy has seven frigates, 26 patrol and coastal vessels and 21 armed helicopters at six bases. The Air Force has 294 combat aircraft.

Saudi Arabia is base to the Gulf Co-operational Council Peninsula Shield Force of 10,000 troops. In April 2003 the US announced that almost all its troops except some training personnel, would be pulled out of Saudi Arabia. Leaders of both countries stressed that co-operation would continue and they would remain allies.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 12.0 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 124,500: Army 75,000, Navy 15,500, Air Force 18,000, Air Defence Force 16,000, National Guard 75,000; Paramilitaries 15,500

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The productivity of traditional dryland farming is supplemented by extensive irrigation, desalination and use of aquifers. Agriculture accounted for seven per cent of GDP in 1998.

The principal industry is oil extraction and processing. Oil was first found in commercial quantities in 1938. Proven oil reserves of 259 billion barrels account for more than one-quarter of the world's reserves. The oil and gas industry contributes around 35–40 per cent of GDP depending on world prices. The country is also the world's largest oil exporter, with recoverable gas reserves estimated at over 220 trillion cubic feet. Mineral exploitation of gold, silver, copper and other minerals is also beginning, with gold production of 5.1 tonnes in 1998.

The government, in a series of five-year development plans begun in 1970, has actively encouraged the establishment of a manufacturing industry. So far industries have been developed in the manufacture of construction materials, metal fabrication, simple machinery, electrical equipment and textiles, and in the processing of foodstuffs and beverages and chemicals and plastics.

The seventh development plan, covering 2000–5, was approved in September 2000. It aimed to eliminate the budget and current account deficits, promote economic growth and diversity, encourage the private sector (responsible for around 40 per cent of GDP) and introduce legislation to increase the proportion of Saudi Arabian citizens in the workforce.

The leading suppliers of imports are the USA, the UK, Germany and Japan. The chief export markets are in Japan, the USA, South Korea and Singapore. There is a total ban on the importation of alcohol, pork products, firearms, and items regarded as non-Islamic or pornographic.

GNI – US$181,100 million (2001); US$8,460 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.5 per cent (2000)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There is one railway service from Ad-Dammam to Riyadh, which was opened in 1951 and is operated by the Saudi Government Railway Organisation. The service is being extended to the port of Al-Jubayl on the Gulf. In 1999 the road network totalled 151,470 km (of which 45,592 km were surfaced), including an expressway system, connecting all the cities and main towns. Jiddah is the main cargo sea port followed by Ad-Dammam. The main oil port (the world's largest) is Ras Tanura. The 25 km-long King Fahd Causeway completed in 1986 connects the Eastern Province to the State of Bahrain and is the world's second longest causeway. There are three international airports at Al-Makkah, Riyadh and Az-Zahran and 22 other commercial airports.

EDUCATION

With the exception of a few schools for expatriate children, all schools are supervised by the government and are segregated. There are universities in Jiddah, Al-Makkah, Riyadh (branches in Abha and Qassim), Ad-Dammam (branch at Al-Hufuf) and Az-Zahran, and there are Islamic universities in Al-Madinah and Riyadh together with 83 tertiary colleges. There is great emphasis on vocational training, provided at literacy and artisan skill training centres and more advanced industrial, commercial and agricultural education institutes.

MEDIA

Saudi Arabia has one of the most tightly controlled media environments in the Middle East. Criticism of the government and royal family and the questioning of religious tenets are not tolerated.

The state run Broadcasting Service of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (BSKSA) is responsible for all broadcasting, operating four TV networks, including the news channel al-Ikhbariyya. Private radio and TV stations cannot operate from Saudi soil, but the country is a key market for pan-Arab satellite and subscription-based broadcasters. Saudi newspapers are created by royal decree. There are 10 dailies and many magazines. Pan-Arab newspapers, subject to censorship, are also available.

CULTURE

Saudi culture revolves almost entirely around Islam – two of Islam's holiest sites are in the country, and it considers itself the birthplace of the religion. Mecca is the birthplace of the Prophet Muhammad, and contains the Great Mosque, within which is the Kaaba (Ka'abah) or sacred shrine of the Muslim religion. This is the focus of the annual Hajj (pilgrimage). Medina Al-Munawwarah (The City of Light), some 300 km north of Mecca, is celebrated as the first city to embrace Islam and as the burial place of the Prophet Muhammad.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain is generally low and rolling, with plains rising to foothills in the southeast. Elevation extremes range from 581 m (Nepen Diakha) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Senegal has a tropical climate with a wet season from June to September. Average temperatures in Dakar range from 18°C in January to 32°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Formerly a French colony, in 1958 Senegal elected to remain within the French Community as an autonomous republic. It became independent as part of the Federation of Mali in June 1960 and seceded to form the Republic of Senegal in September 1960.

Forty years of domination by the country's Socialist Party (PS) came to an end in March 2000 with the election of Abdoulaye Wade, leader of the Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS). The subsequent legislative election, held in April 2001, was won by an alliance of 40 parties, the Sopi (Change) coalition, led by the PDS. The PS retained only ten seats. Abdoulaye Wade dismissed the entire government in November 2002 and appointed Idrissa Seck as Prime Minister, along with a new Council of Ministers. Seck was dismissed by President Wade on 21 April 2004. The interior minister, Macky Sall, was immediately appointed as his successor.

Senegal has a long history of participating in international peacekeeping, and its troops have been deployed in the Democratic Republic of Congo, Liberia and Kosovo.

INSURGENCIES

A separatist civil war has been fought in the southern Casamance region, for the past 17 years. Hundreds of people have been killed and thousands have fled to Guinea-Bissau. Following a cease-fire in December 1999, a meeting between the government and the Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamance (MFDC) in January 2000 agreed to establish a joint body to monitor progress, to withdraw army and rebel forces from occupied villages, and to co-operate on mine clearance and the refugee situation. The two sides signed a peace agreement on 16 March 2001, but violence in the region increased during the election campaign in April 2001 and as at August 2004, the situation remained unresolved.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new Constitution was approved by referendum in January 2001. The Constitution dissolved the Senate, reduced the number of Members of Parliament in the National Assembly from 140 to 120, shortened the presidential term of office to five years, renewable only once, and guaranteed the right to form political parties. A general election for the National Assembly is held every five years.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Around 60 per cent of the workforce are employed in the agricultural industry. Senegal's principal exports are fish, groundnuts (raw and processed) and phosphates. Senegal also exports fish, furniture, oilseeds and fruit, rubber, fertilisers and animal fodder to the UK. Tourism is also of growing importance as a source of revenue; in 1999 there were some 400,000 overseas visitors. Principal imports are foodstuffs, machinery, fuel oils and transport equipment; other imports, principally from the UK include foodstuffs, cigarettes, chemicals, machinery and transport equipment, vegetable fats and oils, and manufactured goods. Economic reforms have been ongoing since January 1994, with the support of the International Donor Community, and the GDP has seen growth averaging five per cent annually as a result.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Senegal has a road network of some 14,576 km, of which 4,271 km are surfaced. There are also 906 km of railways, and 897 km of navigable waterways on the Senegal and Saloum rivers.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Senegal's constitution guarantees freedom of the news media and there are three private television channels, many private radio stations, and subscription-based television is readily available. Publications must be registered as a formality, but foreign media circulate freely. There are at least five daily newspapers, of which one is state owned.

The country is renowned for its musicians, who base their sounds on traditional mbalax rhythms. Catherine N'Diaye (b. 1952) and Nafissatou Niang Diallo (1941–82) are two of Senegal's most celebrated writers.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Montenegro and southern Serbia are extremely mountainous, while the north is dominated by the low-lying plains of the Danube. Elevation extremes range from 2,656 m (Daravica) at the highest point to 0 m (Adriatic Sea) at the lowest. The major rivers are the Danube, the Sava, the Drina and the Morava. The climate inland is moderate and continental, while along the coast a Mediterranean-Adriatic climate prevails. Average temperatures in Belgrade range from 2°C in January to 18°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Serbia emerged from the rule of the Byzantine Empire in the 13th century to form a large and prosperous state in the Balkans. Defeat by the Turks in 1389 led to almost 500 years of Turkish rule. After gaining autonomy within the Ottoman Empire in 1815, Serbia became fully independent in 1878 and a kingdom in 1881. Montenegro was part of the Serbian state before it was conquered by the Turks in the 15th century; it became independent in 1878. At the end of the First World War Serbia and Montenegro joined with the former Austro-Hungarian provinces of Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina to form the 'Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes', which was renamed Yugoslavia in 1929. Yugoslavia was occupied by Axis forces in 1941 and reformed as a Communist federal republic under the presidency of partisan leader Josip Tito in 1945.

Tito died in 1980 and was succeeded by a rotating federal presidency which was unable to contain the growing nationalist movements. Efforts by the six republican presidents to negotiate a new federal or confederal structure for the country failed in 1991. On 25 June 1991 Slovenia and Croatia declared their independence from Yugoslavia.

In Croatia the ethnic Serb minority refused to accept Croatia's independence and fighting began in July 1991 between Croat Defence Forces and Serbian guerrillas, backed by the Yugoslav National Army (JNA). By September 1991 this had escalated into war between Croatia and Yugoslavia. The war in Croatia continued until January 1992 when the EU and the UN were able to bring about a cease-fire (see Croatia).

Macedonia declared its independence on 18 September 1991.

Bosnia-Herzegovina declared its independence on 1 March 1992. Independence was supported by the Bosniacs (Muslims) and Croats but rejected by the ethnic Serbs and fighting between Bosniacs and Serbs broke out in March 1992. The JNA intervened against the Bosniacs, but in May 1992 withdrew to Serbia and Montenegro (see Bosnia-Herzegovina). On 27 April 1992 the two remaining republics of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Serbia and Montenegro, announced the formation of a new 'Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' (FRY) under President Slobodan Milošević, who continued to lead various military intervention efforts to unite ethnic Serbs in neighbouring republics into a 'Greater Serbia'. All these efforts were ultimately unsuccessful.

Presidential and legislative elections for the federation were held on 24 September 2000, but were largely boycotted in Montenegro on the advice of its government. The Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS) became the largest party in both chambers of parliament. In the presidential election, the Federal Election Commission announced that Vojislav Koštunica of the Democratic Party of Serbia (DPS), had won 48.22 per cent, just short of the 50 per cent necessary to win without a second round, although an independent monitoring organisation had given him a clear majority. High tensions ensued, but on 7 October Koštunica was finally sworn in, replacing Milošević as President. The DOS and the SPS agreed to dissolve parliament and form a transitional government until a fresh election could be held for the Serbian Parliament. This took place on 23 December 2000 and the DOS won an overwhelming victory, obtaining 176 of the 250 seats.

Former President Milošević was arrested in April 2001 and handed over to the UN International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, which in May 2001 had indicted him on charges of crimes against humanity, genocide and ethnic cleansing. The trial opened in The Hague in the Netherlands in February 2002.

In March 2002 the leaders of Serbia, Montenegro and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia signed an agreement to maintain a joint state, and Yugoslavia was re-named Serbia and Montenegro. The constitutional charter for the new union was agreed in December that year, and Svetozar Marovic was elected President of Serbia and Montenegro the following March by the union parliament.

INSURGENCIES

The province of Kosovo in the south of Serbia is more than 90 per cent ethnically Albanian. In 1998, Slobodan Milošević, then leader of the League of Communists of Serbia, revoked Kosovo's autonomous status, resulting in the progressive exclusion of the Albanian majority from public life. Following clashes between ethnic Albanians and Serbian police in February and March 1998, the Serbian military attacked civilians in the province on the pretext of eliminating support for the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), an ethnic Albanian organisation fighting for independence for the province. The international community condemned the brutality of the Serbian forces and a UN arms embargo was imposed on Yugoslavia, but the situation deteriorated. Tens of thousands of Kosovar Albanians fled when Yugoslav forces began to attack Kosovar villages. Following warnings to the Yugoslav authorities, NATO commenced air strikes against military targets in Yugoslavia on 24 March 1999. Over 800,000 people fled or were forced to leave their homes and sought refuge in Albania, Macedonia or Montenegro, which, although part of the Yugoslav Federation, had refused to become involved in the fighting; more than 500,000 people were displaced within Kosovo.

On 3 June President Milošević accepted a peace plan agreed by NATO and Russia, and the Yugoslav army withdrew to be replaced by NATO forces. Since the Yugoslav withdrawal, Kosovo has been under the administration of the UN's Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), which has established the Kosovo Transitional Council, composed of four UN and four Kosovar representatives. The NATO-led Kosovo Force (KFOR) has established five command sectors, administered by UK, US, French, German and Italian troops respectively, with additional assistance from Russian troops. KFOR has facilitated the disarming of the KLA and the return of over 850,000 Kosovar Albanian refugees, but at least 200,000 Kosovar Serbs have fled, fearing reprisal attacks, which have frequently occurred.

In May 2001, UNMIK announced that a legislative assembly for Kosovo would be established having powers over health, education, environment and the economy, but with UNMIK retaining final authority. Elections to the assembly were held on 17 November 2001 and won by the Democratic League of Kosovo (LDK) who gained 47 of the 120 seats. A power-sharing government was agreed on 28 February 2002 with Bajram Rexhepi of the Democratic Party of Kosovo (PDK) as its head. Ibrahim Rugova of the LDK was elected unopposed as president on 4 March.

Armed fighters belonging to the ethnic Albanian Liberation Army of Preševo, Medvedja and Bujanovac (UCPMB) launched attacks on Serbs in Albanian-populated areas of southern Serbia in November 2000. The rebels wanted to annex these areas into Kosovo. A cease-fire was signed on 12 March 2001 after NATO agreed to permit Yugoslav forces to enter the demilitarised buffer zone which had been established on the Serbian side of the border with Kosovo in 1999.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The federal legislature, the Assembly of Serbia and Montenegro (Skupština Srbije i Crne Gore), has 126 members elected by the Republican Assemblies, 91 from Serbia and 35 from Montenegro, for a two-year term. The Union Government consists of a Council of three Serb and two Montenegrin Ministers with the President as ex officio chair. The Republics each have their own governments, each led by a Prime Minister. The President of Serbia and Montenegro is elected by the Serbia-Montenegro Union Parliament.

On 20 October 2002 elections to the Montenegrin Republican Assembly took place, in which the Democratic Party of Socialists (DPS) was re-elected. Filip Vujanovic was nominated to form a new government to present to the new assembly in early November. Milo Djukanović, in office since May 1998, resigned as president of Montenegro on 25 November 2002 to became prime minister. Vujanovic, having resigned as prime minister, was elected chair of the parliament and became acting president. On 11 May 2003 Filip Vujanovic was elected Montenegrin president after a third round of elections.

SERBIA

AREA – 88,538 sq. km

POPULATION – 9,300,000, of whom 66 per cent are Serbs

Serbia includes the provinces of Kosovo (population 1.6 million), of great historic importance to Serbs, and Vojvodina (population 2 million); the autonomy of both was ended in September 1990. Vojvodina, with its capital at Novi Sad, has a large Hungarian minority (21 per cent). Kosovo, with its capital at Priština, is predominantly Albanian (90 per cent).

The Serbian presidential elections of October and December 2002 were invalidated owing to the low turnout of voters. Natasa Micic became acting president in December. The Serbian Prime Minister, Zoran Djindjic was assassinated on 12 March 2003 and Zoran Zikovic was elected prime minister by parliament on 18 March. On 26 February 2004 the parliament voted to abolish the 50 per cent turnout needed to elect a president, and in June 2004 Boris Tadic was elected president with 53 per cent of the vote.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Since 1991 the economy has been devastated by the wars in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, by the UN economic sanctions and trade embargo, and because of the lack of free-market reforms. NATO bombing in 1999 further damaged the already fragile situation. However, after the ousting of former President Milošević in October 2000, the Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS) coalition government implemented aggressive remedial measures and began to reintegrate into the international community, renewing its membership in the IMF and rejoining the World Bank and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Since then the country has received donor finance for economic restructuring and rescheduled a large proportion of its debts.

Progress, however, remains slow, and only the country's agricultural self-sufficiency has kept it afloat. Industrial production remains extremely low and there is high unemployment, estimated to be around 34.5 per cent in 2003. GDP in 2000 was roughly 40 per cent of 1989 levels.

GNI – US$9,900 million (2001); US$930 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.5 per cent (2001)

INFLATION RATE – 19 per cent (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£61,628,000	£65,613,000
Exports to UK	31,402,000	34,410,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Serbia and Montenegro has some 49,805 km of roads, around 31,029 km of which are surfaced (including 560 km of expressways). There are also 4,059 km of railways, linking Belgrade directly to Athens, Bucharest, Budapest, Istanbul, Ljubljana, Munich, Skopje, Sofia, Thessaloniki, Vienna, and Zagreb. Principal ports and harbours include Bar, Belgrade, Kotor, Novi Sad, Pancevo, Tivat and Zelenika, and the main international airport – currently under renovation – is in Belgrade.

MEDIA

The end of the Milošević era saw a huge proliferation of media outlets. There are many privately owned television stations and around 1,000 radio stations were thought to be operating by late 2003. The state run national broadcaster, RTS, aims to develop into a public service, and private operators anticipate the formulation of regulatory and licensing procedures. Newspapers include Danas daily and a weekly publication Vreme and NIN.

In Kosovo, a Temporary Media Commission (TMC), set up by the UN, has set out a code of conduct for journalists which aims to prevent incitement to hatred in the media.

CULTURE

Serbia and Montenegro has a rich architectural and archaeological heritage that includes ornate orthodox churches, mosques, monasteries and palaces dating from the Ottoman Empire. Notable cultural figures include the writer Ivo Andric (1892–1975) winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1961, the playwright Marin Držić (1508–67), the film producer Branko Lustig (b. 1932), the sculptor Ivan Mestrovic (1833–1962) and composers Jakov Gotovac (1895–1982) and Josip Štolcer-Slavenski (1896–1955).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Seychelles consists of 115 islands spread over 643,737 sq. km of ocean. There is a relatively compact granitic group, 32 islands in all, with high hills and mountains, of which Mahé is the largest and most populated (90 per cent of the population live on Mahé); and the outlying coralline group, for the most part only a little above sea-level. Elevation extremes range from 905 m (Morne Seychellois) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with an average temperature of 26°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Proclaimed French territory in 1756, the Mahé group was settled as a dependency of Mauritius from 1770, but was finally captured and assigned to Great Britain in 1814. In 1903 these islands, together with the coralline group, were formed into a separate colony. On 29 June 1976, the islands became an independent republic within the Commonwealth. A coup d'état took place in 1977. Seychelles was a one-party state from 1979 until 1993, when a multiparty democratic system was established by President France-Albert René.

In presidential elections held in 2001, President René was re-elected with 54 per cent of the vote and in legislative elections held in December 2002, the Seychelles People's Progressive Front retained its overall majority with 23 out of the 34 seats in the National Assembly. Mr René stepped down in April 2004, to be succeeded by the former Vice-President James Michel.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the Constitution adopted in 1993, multiparty politics was institutionalised, a National Assembly of up to 34 members (23 elected by constituencies, up to 11 by proportional representation) was established and the presidential mandate was set at a five-year term, renewable three times.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is based on the tourist, fishing, small-scale agricultural and manufacturing industries, and the re-export of fuel for aircraft and ships. Deep-sea tuna fishing by foreign fleets under licence, improved port facilities at Victoria and exports from a tuna-canning factory attract growing revenues. The government is attempting to reduce the reliance on the tourist industry, which generates the majority of foreign exchange earnings, by promoting the country as an offshore haven for financial services. There were 129,800 foreign visitors in 2001. Principal exports are tuna, frozen prawns, fish and cinnamon bark. The principal imports are machinery and transport equipment, manufactures, foodstuffs, tobacco, fuel oils and chemicals.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The Seychelles has around 373 km of roads, the majority of which are surfaced. The main port is Victoria, and ferries run regularly between Mahé, Praslin and la Digue. Some 15 airports, eight with surfaced runways, serve the islands.

MEDIA

The government controls much of the islands' media, and operates the only radio and TV stations and the sole daily newspaper. Freedom of speech has improved since one-party rule was abolished in 1993, although the opposition weekly newspaper, Regar, has regularly been sued for libel by the government, and steep licensing fees have discouraged the development of privately owned broadcast media. The BBC World Service and Radio France Internationale broadcast in the area.

CULTURE

There is no indigenous culture in the Seychelles, but aspects of African origin have survived, and the government-formed National School of Music, and the National Cultural Troupe foster a Créole identity and tradition. The sombre moutia is the typical dance of the Seychelles, with strong African and Malagasy rhythms, the music for which is a blend of Indian, European, Chinese and Arabic.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain consists of coastal mangrove swamps, wooded hill country, upland plateau, and mountains in the east. Elevation extremes range from 1,948 m (Bintimani) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. Sierra Leone has a tropical climate with a wet season from May to October. Average daily temperatures in Freetown are 30°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In the late 18th century a project was begun to settle destitute Africans from England on the Freetown peninsula. In 1808 the settlement was declared a Crown colony and became the main base in West Africa for enforcing the 1807 Act outlawing the slave trade. Africans from North America and the West Indies, and Africans rescued from slave ships, also settled there. In 1896 a protectorate was declared over the hinterland.

In 1951 the colony of Freetown and the protectorate were united and on 27 April 1961 Sierra Leone became a fully independent state within the Commonwealth. The country became a republic in 1971 and a one-party state in 1978, but in September 1991 a new multiparty constitution was adopted and an interim government formed, which was overthrown by a military coup on 29

April 1992. Four years later, the military government surrendered power to a civilian government, headed by Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP).

However, in May 1997 army officers led by Major Johnny Koroma seized power. President Kabbah fled and a 20-member Armed Forces Revolutionary Council was set up with Koroma as chairman and Revolutionary United Front (RUF) leader Foday Sankoh as vice-chairman. In July 1997, a Nigerian-led ECOMOG force was sent to oust Koroma and restore the legitimate government. A peace agreement was reached in October, which provided for Kabbah to return to power and granted immunity from prosecution to Koroma. President Kabbah returned to Freetown on 10 March 1998.

In the presidential elections held on 14 May 2002, President Kabbah was re-elected with 70 per cent of the vote and the SLPP won 83 of the 112 seats in the parliament in the simultaneous legislative election. A new cabinet, composed of members of the SLPP and independents, was appointed.

INSURGENCIES

Since May 1991 government forces have been fighting the RUF, whose aim is to force all foreigners out of the country and to nationalise the mining sector. Attacks by the RUF intensified in December 1998 and on 6 January 1999 the RUF attacked Freetown. ECOMOG troops launched a counter-attack on 9–10 January, recapturing the city.

President Kabbah and Foday Sankoh signed a cease-fire agreement on 18 May 1999 and it was agreed in July 1999 that Sankoh would be appointed vice-president and head the Mineral Resources Commission and that the RUF would be given four cabinet posts. A government of national unity was announced on 2 November 1999. Violence continued, despite the efforts of the UN Mission to Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), which officially took over from ECOMOG on 29 April 2000. The cease-fire agreement collapsed when the RUF abducted 500 UNAMSIL peacekeepers between 30 April–6 May, and used captured UNAMSIL weaponry to launch an advance on Freetown. UNAMSIL troops, along with Sierra Leonean Army (SLA) and Nigerian Army troops, went on the offensive and drove the RUF back, eventually arresting Foday Sankoh, the RUF leader, on 17 May 2000.

A cease-fire was signed by the government and the RUF on 11 November 2000, but was never fully implemented; another agreement to end hostilities was then signed in May 2001. The state of emergency imposed in 1998 was lifted in March 2002.

In September 2002 the UN decided to extend its military mission within the country for a further eight months and again on 30 March 2003 for a further six months. There are currently around 12,000 UNAMSIL personnel in Sierra Leone.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

On the Freetown peninsula, farming is largely confined to the production of cassava and crops such as maize and vegetables for local consumption. In the hinterland the principal agricultural product is rice, which is the staple food of the country, and cash crops such as cocoa, coffee, palm kernels and ginger. Cattle production is also important.

The economy depends largely on mineral exports, mainly diamonds, gold and bauxite, although mineral production has been disrupted by recent insurgencies. In December 2002 the UN approved a resolution banning the trade in rough diamonds in areas not controlled by the government. Between 60 and 70 per cent of government expenditure is financed by donor support.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Since the phasing out of the railway system in 1974 the road network has been developed considerably; and there are now 11,200 km (7,000 miles) of roads in the country. A bridge has been constructed over the Mano River linking Sierra Leone and Liberia.

The Freetown international airport is situated at Lungi. The main port is Freetown, which has one of the largest natural harbours in the world. There are smaller ports at Pepel, Bonthe and Niti.

EDUCATION

Technical education is provided in the two government technical institutes, situated in Freetown and Kenema, in two trade centres and in the technical training establishments of the mining companies. Teacher training is carried out at the University of Sierra Leone, six colleges in the provinces and in the Milton Margai Training College near Freetown.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Singapore consists of the island of Singapore and 63 islets. Singapore island is 42 km long and 22.5 km wide and is situated just north of the Equator off the southern extremity of the Malay peninsula, from which it is separated by the Straits of Johore. A causeway crosses the 1.21 km to the mainland. The average temperature is 29°C all year round. Elevation extremes range from 166 m (Bukit Timah) at the highest point to 0 m (Singapore Strait) at the lowest. Average annual precipitation is 2,410 mm, and floods and violent wind squalls called Sumatras are common.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Singapore, a major trading site since the 16th century, was incorporated with Penang and Malacca to form the Straits Settlements in 1826. Singapore fell to Japanese forces during the Second World War and civil government was not restored until 1946, when it became a separate colony. Internal self-government was introduced to Singapore in 1959 and it became a state of Malaysia in September 1963, only to become an independent sovereign state within the Commonwealth on 9 August 1965.

Sellapan Rama Nathan became President of Singapore on 1 September 1999; no election was held as he was the sole candidate. After the general election of 3 November 2001 the People's Action Party (PAP) had 82 seats in Parliament. Goh Chok Tong, Prime Minister since 1990, resigned on 12 August 2004. His successor, Lee Hsien Loong, was sworn into office the same day.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is directly elected for a six-year term, and can veto Government decisions relating to internal security, the budget, financial reserves and the appointment of senior civil servants. The President appoints the Prime Minister and, on his advice, the members of the Cabinet. There is a Parliament of 84 directly elected members, with up to six further non-constituency members from opposition parties (NCMPs), directly elected for a five-year term. Up to nine members can also be nominated by the Government for a two-year term (NMPs). In the present Parliament, there are two NCMPs and six NMPs.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Historically Singapore's economy was based on the sale and distribution of raw materials from surrounding countries and on entrepôt trade in finished products. An industrialisation programme launched in 1968 established a wide range of manufacturing industries, including shipbuilding, iron and steel, micro-electronics, electrical goods, telecommunications equipment, office machinery, scientific instruments and pharmaceuticals. Singapore has also become an important financial services centre with significant insurance and foreign exchange markets, a stock exchange, 149 commercial banks and 79 merchant banks and an oil-refining centre. In February 1998 the government announced substantial liberalising reforms of the financial sector, aimed at allowing the country to compete more competitively with other financial sectors in the region. Singapore has not been as badly affected as its neighbours by the economic crisis in south-east Asia, due in part to currency reserves estimated at US$118 billion.

Singapore's major trading partners are the USA, Malaysia, the EU, Hong Kong and Japan.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 25.8 km of railway connected to the Malaysian rail system by the causeway across the Straits of Johore, and 3,122 km of roads. Singapore is one of the largest and busiest seaports in the world, with six terminals, deep-water wharves and ship repairing facilities. In 2000, the total volume of cargo handled was 325,591,100 tonnes. There were 145,383 ship arrivals in 2000. The international airport is at Changi, in the east of the island, with 64 airlines operating flights to 50 countries and 28,618,200 passengers using the airport in 2000.

MEDIA

There are 19 radio and four television channels operated by the Singapore Broadcasting Corporation, and three private broadcasting stations. Singapore Press Holdings, which has close links to the ruling party, has a virtual monopoly of the newspaper industry, and publish 15 newspapers and six periodicals.

CULTURE

Performing arts are central to the cultural life in Singapore and include the spectacular acrobatic Chinese Lion Dance, along with Malay and Indian dances, while Chinese opera is also popular.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 2,655 m (Gerlachovský štít) at the highest point to 94 m (Bodroch River) at the lowest. The climate of Slovakia is continental, with warm humid summers and cold dry winters. Average temperatures range from 1°C in January to 21°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

At the end of the 11th century Slovakia became part of the Hungarian state, under the control of the Magyars. Following the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Slovakia was amalgamated into Czechoslovakia on 28 October 1918, but became an independent state when Germany invaded Czechoslovakia in 1939. Slovakia was liberated by Soviet forces in 1945 and returned to Czechoslovakia. The formation of a federal republic between the Czech lands and Slovakia was the only Prague Spring Reform to survive the Soviet invasion of 1968. Following the collapse of Communist rule in 1989, the Czech and Slovak republics began to negotiate the dissolution of the federation into two sovereign states in 1992. Dissolution took effect on 1 January 1993.

A coalition government led by the Movement for a Democratic Slovakia (HZDS) was sworn in on 12 January 1993 but was brought down by a no-confidence vote in March 1994. Legislative elections later that year returned the HZDS to power at the head of a three-party coalition which took office in December. Led by the authoritarian Prime Minister, Vladimír Mečiar, the HZDS dominated a string of coalition governments, pursuing nationalist and populist policies until October 1998, when it was ousted by an alliance of liberals, centrists, left-wingers and ethnic Hungarians, which formed a new coalition under Mikuláš Dzurinda of the Slovak Democratic and Christian Union (SDKU). The presidential election, held in May 1999, was won by Rudolf Schuster of the Party of Civil Understanding (SOP).

Under Dzurinda, who won a second term in September 2002, Slovakia forged ahead with reforms in its bid for EU and Nato membership. Slovaks voted in favour of joining the EU in a referendum in May 2003, and the country became a full member of Nato and of the EU in March and May 2004 respectively.

Presidential elections in April 2004 were won by Ivan Gašparovič with 59.9 per cent of the vote.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution vests legislative power in the National Council of 150 members directly elected for a four-year term by proportional representation with a five per cent threshold for parliamentary representation. Since a change to the constitution in 1998, the President is directly elected for a five-year term, renewable only once, by direct election; executive power is held by the Prime Minister and Cabinet.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

From independence until mid-1994 Slovakia faced widespread economic difficulties that were caused, partially, by the structure of its centrally planned and inefficiently managed economy. However, there has recently been good progress in macroeconomic stabilisation and structural reform and privatisation, as well as foreign investment have increased.

Major industries include foodstuffs, metal production, gas and oil, textiles, transport vehicles and rubber. Natural resources include brown coal, natural gas, iron ore, antimony, lead and zinc. Major trading partners include Germany, Austria, the Czech Republic and Italy.

GNI – US$20,300 million (2001); US$3,760 per capita (2001)

Slovakia has a total of 42,717 km of roads, of which 37,036 km are surfaced (including 296 km of expressways). There are 3,668 km of railways, and 172 km of navigable waterway on the Danube. The main ports are at Bratislava and Komarno.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The two main television providers are Slovak TV (public) and TV Markiza (private). All three major daily newspapers are privately owned and there are more than 20 private radio stations, in addition to the public broadcaster Slovak Radio, which operates five national networks and an external service.

Key figures in Slovakian culture include L'udovít Stúr (1815–56), a nationalist who successfully revived the Slovakian literary language, the writer Jan Botto (1829–81) and the poet Andrej Sladkovic (1820–72).

The terrain is mountainous and elevation extremes range from 2,864 m (Triglav) at the highest point to 0 m (Adriatic Sea) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Ljubljana range from 0°C in January to 22°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area that is now Slovenia came under the control of the Habsburg Empire in the 13th and 14th centuries and remained so until the defeat of the Austro-Hungarian Empire in 1918, when it came under the control of Yugoslavia. German forces invaded Yugoslavia in 1941 and Slovenia was divided between Germany, Italy and Hungary. Slovenia was reformed as a constituent Republic of the Federal Yugoslav State in May 1945. After a dispute with Italy and nine years of international administration, the Adriatic coast and hinterland were returned to Slovenia in 1954 and Italy retained Trieste.

Slovenian fears of Serbian dominance led the Slovene Assembly in 1989 to amend the republican constitution and to lay the basis of a sovereign state. The first democratic elections, held in April 1990, were won by the pro-independence 'Demos' coalition. In a referendum in December 1990, 88 per cent of the electorate voted for independence, which was declared on 25 June 1991. A ten-day war with the Yugoslav National Army followed before the Army called off hostilities and withdrew under the mediation of the EU.

A coalition led by Liberal Democracy of Slovenia (LDS) formed a government following the 1996 legislative election. President Kučan was re-elected on 23 November 1997.

In the October 2000 general election, the third since gaining independence, the LDS was returned to power and formed a coalition government with the United List of Social Democrats (ZLSD), and the Democratic Party of Pensioners (DeSUS). Janez Drnovsek was elected president with 56.5 per cent of the vote on 1 December 2002.

In a March 2003 referendum on EU and NATO membership, Slovenes voted 90 per cent in favour of joining the EU and 66 per cent in favour of joining NATO; the country joined NATO in April 2004 and the EU in May 2004. Legislative elections were scheduled for October 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Head of State is the President, elected for a five-year term. Executive power is vested in the Prime Minister and Cabinet. The lower house of the legislature, the National Assembly, has 90 members directly elected for a four-year term. The upper house, the 40-member National Council, has an advisory role. The National Assembly is elected on a proportional representation basis, with one seat each reserved for the Italian and Hungarian minorities.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Slovenia's economy has emerged as the most stable of the former Yugoslav economies. It has successfully re-orientated its exports towards Western markets, its main trading partners being Germany, Italy, France, Austria and Croatia. The privatisation process was completed in 1998. In 2002 agriculture contributed 3.1 per cent to the total GDP, the manufacturing industry 32.7 per cent and the service industries 64.2 per cent. The main agricultural products are potatoes, wheat, corn, sugarcane and grapes. The major manufacturing sectors are metalworking, electronics, textiles, automobiles and automotive parts, chemicals, glass products and food-processing. The tourist industry is a major earner, with 1,957,000 visitors in 2000.

GNI – US$19,400 million (2001); US$9,760 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.8 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 7.4 per cent (2002)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 7.4 per cent (1999)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$4,762 million (1997); US$5,491 million (1999 estimate)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$843 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$10,937 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$9,471 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$241 million deficit (2002)

Current Account – US$375 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£180,859,000	£158,931,000
Exports to UK	174,683,000	171,807,000

TRANSPORT-INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 20,128 km of roads and 1,201 km of railways, of which 499 km are electrified. Important road and rail communications cross the country from west to east (Milan–Ljubljana–Budapest), and north to south (Munich–Ljubljana–Zagreb–Belgrade–Athens). There are international airports at Ljubljana, Maribor and Portoroz (Adriatic Coast). Koper is a port for receiving shipments from Austria, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge and compulsory between the ages of six and 14. There are 44 colleges and two universities (Ljubljana and Maribor).

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 0.3 per cent; (f) 0.4 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 95 per cent (1996); tertiary 36.4 per cent (1996)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The main newspapers are privately owned, and the broadcasting sector is a mix of public and private ownership. The television market is mainly shared between the public service RTV Slovenia and the private stations Pop TV and Kanal A, and about two-thirds of households are connected to cable or satellite.

Important cultural figures include the poet France Prešeren (1800–49) and the architect Jože Plečnik (1872–1957).

SOLOMON ISLANDS

AREA – 28,896 sq. km

POPULATION – 480,442 (2001 estimate). English is the official language; there are over 80 local languages

CAPITAL – ΨHoniara (population, 49,107)

CURRENCY – Solomon Islands dollar (SIS) of 100 cents

NATIONAL ANTHEM – God Bless Our Solomon Islands

NATIONAL DAY – 7 July (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Blue over green divided by a diagonal yellow band, with five white stars in the top left quarter

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 4.12 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1966)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.7 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 15 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Forming a scattered archipelago of mountainous islands and low-lying coral atolls, the Solomon Islands stretches about 1,448 km in a south-easterly direction from the Shortland Islands to the Santa Cruz islands. The six biggest islands are Choiseul, New Georgia, Santa Isabel, Guadalcanal, Malaita and Makira. They are characterised by thickly forested mountain ranges intersected by deep, narrow valleys. Elevation extremes range from 2,447 m (Mt Makarakomburu) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical and the average temperature in Honiara is 27°C. The islands are occasionally prone to earthquakes, tsunamis and volcanic activity.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

European interest in the islands began in the mid-16th century and continued intermittently for about 300 years, following the inauguration of sugar plantations in Queensland and Fiji (which created a need for labour), and the arrival of missionaries and traders. Britain declared a protectorate in 1893 over the southern Solomons, adding the Santa Cruz group in 1898 and 1899. The islands of the Shortland groups were transferred from Germany to Britain by treaty in 1900. The Solomon Islands achieved internal self-government in 1976, and became independent in July 1978.

In November 2000, a conference of provincial governmental heads called for the introduction of a federal system of government; some of the islands had earlier threatened secession. Legislative elections were held on 5 December 2001 in which the People's Alliance Party gained 20 of the 50 seats in the National Parliament. The party's parliamentary leader, Sir Allan Kemakeza was elected Prime Minister on 17 December and the new cabinet was sworn in on 19 December.

INSURGENCIES

Following tensions between indigenous inhabitants and settlers from other parts of the country, on 28 June 1999, a peace agreement was signed by representatives of the national and provincial governments and the Isatabu Freedom Fighters (IFF), a local militant group, following mediation by the Commonwealth special envoy Sitiveni Rabuka.

Following further tension, the government banned the IFF and their rivals the Malaita Eagles Force (MEF) in February 2000, but lifted the ban in May to facilitate peace talks. MEF guerrillas took Prime Minister Ulufa'alu hostage on 5 June 2000 and took over the capital. Ulufa'alu was freed five days later and the MEF and the IFF agreed to a two-week truce to allow mediation by a Commonwealth delegation. A peace deal was signed by the IFF and the MEF on 15 October 2000.

However, violence escalated during 2002–3 which led to the deployment of the Regional Assistance Mission to the Solomon Islands (RAMSI) in July 2003. Order was quickly restored and RAMSI began a programme of re-construction.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Solomon Islands is a constitutional monarchy. Queen Elizabeth II is represented locally by the governor-general. Executive authority is exercised by the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in a unicameral National Parliament of 50 members, elected for a four-year term. Governor-General, Nathaniel Waena, apptd 2004

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy remains in severe disarray following the ethnic disturbances, and the Solomon Islands are heavily dependent on foreign aid, principally from Australia. Principal exports are timber, fish, palm oil, copra and cocoa. The main imports are foodstuffs, consumer goods, machinery and transport materials.

GNI – US$253 million (2000); US$590 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 1,360 km of roads, of which only 34 km are surfaced. Solomon Airlines operates international services to other Pacific states and Australia. Air Niugini flies from Port Moresby to Honiara.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The Solomon Islands Broadcasting Corporation (SIBC) operates a public radio service but there are no television services based on the islands.

Cultural life in the Solomon Islands reflects a rich diversity of Polynesian, Melanesian and Asian influences. Kastom is still widely practised throughout the islands and refers to land ownership, traditional beliefs and animism.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain is mostly flat or undulating plateau, rising to hills in the north. Elevation extremes range from 2,416 m (Shimbiris) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. Somalia has an arid and tropical climate influenced by the north-east and south-west monsoons. There are two wet seasons from March to May and October to November, and average temperatures in Mogadishu are an almost constant 33°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Somalia, an Arab sultanate since the 17th century, was conquered by Zanzibar in 1896. In 1950, the country became a UN Trust Territory administered by Italy. The British protectorate of Somaliland and Somalia were joined and became fully independent on 1 July 1960.

In 1969, the armed forces seized power and established a ruling Revolutionary Council under Siad Barre's leadership. Siad Barre was overthrown by rebels in January 1991, sparking civil war between rival clan-based movements. The United Somali Congress (USC) seized control in Mogadishu, while the Somali National Movement (SNM) formed a rival administration in the north. Fighting between the USC and supporters of the Somali National Alliance (SNA) of Gen. Mohammed Aidede devastated Mogadishu and large parts of the south, exacerbating famine conditions. The UN operation in Somalia proved ineffective in securing aid distribution routes and was replaced in December 1992 by a UN-approved, US-led, United Task Force (UNITAF).

The UN withdrew its troops in March 1995, and in June Gen. Aidede was ousted as SNA leader by a joint USC-SNA congress which nominated Osman Ali Ato as its leader. Gen. Aidede responded by declaring himself president on 15 June 1995, but was shot dead in July 1996 and was replaced as president by his son, Hussein Aidede.

A peace plan proposed by Djibouti was overwhelmingly supported in November 1999 by representatives of civil society and the armed factions at a forum in Nairobi. A Somali National Reconciliation Conference in Djibouti opened on 2 May 2000, which aimed to lay the foundations of the transitional institutions of the Somali state, but was opposed by the Rahawein Resistance Army, the Somali Patriotic Movement and the leaders of Puntland. The National Reconciliation Conference appointed a transitional national assembly on 13 August, which on 26 August appointed Abdulkhassim Salat Hassan as president. President Hassan appointed Ali Khalif Galayadh as Prime Minister shortly afterwards.

Fighting between pro- and anti-government militias broke out in the south of the country in July 2001. Prime Minister Galayadh resigned in October following a vote of no confidence and was replaced by Hassan Abshir Farah; a reshuffled cabinet was announced on 16 February 2002.

In October 2002 internationally backed peace talks began in Kenya and a cease-fire agreement was signed by 21 warring factions and the transitional national government, under which hostilities would end for the duration of the talks. The second phase of the peace talks began in Nairobi in February 2003 but was plagued by boycotts and disputes. In 2004, an agreement was signed to establish a federal government and to form a transitional parliament of 351 members which would appoint the federal president. However, President Hassan refused to stand down until a new government had been formed.

INSURGENCIES

With the downfall of Siad Barre, the SNM took control of the north-west (the former British Somaliland protectorate) and in May 1991 declared unilateral independence as the 'Somaliland Republic'. A government and legislature was formed which elected Mohammed Ibrahim Egal as president in May 1993; he was re-elected in February 1997. A referendum on a new constitution, which confirmed the independence of Somaliland, was held on 31 May 2001 and was approved by 97.09 per cent of the vote. Egal died on 3 May 2002 and was succeeded by Vice-President Dahir Riyale Kahin, who was elected president on 14 April 2003.

An autonomous administration was also proclaimed in north-eastern Somalia on 23 July 1998. Col. Ahmed Abdullahi Yusuf was named as president of the region, calling itself Puntland; a cabinet was appointed, and a 69-member parliament inaugurated. On 30 June 2001 Abdullahi was replaced by Yusuf Haji Nur as interim president pending elections held on 14 November in which Jama Ali Jama was elected president. Abdullahi refused to relinquish his claim to the presidency and by May 2002 his supporters had taken control of the whole of the territory.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Livestock raising is the main occupation and there is a modest export trade in livestock, skins and hides. Italy, the Gulf States and Saudi Arabia import the bulk of the banana crop, the biggest export, which accounts for approximately 40 per cent of exports. The principal imports are machinery and transport equipment, industrial goods and foodstuffs.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£9,119,000	£3,597,000
Exports to UK	33,000	76,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Somalia has a total of 22,100 km of roads, of which 2,608 km are surfaced. Ports and harbours include Boosaaso, Berbera, Kismaayo, Merca and Mogadishu, and the country has six airports with surfaced runways.

MEDIA

Many new print and broadcast outlets emerged after Siad Barre was ousted in 1991, but most were tied to one or another of the country's warring factions. Even though recent years have seen the emergence of stronger regional media, broadcasters and journalists operate in a dangerous environment, limiting their ability to report freely and objectively. Many Somalis rely on foreign broadcasts for their news: CNN and Al-Jazeera are available in some parts of the country.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

South Africa occupies the southernmost part of the African continent from the courses of the Limpopo, Marico, Molopo, Nosop and Orange rivers to the Cape of Good Hope, with the exception of Lesotho, Swaziland and the extreme south of Mozambique. To the west, east and south lie the south Atlantic and southern Indian Oceans. Some 1,920 km to the south-east of Cape Town lie Prince Edward and Marion Islands, part of South Africa since 1947. Elevation extremes range from 3,408 m (Njesuthi) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is temperate and is influenced by the warm Agulhas current from Mozambique. Average temperatures in Pretoria range from 3°C in June to 29°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Hunter-gatherers, the San (Bushmen) and Khoikhoi (Hottentots) inhabited southern Africa from c. 8,000 BC. By the eighth century AD, Bantu-speaking peoples had settled the north of the country.

The Portuguese navigator Bartolomeu Días charted the coast in 1488 and the Dutch founded the colony of the Cape of Good Hope in 1652, which was taken by Britain in 1806. The Orange Free State and Transvaal republics were founded by the Boers (the descendants of Dutch settlers) and were recognised by Britain in 1853–4. Natal was annexed to Cape Colony by the British in 1844 and then formed as a separate colony in 1856, to which Zululand was added in 1897 after the British victory in the Zulu wars. Transvaal and the Orange Free State became British colonies after the Boer defeat in the Second Boer War 1899–1902. The self-governing colonies became united in 1910 under the name of the Union of South Africa. Independence within the Commonwealth was gained in 1931 under the Statute of Westminster.

From 1948, when the Afrikaner National Party came to power, South Africa's social and political structure was based on apartheid, a policy of racial segregation. Opposition protests culminated in the Sharpeville massacre in 1960, following which the African National Congress (ANC) and other opposition groups were banned. South Africa left the Commonwealth and became a republic on 31 May 1961, largely as a result of international condemnation. South Africa re-joined the Commonwealth following the 1994 general elections.

MOVES TO DEMOCRACY

The first moves to reform apartheid came in 1984, when a new constitution extended the franchise to the mixed race and Indian populations. In 1989, F. W. de Klerk became President of South Africa and lifted the ban on the ANC and restrictions on other anti-apartheid groups and freed Nelson Mandela, the main ANC political detainee. In 1991 the laws implementing apartheid were effectively abolished. In 1992 a referendum amongst the white electorate on continued political reform and a new constitution reached by negotiation was approved.

In 1991 the government, ANC, Inkatha Freedom Party and other civic groups reached agreement on the establishment of an inter-racial administration and the formation of a five-year coalition government following a multiracial election.

In the country's first multiracial general election held on 26–29 April 1994 the ANC gained 252 seats in the 400-seat National Assembly and 60 seats in the 90-seat Senate. Nelson Mandela was elected president.

The parliament has passed two significant pieces of legislation to settle the legacy of the apartheid era. The first, in November 1994, restored the rights of those dispossessed of their land, and the second, in June 1995, established the Truth Commission whose remit is to assess confessions, grant amnesties for political crimes and set compensation for victims.

Following legislative and provincial elections held on 2 June 1999, the ANC gained 266 seats in the National Assembly and, being one seat short of the two-thirds majority required to amend the constitution, entered into a coalition with the Minority Front, which held just one seat in the National Assembly.

On 14 June 1999 the National Assembly met to select a new president. Thabo Mbeki was elected unopposed and was formally sworn in on 16 June 1999. Mbeki was subsequently elected to a second five-year term on 24 April 2004, following the landslide general election victory of his ruling ANC party who gained 70 per cent of the vote and 279 seats in the National Assembly.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The final constitution came into effect in 1997. Executive power is vested in a President and Cabinet, with the President elected by the National Assembly. Legislative power is vested in a bicameral Parliament, a directly elected 400-member National Assembly elected by proportional representation for a five-year term, and an indirectly elected 90-member National Council of Provinces composed of ten members elected by each of the nine regional legislatures for a five-year term.

South Africa is divided into nine regions (Western Cape, Northern Cape, Eastern Cape, Free State, North-West, KwaZulu/Natal, Gauteng, Limpopo, Mpumalanga). Each region has its own Premier, a legislature of between 30 and 100 seats elected by proportional representation, and its own constitution.

DEFENCE

The new South African National Defence Force (SANDF) was created from the merger of the South African Defence Forces (SADF), the Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK) armed wing of the ANC, the Azanian People's Liberation Army (APLA) of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, and the defence forces of the four former independent homelands.

The Army has 168 main battle tanks, 929 armoured personnel carriers and 1,200 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Navy has two submarines and eight patrol and coastal vessels at two bases. The Air Force has 84 combat aircraft and 12 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.7 per cent of GDP (2002)
MILITARY PERSONNEL – 55,750: Army 36,000, Navy 4,500, Air Force 9,250

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Mining is of great importance, employing more than 400,000 people in 2000 and providing the largest source of foreign exchange. The principal minerals produced are gold, coal, diamonds, copper, iron ore, manganese, lime and limestone, uranium, platinum, fluorspar, andalusite, zinc, zirconium, vanadium, titanium and chrome. South Africa is the world's largest producer of gold, platinum, diamonds, manganese, chrome and vanadium, and has the world's largest reserves of chrome ore, manganese, vanadium and andalusite. In 2000, 420 tonnes of gold were produced.

Agriculture, forestry and fishing accounted for 3.2 per cent of GDP in 2000. Over 70 per cent of land is pasture so livestock farming is widespread. Principal crops are maize, sugarcane, fruits and vegetables, wheat, sorghum, sunflower seeds and groundnuts. Cotton is widely grown, and viticulture is also widespread.

The manufacturing industries, concentrated most heavily around Johannesburg, Pretoria and the major ports, process foodstuffs, metals and non-metallic mineral products, produce oil from coal, and also produce beverages and tobacco, motor vehicles, chemicals and chemical products, machinery, textiles and clothing, and paper and paper products. Industry contributed 30.9 per cent of GDP in 2000.

Energy production is based upon coal and natural gas and the production of synthetic liquid fuel from coal. One nuclear power station is in operation and others are planned. South Africa exports electricity through its electricity grid connections to all states in southern Africa.

The tourism industry accounts for 3.4 per cent of GDP. In 2000, 5.9 million foreign tourists visited South Africa.

Principal exports are gold, base metals and metal products, coal, diamonds, food (especially fruit) and wool. Principal imports are machinery, chemicals, motor vehicles, metals and metal products, food, inedible raw materials and textiles. South Africa's main trading partners are Germany, the USA, the UK, Italy and Japan. GNI – US$156,511 million (2003); US$1,859 per capita (2003)

MEDIA

The South African Broadcasting Corporation (SABC) is a major state-owned television and radio broadcaster while Channel Africa (owned by SABC) is an external radio service that reaches the entire continent. The Star is Johannesburg's oldest daily newspaper, while the Sunday Times is the longest running weekly title. Beeld is a popular Afrikaans daily title.

CULTURE

South Africa is home to a great diversity of cultures, and traditional black cultures – such as Zulu, Xhosa and Ndebele – are reviving after suppression during the apartheid years. Celebrated figures include the writers J. M. Coetzee (b. 1940), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 2003 and Nadine Gordima (b. 1923), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1991. Desmond Tutu (b. 1931) was the winner of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1984. South African music, such as that created by groups like Ladysmith Black Mambazo, is gaining wider international recognition.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The interior of the Iberian peninsula consists of an elevated tableland surrounded and traversed by mountain ranges: the Pyrenees, the Cantabrian Mountains, the Sierra de Guadarrama, Sierra Morena, Sierra Nevada and the Montes de Toledo. The principal rivers are the Duero, the Tajo, the Guadiana, the Guadalquivir, the Ebro and the Miño. Elevation extremes range from 3,718 m (Pico de Teide) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. The climate is Mediterranean in the southern and eastern coastal areas, and temperate further inland. Average temperatures in Madrid range from 1°C in January to 31°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Modern-day Spain has its roots in the unification of two powerful kingdoms: Castile and Aragón in 1479. By the 16th century, Spain was one of the richest and most powerful nations in Europe with an empire that covered most of central and southern America. However, a succession of costly wars and revolts in the 17th and 18th centuries saw this empire go into steady decline.

Spain was proclaimed a republic in 1931 and in February 1936 the Popular Front (PF), a left-wing coalition, was elected. In July 1936 a counter-revolution broke out in military garrisons in Spanish Morocco and spread throughout Spain. Civil war ensued until March 1939, when the PF governments in Madrid and Barcelona surrendered to the Nationalists (as General Franco's followers were then named). General Franco became president and ruled the country until his death in 1975, when, according to his wishes, he was succeeded as head of state by Prince Juan Carlos of Bourbon (grandson of Alfonso XIII) and Spain again became a monarchy. The first free election was held on 15 June 1977.

The legislative election of March 2004 saw the Socialist Workers' Party (SWP) win 42.6 per cent of the vote and secure 164 seats in the congress of deputies and 81 in the Senate. José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero was named as prime minister.

Polling was overshadowed by a series of explosions on commuter trains in Madrid on 24 March 2004, which killed over 200 people. Responsibility for the attack was attributed to the Islamic militant group al-Qa'eda in retaliation for Spain's support of the USA and Britain's position regarding the war in Iraq. Following his election victory, Zapatero withdrew Spain's 1,300 troops from Iraq at the end of May 2004.

INSURGENCIES

The Basque separatist organisation ETA (Euzkadi ta Azkatasuna – Basque Nation and Liberty) has since its formation in 1959 carried out a terrorist campaign of bombings, shootings and kidnappings against the Spanish state in an attempt to gain independence for the Basque country. ETA rejected regional autonomy for the Basque country in 1979 as insufficient and continued its campaign, but was greatly weakened in the early 1990s by increased co-operation between French and Spanish security forces. Following a car bomb explosion in January 2000, over a million people demonstrated in Madrid against ETA terrorist attacks, and in August 2002, Spanish MPs voted to suspend the Basque political party, Batasuna, because of its links with ETA. On 17 March 2003 the supreme court approved a government request for a permanent ban on Batasuna.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1978 Constitution there is a bicameral General Assembly (Cortes Generales) comprising a 350-member Congress of Deputies (Congreso de los Diputados) elected for a maximum term of four years, which elects the Prime Minister; and a Senate (Senado) consisting of 208 directly elected representatives and 51 representatives appointed by the assemblies of the autonomous regions. Since the promulgation of the 1978 Constitution, 19 autonomous regions have been established, with their own parliaments and governments. These are Andalucía, Aragón, Asturias, Balearics, the Basque country, Canary Islands, Cantabria, Castilla-La Mancha, Castilla y León, Catalunya, Ceuta, Extremadura, Galicia, Madrid, Melilla, Murcia, Navarra, La Rioja and Valencia.

DEFENCE

The Army has 552 main battle tanks, 2,023 armoured personnel carriers and 28 attack helicopters. The Navy has six submarines, one aircraft carrier, 16 frigates, 37 patrol and coastal vessels, 17 combat aircraft and 37 armed helicopters at seven bases. The Air Force has 186 combat aircraft. The USA maintains 2,030 naval and 360 air force personnel in Spain.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.2 per cent of GDP (2002)
 MILITARY PERSONNEL – 150,700: Army 95,600, Navy 22,900, Air Force 22,750; Paramilitaries 73,360

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The country is generally fertile and olives, oranges, lemons, almonds, pomegranates, bananas, apricots, tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers and grapes are cultivated. Other agricultural products include wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp and flax. The vine is cultivated widely; in the south-west, around Jerez, sherry and wine are produced. Spain has one of Europe's largest fishing industries.

Spain's mineral resources of coal, iron, wolfram, copper, zinc, lead and iron ores are exploited. The principal industrial goods are cars, steel, ships, manufactured goods, textiles, chemical products, footwear and other leather goods. Tourism is a major industry generating nine per cent of GDP and employing 11 per cent of the population; some 48 million tourists visit per year.

Spain successfully met the criteria laid down for EU economic and monetary union and joined the European single currency in 1999. The centre-right government subsequently withdrew subsidies from uncompetitive industries, privatised the steel industry and reduced income tax.

The principal exports include manufactures, military hardware, vehicles, semi-manufactures, foodstuffs, consumer goods and energy. The principal imports are manufactures, military hardware, semi-manufactures, vehicles, consumer goods, foodstuffs and energy.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Spain has a total of 663,795 km of roads, of which 657,157 km are surfaced (including 10,317 km of expressways). Railways total 14,189 km, and there are 1,045 km of navigable waterways.

Important ports and harbours include Aviles, Barcelona, Bilbao, Cadiz, Cartagena, Castellon de la Plana, Ceuta, Huelva, A Coruna, Malaga, Melilla, Pasajes, Gijon, Santander, Tarragona, Valencia and Vigo, and there are 94 airports in total, all of which have surfaced runways.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge from age six to 18, and compulsory up to the age of 16. Private schools (30 per cent of primary and 60 per cent of secondary schools) have to fulfil certain criteria to receive government maintenance grants. There are 73 universities, the oldest of which, Salamanca, was founded in 1218. Other ancient foundations are Valladolid (1346), Barcelona (1430), Zaragoza (1474), Santiago (1495), Valencia (1500), Seville (1505), Madrid (1508), Granada (1531), and Oviedo (1604). Private universities are Deusto in Bilbao, Navarra in Pamplona, Carlos III in Madrid and one in Salamanca.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1995); secondary 94 per cent (1994); tertiary 51 per cent (1996)

MEDIA

Broadcasting in Spain has expanded in recent years and digital services are becoming increasingly popular. Public radio and TV services are run by RadioTelevisión Espanola (RTVE), which is funded by advertising and state subsidies. Many private radio and TV stations operate alongside, on both a national and regional level. There are four Madrid-based daily newspapers, and another two based in Barcelona. Popular titles include El Mundo, ABC, La Razon and El Periodico de Catalunya.

CULTURE

The literature of Spain is one of the oldest and richest in the world, the Poem of the Cid, the earliest of the heroic songs of Spain, having been written about 1140. The outstanding writings of Spain's 'Golden Age' are those of Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra (1547–1616), Lope Felix de Vega Carpio (1562–1635) and Pedro Calderón de la Barca (1600–81). The Nobel Prize for Literature has been awarded to Spanish authors five times: J. Echegaray (1833–1916), J. Benavente (1866–1954), Juan Ramón Jiménez (1881–1938), Vicente Aleixandre (1898–1984) and Camilo José Cela (1916–2002).

Spain has a long and proud tradition in fine art; important artists include Velazquez (1599–1660), Goya (1746–1828), and Picasso (1881–1973).

ISLANDS AND ENCLAVES

THE BALEARIC ISLES form an archipelago off the east coast of Spain. There are four large islands (Majorca, Minorca, Ibiza and Formentera), and seven smaller (Aire, Aucanada, Bofafoch, Cabrera, Dragonera, Pinto and El Rey). Area 5,011 sq. km; population 841,669. The archipelago forms a province of Spain, the capital is ΨPalma in Majorca, population 432,113

THE CANARY ISLANDS are an archipelago in the Atlantic, off the African coast, consisting of seven islands and six islets. Area 7,270 sq. km; population 1,694,477. The Canary Islands form two provinces of Spain: Las Palmas, comprising Gran Canaria, Lanzarote (38,500), Fuerteventura (19,500) and the islets of Alegranza, Roque del Este, Roque del Oeste, Graciosa, Montaña Clara and Lobos, with the seat of administration at ΨLas Palmas (587,641) in Gran Canaria; and Santa Cruz de Tenerife, comprising Tenerife, La Palma (76,000), Gomera (31,829), and Hierro (10,000), with the seat of administration at ΨSanta Cruz in Tenerife, population estimate 399,104

ISLA DE FAISANES is an uninhabited Franco-Spanish condominium, at the mouth of the Bidassoa in La Higuera bay

ΨCEUTA is a fortified post on the Moroccan coast, opposite Gibraltar. Area 13 sq. km; population 71,505

ΨMELILLA is a town on a rocky promontory of the Rif coast, connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. Population 66,411. Ceuta and Melilla are autonomous regions of Spain

OVERSEAS TERRITORIES

The following territories are Spanish settlements on the Moroccan seaboard.

PEÑÓN DE ALHUCEMAS is a bay including six islands; population 366

PEÑÓN DE LA GOMERA (or Peñón de Velez) is a fortified rocky islet; population 450

THE CHAFFARINAS (or Zaffarines) is a group of three islands near the Algerian frontier; population 610

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Sri Lanka (formerly Ceylon) is an island in the Indian Ocean, off the southern tip of India and separated from it by the narrow Palk Strait. Forests, jungle and scrub cover the greater part of the island. In areas over 600 m above sea level grasslands (patanas or talawas) are found. Elevation extremes range from 2,524 m (Pidurutalagala) at the highest point to 0 m (Indian Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with little seasonal variation in conditions and humidity, which is frequently around 90 per cent. The island experiences the south-west monsoon in May and the north-east monsoon in November. Average annual temperatures in Colombo are 29°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Modern Sri Lanka is a product of its long history of occupation, which began with the arrival of the Sinhalese late in the sixth century BC and continued with the establishment of the Tamils in the 14th century. The Portuguese landed in the early 16th century and founded settlements, before the Dutch East India Company took control of the country, then known as Ceylon, from 1658 until 1796. The maritime provinces of Ceylon were ceded by the Dutch to the British in 1798, becoming a British Crown Colony in 1802. With the annexation of the Kingdom of Kandy in 1815, all Ceylon came under British rule. Ceylon became a self-governing state and a member of the British Commonwealth on 4 February 1948. A republican constitution was adopted in 1972 and the country was renamed Sri Lanka (meaning 'Resplendent Island').

Eight provincial councils were set up in 1988 under the Indo-Sri Lankan peace accord in an attempt to diffuse ethnic tension. Since then, except for the temporarily merged North-East province, all provinces have had elected provincial councils.

In the presidential election held on 21 December 1999, President Kumaratunga was elected for a second term, gaining 51.37 per cent of the vote.

In the general election of 4 April 2004, the United People's Freedom Alliance won 105 seats in the National Assembly, the United National Party won 82 and the Sri Lanka Tamil Government Party secured 22. Mahinda Rajapakse was named as prime minister on 5 April.

INSURGENCIES

The Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) guerrilla group has been fighting Sri Lankan forces for control of the Tamil majority areas in the north and east of the country since 1983. The LTTE was banned in January 1998 following a truck bomb attack against a Buddhist holy shrine. A state of war was imposed by President Kumaratunga on 3 May 2000 after LTTE forces captured the Elephant Pass, the only land link to the Jaffna peninsula.

Between December 2000 and March 2001 the LTTE declared a series of cease-fires, to facilitate peace talks. However, the government refused to reciprocate, and launched a series of attacks on the Jaffna peninsula. Tensions continued and violence broke out between Hindu and Muslim Tamils in June 2002. The ban on the LTTE was lifted ahead of peace talks – the first formal negotiations in seven years – which began in Thailand on 16 September 2002. The talks continued in December, in Norway, during which a power-sharing agreement was reached over a federal system of government with substantial regional autonomy for LTTE-held areas in the north and east of the country. Since April 2003, the peace process has stalled and tensions rose following a car-bomb attack in Colombo.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1978 Constitution introduced a system of proportional representation. Legislative power is vested in the Parliament, whose 225 members are directly elected for a six-year term. Executive power is exercised by the President, elected for a six-year term, and the Cabinet.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 96,695 km of roads, of which 91,860 km are surfaced. The rail network is government run and there are 1,459 km of railway. The principal airport is at Katunayake, north of Colombo.

MEDIA

Many of Sri Lanka's main media outlets are government controlled, including two major TV stations and radio networks operated by the Sri Lanka Broadcasting Corporation (SLBC). There are also privately owned broadcast media and newspapers. As part of the ongoing peace process, in 2002 the government permitted Tamil Tiger rebels to broadcast their Voice of Tigers radio station in the north of the island.

CULTURE

Sri Lanka's classical architecture, sculpture and painting is predominantly Buddhist. One of the highest peaks in the central massif is Adam's Peak (2,243 m), a place of pilgrimage for Buddhists, Hindus and Muslims. Most notable are several enormous Buddha sculptures, particularly at Aukana and Buduruvagala. Anuradhapura and Polonnaruwa have the most impressive archaeological legacy, but Kandy is the most thriving cultural centre today. Acrobatic Sinhalese dancing and masked drama are widespread, and woodcarving, weaving, pottery and metalwork are all highly developed crafts.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Sudan is the largest country in Africa and is dominated by the River Nile and its tributaries. The terrain is generally low-lying with mountains in the east and west of the countries. Elevation extremes range from 3,187 m (Kinyeti) at the highest point to 0 m (Red Sea) at the lowest. The climate ranges from tropical to continental, while most of the northern half of the country is desert. There is a wet season from April to October with average temperatures in Khartoum ranging from 15°C in January to 38°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Present-day Sudan formed part of the Egyptian Empire from 1900 BC. From the eighth century BC onwards, northern Sudan was conquered and occupied by several Arab nations and caliphates. The southern Nubian states however remained independent.

The Anglo-Egyptian condominium over Sudan was established in 1899 and ended when the Sudan House of Representatives, on 19 December 1955, declared Sudan a fully independent sovereign state. A republic was proclaimed on 1 January 1956, and was recognised by Great Britain and Egypt. Sudan was under sporadic military rule from 1958 until presidential and legislative elections were held in March 1996, when President al-Bashir was elected, having faced no serious contender. The founding of political parties was legalised on 1 January 1999. The following December, President al-Bashir suspended the National Assembly and declared a three-month state of emergency, shortly before a vote on constitutional changes, which included the reduction of the powers of the president, was due to be debated. The state of emergency has been repeatedly extended and in December 2001 was extended indefinitely.

Presidential and legislative elections were held in December 2000, but were boycotted by most opposition parties. President al-Bashir was re-elected, winning 86.5 per cent of votes cast, and the National Congress won 355 of the 360 seats up for election. The civil war prevented balloting in three provinces. On 19 August 2002 President Bashir announced a cabinet reshuffle which brought members of opposition groups into the Cabinet for the first time. Legislative elections were scheduled for December 2004.

INSURGENCIES

Nearly 17 years of insurrection in the southern provinces ended in 1972 with the signing of an agreement recognising southern regional autonomy within the Sudanese state. However, insurrection resumed in 1983 and since then there has been civil war in the south of the country between mainly Muslim government forces and the Christian and Animist majority in the area, organised into the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA). A peace process begun in September 2000 continued through 2001 and a cease-fire was agreed in January 2002. However in March 2002 the SPLA warned that its attacks on oil installations would continue. The warfare has left an estimated 1.4 million people dead, including 300,000 who died in the war-induced famine in 1988 and thousands in a similar situation in 1994. Some three million refugees have fled the fighting, either to the north, to neighbouring states, or to the far south near the Ugandan border. The fighting has left large areas of the south desolate and uninhabitable. In July 2002 the government and SPLA signed a framework deal aimed at ending the civil war which agreed that southern Sudan will be able to hold an independence referendum after a six-year power-sharing transition period. Several rounds of peace talks took place in Kenya during 2003.

A separate, ongoing conflict in the western Darfur region during 2004 has forced around one million people to flee to other parts of the country and across the border into Chad. In July 2004, the UN passed a resolution urging the Sudanese government to do more to stop indiscriminate attacks by militias on the civilian population.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

In 1995 Sudan's relations with its neighbours, notably Egypt, Eritrea and Uganda, deteriorated as they considered that Sudan was arming Islamic and insurgent groups in their states. On 2 May 1999 a peace agreement was signed with Eritrea. Sudan and the UK agreed to resume full diplomatic representation in June 1999. On 8 December 1999, Sudan and Uganda signed an agreement under which they agreed to cease supporting rebel groups in each other's countries, to disarm and disband such groups, and to re-establish full diplomatic links. On 24 December, Sudan and Egypt agreed to normalise their relations and seek a solution to their dispute over the Hala'ib region.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture provides employment for around 80 per cent of the labour force and contributes nearly half of GDP. The industry is based on large and medium-sized public sector irrigation projects; mechanised and traditional agriculture is practised in areas with sufficient rainfall. The principal grain crops are dura (great millet) and wheat, the staple food of the population. Sesame and groundnuts are other important crops, which also yield an exportable surplus, and a promising start has been made with castor seed.

Since 1997 Sudan has been implementing IMF economic reforms which, despite the country's chronic instability and vulnerability to drought, have stabilised the economy to a considerable degree. In 1999 Sudan began exporting crude oil, which has since been expanded and contributed 6.1 per cent to GDP growth in 2003.

Current Account – US$960 million deficit (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£70,807,000	£88,774,000
Exports to UK	7,770,000	6,257,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The railway network, adversely affected by the civil war, is about 5,516 km in length. There are 11,610 km of roads, of which 4,203 km are surfaced. Nile River services between Khartoum and Juba have been interrupted by the southern insurrection. Port Sudan is the country's main seaport. Sudan Airways flies services from Khartoum to other parts of Sudan and to other African states, Europe and the Middle East.

EDUCATION

Education is free of charge for most children but not compulsory. Six years of primary education, is followed by three years of secondary education; there are three types of secondary school: general, academic and vocational. The language of instruction is Arabic. English has not been taught in schools since new Arabisation legislation came into effect in 1991.

In addition to 20 universities there are various technical tertiary institutes as well as professional and vocational training establishments.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 30.2 per cent; (f) 53.7 per cent (2000)

MEDIA

Radio and television are controlled by the government, and a permanent military censor ensures that the news reflects official views. There are no privately owned TV broadcasters, and private radio stations are not permitted. Satellite dishes are becoming common in affluent areas and pan-Arab TV stations are popular among viewers, as are foreign radio stations such as the BBC World Service and Paris-based Radio Monte Carlo, which broadcast in Khartoum. There are several privately owned newspapers.

SURINAME

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Elevation extremes range from 1,230 m (Juliana Top) at the highest point to –2 m (unnamed location) at the lowest. Suriname has a tropical climate characterised by high rainfall, high humidity and hot temperatures which are modified by the north-east trade winds. There are two wet seasons from April to August and November to February. Average annual precipitation in Paramaribo is 2,200 mm and average temperatures are an almost constant 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Formerly known as Dutch Guiana, Suriname remained part of the Netherlands West Indies until 25 November 1975, when it achieved complete independence. The civilian government was ousted in 1980 by the military, who appointed a predominantly civilian government in 1982.

The New Front for Democracy, a four-party bloc consisting of the National Party of Suriname (NPS), The Progressive Reform Party, Pertjajah Luhur and the Suriname Labour Party, won 32 of the 51 seats in the elections to the National Assembly on 25 May 2000 and appointed Ronald Venetiaan of the NPS as president on 4 August 2000.

Suriname has a long-running dispute with its neighbour, Guyana, over the ownership of a potentially oil-rich offshore area. A UN tribunal has been set up to try to settle the issue.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The unicameral legislature, the National Assembly, has 51 members, directly elected for a five-year term. The President is elected by a two-thirds majority in the National Assembly, or if the required majority cannot be achieved, by a specially convened United Peoples' Conference, including district and local council representatives, for a five-year term.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The broken mountainous Highveld along the western border, with an average altitude of 1,219 m, is densely forested, mainly with conifers and eucalyptus; the Middleveld, averaging about 609 m, is a mixed farming area; and the Lowveld in the east was mainly scrubland until the introduction of large sugarcane plantations. Four rivers, the Komati, Usutu, Mbuluzi and Ngwavuma, flow from west to east. Elevation extremes range from 1,862 m (Emlembe) at the highest point to 21 m (Great Usutu River) at the lowest.

The climate varies from region to region. The Highveld is humid and temperate, the Middleveld and Lebombo Range are subtropical and the Lowveld is tropical and semi-arid. Average annual temperatures in Mbabane range from 6°C in June to 25°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Kingdom of Swaziland came into being on 25 April 1967 under a self-governing constitution. It became an independent kingdom, headed by HM Sobhuza II, and a member of the Commonwealth on 6 September 1968. King Sobhuza scrapped the constitution in 1973 and banned political parties. He was succeeded by his son, King Mswati III, in 1986.

An illegal general strike was held in November 2000 to support a petition that demanded the legalisation of political parties, the revocation of restrictive labour laws, and the abolition of the right of traditional chiefs to force people to work without pay. The petition had been drawn up by the Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions and a group of illegal political parties. Several trade union and opposition leaders were arrested shortly before the strike took place and during the demonstrations. The findings of a Constitutional Review Commission that was published in August 2001 and which demonstrated that a majority of the population wanted to extend the already wide powers of the King, were opposed by pro-democracy groups. Legislative elections held on 31 October 2003 resulted in the election of Absalom Themba Dlamini as Prime Minister.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The King, assisted by his appointed Cabinet, holds considerable executive, legislative and judicial authority. There is a bicameral legislative body comprising a Senate and a House of Assembly. Each of the 55 administrative districts (Tinkhundla) directly elects one member to the House of Assembly. The King appoints ten members to the House of Assembly, making 65 in all, who then elect ten members of their own number to the Senate. To these are added 20 senators appointed by the King, bringing the full membership of the Senate to 30. In addition, the King appoints Commissions, who assess public opinion. There are also public gatherings, where any citizen can express an opinion. All political parties are banned.

The draft of a new Constitution, which retained the non-party system but increased the protection of human rights, was published on 31 May 2003.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Manufacturing has replaced agriculture as the dominant sector, with timber, textiles and footwear the main products. Agricultural products include sugarcane and fruit. GDP growth rates declined in the 1990s, partly as a result of lower growth rates in South Africa, on which the Swazi economy is strongly dependent. South Africa accounts for around 60 per cent of exports from Swaziland and about 85 per cent of imports.

GNI – US$1,388 million (2001); US$1,300 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 3.5 per cent (1999)

INFLATION RATE – 11.8 per cent (2002)

Imports from UK	£2,841,000	£1,951,000
Exports to UK	34,576,000	32,320,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Swaziland's railway network is 297 km long and connects with the Mozambique port of Maputo and the South African railway to Richards Bay. A rail line to the north-west border provides a link to Komatipoort. There are 3,800 km of roads, of which 1,064 km are surfaced. There is an international airport at Manzini. Royal Swazi National Airways provides scheduled air services to southern and eastern Africa.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

State control of the media is strong: all radio and TV stations, with the exception of a Christian radio station, are under government control, and the country's only private daily newspaper is strictly monitored. Criticism of the monarchy is banned.

Although indigenous religions are not widely practised, traditional Swazi culture remains strong, and important ceremonies, such as the Incwala and Umhlanga have religious overtones.

SWEDEN

Konungariket Sverige – Kingdom of Sweden

AREA – 411,600 sq. km. Neighbours: Norway (west), Finland (east)

POPULATION – 8,833,000 (2001). The state religion is Lutheran Protestant, to which over 95 per cent officially adhere. The language is Swedish; in the north there are both Finnish- and Lapp-speaking communities

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.3 per cent (1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 21 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Sweden's terrain is mostly flat or rolling lowlands, with mountains in the west. Elevation extremes range from 2,111 m (Kebnekaise) at the highest point to 0 m (Baltic Sea) at the lowest. The climate is continental with average temperatures in Stockholm ranging from  $-5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $22^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Sweden takes its name from the Svear people who inhabited the region during the seventh century AD. The Swedes participated in the Viking expansion during the ninth to 11th centuries and established sovereignty over Finland in the 13th century. The Union of Kalmar (1397) brought Sweden and Norway under Danish rule. Northern Sweden regained its independence following a rebellion by noblemen in 1521 which resulted in the election of Gustav I (of the House of Vasa) to the Swedish throne.

Sweden's power reached its zenith in the 17th century under Gustavus II. The Danes were driven out of southern Sweden, the Baltic coast of Russia was seized, and the Swedish army pushed into Germany after vanquishing the Catholic League. Swedish power waned in the late 17th and 18th centuries. Finland was lost to Russia in 1809; Norway was ceded to Sweden under the Congress of Vienna (1814–15) but seceded in 1905.

Sweden remained neutral during both World Wars. Post-war party politics was dominated by Social Democrat-led coalitions which established a mixed economy and a generous welfare state. Right-wing and centrist parties held power from 1976–82 and 1991–4. Sweden applied for EU membership in July 1991 and joined to the EU on 1 January 1995.

After the general election of 15 September 2002 the Swedish Social Democratic Labour Party (SAP) remained the largest party in the legislature with 144 seats. Prime Minister Goran Persson was unable to conclude an agreement on a coalition government, which again led a minority SAP Cabinet. Foreign Minister Anna Lindh was murdered on 10 September 2003 and her replacement, Laila Freivalds, was named on 10 October 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Sweden is a constitutional monarchy, with the monarch retaining purely ceremonial functions as head of state. Under the Act of Succession 1810 the throne is hereditary in the House of Bernadotte. The Constitution is based upon the Instrument of Government 1974, which amended the 1810 Act and removed from the monarch the roles of appointing the Prime Minister and signing parliamentary bills into law. A 1979 amendment vested the succession in the monarch's eldest child irrespective of sex.

Executive power is vested in the Prime Minister and Council of Ministers. There is a unicameral legislature (Riksdag) of 349 members elected by universal suffrage on a proportional representation basis (with a four per cent threshold for representation) for a four-year term. The Council of Ministers (Statsråd) is responsible to the Riksdag. Sweden is divided into 24 counties (län) and 288 municipalities (kommun).

DEFENCE

The Army has 280 main battle tanks, 433 armoured personnel carriers and 1,531 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Navy has seven submarines and 36 patrol and coastal vessels at four bases. The Air Force has 207 combat aircraft.

Sweden has a policy of non-alignment in peace and neutrality in war and has declined to become a member of NATO. It maintains a 'total defence' which includes peacetime organisations for civil, economic and psychological defence.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.7 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 27,600: Army 13,800, Navy

7,900, Air Force 5,900; Paramilitaries 600

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – Seven to 15 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Less than ten per cent of the land area is farmland and less than three per cent of the labour force is employed in farming, although Sweden is more than 80 per cent self-sufficient in food.

Industrial prosperity is based on natural resources: forests, mineral deposits and water power. The forests cover about half the total land surface and sustain the timber, finished wood products, pulp and paper milling industries. The mineral resources include iron ore, lead, zinc, sulphur, granite, marble, precious and heavy metals (the latter not exploited) and extensive deposits of low-grade uranium ore. Industries based on mining are important but it is the general engineering industry that provides 80 per cent of Sweden's exports, especially specialised machinery and systems, motor vehicles, aircraft, electrical and electronic equipment, pharmaceuticals, plastics and chemical industries.

Hydroelectricity supplies 15 per cent of energy needs. Sweden has no significant indigenous resources of conventional hydrocarbon fuels and relies for 50 per cent of its energy needs upon imported oil and coal.

Sweden experienced a deep recession between 1992 and 1994. The centre-right government, elected in 1991, introduced austerity measures and free-market economic reforms. In October 1997 Sweden decided not to join European economic and monetary union (EMU) at the first stage; a referendum on EMU membership was held on 14 September 2003, but was rejected by a clear majority.

About 45 per cent of industrial output is exported, mainly in the form of cars, trucks, machinery, and electrical and communications equipment. Sweden conducts 70 per cent of its trade with EFTA and the rest of the EU.

GNI – US$225,900 million (2001); US$25,400 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.6 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 1 per cent (2000)

Exports to UK	4,102,900,000	3,316,388,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The total length of the railway network is 12,821 km. There are approximately 210,000 km of roads, of which 166,500 km are surfaced (including 1,499 km of expressways). There are also 2,052 km of waterways, navigable to small steamers and barges. Ports and harbours include Gävle, Gothenburg, Halmstad, Helsingborg, Hudiksvall, Kalmar, Karlshamn, Luleå, Malmö, Solvesborg, Stockholm and Sundsvall. Regular domestic air traffic is maintained by the Scandinavian Airlines System and by Malmö Aviation. Regular European and intercontinental air traffic is maintained by the Scandinavian Airlines System. The Øresund Bridge connects Sweden to Denmark.

EDUCATION

The state education system provides nine years' free and compulsory schooling from the age of seven to 16 in the comprehensive elementary schools. Around 95 per cent continue into further education of two to four years' duration in the upper secondary schools and a unified higher education system administered in six regional areas containing one of the universities: Uppsala (founded 1477); Lund (1668); Stockholm (1878); Gothenburg (1887); Umeå (1963) and Linköping (1967). There are 40 institutions of higher education including three technical universities in Stockholm, Gothenburg and Luleå.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1996); secondary 99 per cent (1996); tertiary 50 per cent (1996)

MEDIA

Public television is run by Sveriges Television (SVT). There are a number of commercial stations and around 66 per cent of households have cable or satellite television. Commercial radio began in 1993, and some of the main stations now have near-national networks, in competition with public broadcaster Sveriges Radio. The country is among the top consumers of newspapers in the world, and the government provides subsidies to newspapers regardless of their political affiliation. There are four Stockholm-based daily newspapers and one based in Gothenburg. Titles include Aftonbladet, Expressen and Gotenborgs Posten.

CULTURE

Swedish belongs, with Danish and Norwegian, to the North Germanic language group. Swedish literature dates back to King Magnus Eriksson, who codified the old Swedish provincial laws in 1350. With his translation of the Bible, Olaus Petri (1493–1552) formed the basis for the modern Swedish language. Literature flourished during the reign of Gustavus III, who founded the Swedish Academy in 1786.

Notable Swedish writers include Almquist (1795–1866), Strindberg (1849–1912) and Lagerlöf (1858–1940), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1909. Contemporary authors include Lagerquist (1891–1974), Nobel Laureate in 1951, Martinson (1904–78) and Johnson (1900–76), joint winners of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1974. The Swedish scientist Alfred Nobel (1833–96) founded the Nobel Prizes for Literature, Science and Peace.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Switzerland is the most mountainous country in Europe. The Alps, ranging in height from 1,700 m to 4,634 m, occupy its southern and eastern frontiers and form the chief part of its interior. The highest peaks include Finsteraarhorn (4,274 m), Aletschhorn (4,195 m) and Jungfrau (4,158 m). The climate is temperate with conditions that vary with altitude. Average temperatures in Zurich range from  $-3^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $24^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Swiss confederation was formed as an alliance of three cantons in 1291 and achieved full independence under the Peace of Westphalia (1648), having been a province of the Holy Roman Empire since 1033. French revolutionary forces seized Switzerland in 1789 and named it the Helvetic Republic. Independence was not restored until the Congress of Vienna (1815), which also joined Geneva, Neuchatel and Valais to the confederation and instituted perpetual neutrality in foreign affairs. In 1847 a war broke out between the Protestant and Roman Catholic cantons, the latter being defeated. A new constitution was adopted in 1848 which enhanced the powers of the central government.

Proportional representation was introduced in 1919 and ensured coalition governments throughout the 20th century. Women were given the vote in 1971.

On 19 October 2003 the conservative Swiss People's Party (SPP) became the largest overall party in the National Council with 55 seats. Since 1959 the confederation has been governed by a coalition of four parties that include the SPP, the Social Democratic Party, the Christian Democratic People's Party and the Radical Democratic Party. Joseph Deiss was elected president on 10 December 2003.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

The Federal Council voted in 1992 to apply for European Community membership. The European Economic Area (EEA) Treaty, which extends the provisions of the EC single internal market to EFTA states, was rejected in a national referendum on 6 December 1992. Switzerland is consequently the only EFTA state outside the EEA. On 21 May 2000, a referendum on seven bilateral agreements with the EU, which would progressively reduce trade barriers and allow the free movement of people between Switzerland and the EU, was passed, with 67.2 per cent of voters in favour. The Swiss administration has continued a policy of long term integration into the EU, but the country has consistently declined EU membership. The latest referendum was voted down in 2001.

Following a referendum held on 3 March 2002 Switzerland formally became a full member of the UN on 10 September 2002.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The federal government consists of the Federal Assembly of two chambers, a National Council (Nationalrat) of 200 members, and a States Council (Ständerat) of 46 members

(two from each canton and one from each demi-canton). Members of the National Council are elected for four years, elections taking place in October. The executive power is in the hands of a Federal Council (Bundesrat) of seven members, elected for four years by the Federal Assembly and presided over by the President of the Confederation. Each year the Federal Assembly elects from the Federal Council the President and the Vice-President. Not more than one person from the same canton may be elected a member of the Federal Council; however, there is a tradition that Italian- and French-speaking areas should between them be represented on the Federal Council by at least two members.

Uniquely, important policy decisions often rest on the results of national referenda. A referendum can be initiated by any citizen able to muster 100,000 voters' signatures in support of holding one on a given issue.

CONFEDERAL STRUCTURE

There are 23 cantons, three of which are subdivided, making 26 in all. Each canton has its own government. The main language in 19 of the cantons is German; in the others it is French (*) or Italian (†).

(Population 2001 census): Aargau (549,500), Appenzell-Ausserrhoden (53,200), Appenzell-Innerrhoden (15,100), Basel-Country (262,300), Basel-Town (187,600), Bern (946,100), *Fribourg (239,200), *Geneva (413,800), Glarus (38,500), Graubünden/Grischun (187,500), *Jura (68,900), Lucerne (349,600), *Neuchatel (166,600), Nidwalden (38,400), Obwalden (32,700), St Gallen (452,200), Schaffhausen (73,200), Schwyz (133,000), Solothurn (245,100), Thurgau (227,700), †Ticino (312,200), Uri (35,000), *Valais (277,600), *Vaud (625,000), Zug (101,000), Zurich (1,227,900)

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Switzerland has a prosperous and stable modern market economy with low unemployment and a highly skilled labour force. Agriculture is followed chiefly in the valleys and the central plateau, where cereals, flax, hemp, wine and tobacco are produced, and fruits and vegetables are grown. Dairy farming and stock-raising are the principal industries; there are 293,949 hectares of open arable land, 115,933 hectares of cultivated grassland and 626,799 hectares of natural grassland and pasture. The forests cover about 30 per cent of the whole surface. The chief manufacturing industries comprise engineering and electrical engineering, metalworking, chemicals and pharmaceuticals, textiles, watchmaking, woodworking, foodstuffs and footwear. Banking, insurance and tourism are also major industries.

The principal imports are machinery, chemicals, vehicles, metals, textiles, precision instruments, watches and jewellery. The principal exports are machinery, chemicals, precision instruments, watches and jewellery, and metals.

GNI – US$277,200 million (2001); US$38,330 per capita (2001)

Exports to UK	4,935,485,000	3,924,072,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 71,086 km of roads, all of which are surfaced, including 1,613 km of national highways; a further 200 km of motorway construction is expected to be completed by 2010. Railway track comprises 4,511 km, almost all of which is electrified. The Rhine carries heavy shipping traffic on the Basel-Rheinfelden and Schaffhausen-Bodensee stretches, and there are 12 navigable lakes.

EDUCATION

Education is controlled by cantonal and communal authorities and is free and compulsory from age seven to 16. Special schools make a feature of commercial and technical instruction. Universities are Basel (founded 1460), Bern (1834), Fribourg (1889), Geneva (1873), Lausanne (1890), Zurich (1832), and Neuchatel (1909), the technical universities of Lausanne and Zurich and the economics university of St Gall.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 97 per cent (1997); secondary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 33 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Switzerland's broadcasting market is dominated by the public-service Swiss Broadcasting Corporation (SRG/SSR) which operates seven TV networks and 18 radio stations, mainly funded through licence fees. There are regional private radio and TV stations operate at a regional level, and television stations from France, Germany and Italy are widely available through multi-channel cable and satellite television. The country's press operates mainly along regional lines which reflects linguistic divisions: there are two German-language dailies based in Zurich, two French-language dailies in Geneva, and an Italian-language daily in Lugano.

CULTURE

Important cultural figures include the writer and philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–78), the psychoanalyst Carl Gustav Jung (1875–1961), the poet Carl Spitteler (1845–1924) who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1919, and the writer and founder of modern structural linguistics Ferdinand de Saussure (1857–1913).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Syria has a Mediterranean climate on the coast characterised by hot dry summers and mild wet winters. The mountainous regions have moderate summers, although the interior plateaux have very hot summers and cold winters while the Hamad region has a desert climate. Average temperatures in Damascus range from 0°C in January to 37°C in August.

Important rivers include the Orontes, which flows northwards from the Lebanon range across the northern boundary to Antakya (Antioch, Turkey) and the Euphrates, which crosses the northern boundary near Jerablus and flows through north-eastern Syria to the boundary of Iraq. The terrain is primarily semi-arid and desert plateau, with a narrow coastal plain and mountains in the west. Elevation extremes range from 2,814 m (Mount Hermon) at the highest point to –200 m (Lake Tiberias) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Once part of the Ottoman Empire, Syria came under French mandate after the First World War, before becoming an independent republic during the Second World War. The first independently elected parliament met in August 1943, but foreign troops were in occupation until April 1946. Syria remained an independent republic until 1958 when, along with Egypt, it became part of the United Arab Republic, from which seceded September 1961. In 1967 Syria lost the Golan Heights region to Israel.

Elections to the 250-seat People's Council in November 1998 resulted in the National Progressive Front retaining all of its 167 seats unchallenged. This seven-party bloc is dominated by the Ba'ath Party, its allies being the Arab Socialist Union, Socialist Unionist Party, Arab Socialist Movement, Syrian Communist Party and Socialist Unionist Democratic Party.

President Hafez al-Assad, who had seized power in a military coup in 1970 and been elected president in 1971 and re-elected in 1978, 1985, 1992 and 1999, died on 10 June 2000. On 18 June, his son, Bashar al-Assad, was unanimously elected as leader by the Ba'ath Party, and on 10 July he was elected president, gaining 97.29 per cent of the votes cast. Legislative elections took place on 5 March 2003, in which the Ba'ath Party and its allies retained its 167 seats and Independents won 83 seats.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution promulgated in 1973 declares that Syria is a democratic, popular socialist state, and that the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Ba'ath) Party, which has been the ruling party since 1963, is the leading party in the state and society. The President is head of state and is elected by parliament for a seven-year term. The legislature, the Majlis al-Chaab (People's Council) has 250 members directly elected for a four-year term. The only candidates permitted for elections are from parties allied with the Ba'ath Party or Independents.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Syria is steadily developing its industrialisation programme which includes leather goods, wool and silk, textiles, vegetable oil, soap, sugar, plastics and metal utensils. Oil production is proceeding in the region of Deir ez Zor and a pipeline has been built to the Mediterranean port of Baniyas, via Hims. Two oil refineries are in production at Hims and Baniyas. Oil production in 2002 was 28,600,000 tonnes. Syria also has gas reserves, deposits of phosphate and rock salt, and produces asphalt.

The principal imports are manufactures, metals and metal goods, machinery, foodstuffs and transport equipment. Principal exports include oil and oil derivatives, agricultural products (chiefly fruit and vegetables, cotton and wheat) and textiles.

GNI – US$17,300 million (2001); US$1,040 per capita

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

A railway track has been opened connecting Hims with Damascus and a track links Hims, Hamah, Halab, Deir ez Zor and Qamishliye to the Iraqi frontier. There are 2,743 km of railways. The country also has 43,381 km of roads, 10,021 km of which are surfaced. All the principal towns are connected by roads which vary from modern dual carriageways to narrow country lanes. An internal air service operates between all major towns, and the main international airport is at Damascus.

EDUCATION

Education is under state control. Elementary education is free at state schools and is compulsory from the age of seven. Secondary education is not compulsory and is free only at the state schools. There are universities at Damascus, Halab, Tishrin, Al-Ladhiqiyah and the Ba'ath University at Hims.

MEDIA

In spite of a brief period of press freedom when Bashar al-Assad became president in 2000 and instigated the first licensing of private publications in almost 40 years, most of Syria's print and broadcast media are owned by the government and the Ba'ath Party. There are three state-run television networks, but satellite receivers are permitted and many viewers consequently have access to foreign television broadcasts. Conditions were set out in 2002 for the licensing of private and commercial radio stations.

CULTURE

The region is rich in historical remains. Damascus is said to be the oldest continuously inhabited city in the world, having existed as a city for over 4,000 years. It contains the Omayyed Mosque and the Tomb of Saladin, while to the north-east is the Roman outpost of Dmeir and further east is Palmyra. On the Mediterranean coast at Amrit are ruins of the Phoenician town of Marath, and of Crusaders' fortresses at Markab, Sahyoun, and Krak des Chevaliers. One of the oldest alphabets in the world has been discovered at Ugarit (Ras Shamra), a Phoenician village near Al-Lathqiyah. Hittite cities dating from 2000 to 1500 BC, have been explored on the west bank of the Euphrates at Jerablus and Kadesh.

TAIWAN

Chung-hua Min-kuo – Republic of China

AREA – 36,175 sq. km

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

An island in the China Sea, Taiwan, formerly Formosa, lies 90 miles east of the Chinese mainland. The eastern part of the main island is mountainous and forested. Mt Morrison (Yu Shan) and Mt Sylvia (Tz'ukaoshan) are the highest peaks, and elevation extremes range from 3,952 m (Yu Shan) at the highest point to 0 m (South China Sea) at the lowest.

Territories include the Pescadores Islands (80.47 sq. km), some 56 km west of Taiwan, as well as Kinmen (Quemoy) (109 sq. km) and Matsu (7 sq. km) which are only a few kilometres from mainland China. The climate is tropical, influenced by the monsoons. Typhoons from the South China Sea bring heavy rains between July and September and average temperatures in Taipei range from 12°C in January to 34°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Settled for centuries by the Chinese, the island was ceded by China to Japan in 1895 and remained part of the Japanese empire until Japan's defeat in the Second World War. Nationalist Kuomintang (KMT) leader Gen. Chiang Kai-shek withdrew to Taiwan in 1949, towards the end of the war against the Communist regime in mainland China, after which the territory remained under his presidency until his death in 1975. He was succeeded as president by his son Gen. Chiang Ching-kuo who ruled until his death in 1988, when Vice-President Lee Teng-hui was appointed president. Martial law was lifted in 1987 after 38 years.

In 1991, President Lee announced that the 'period of Communist rebellion' on the Chinese mainland was over, recognising de facto the People's Republic of China. The announcement also ended emergency measures which had frozen political life on Taiwan since 1949. In 1991–2 power shifted away from mainlanders to native Taiwanese with the forcible retirement of the 'Senior Parliamentarians' who had retained their seats since being elected on the mainland in 1948. The new parliament, the Legislative Yuan, gained control of the budget, of law-making and of the appointment of the prime minister.

President Chen Shui-bian of the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP), in office since May 2000, was re-elected on 20 March 2004 with 51.1 per cent of the vote. In the general election to the Legislative Yuan on 1 December 2001, the DPP won 87 of the 225 seats; the KMT won 68 seats; the People First Party won 46 seats; the Taiwan Solidarity Union won 13 seats; independents and minor parties won 11 seats. President Chen Shui-bian named Yu Shyi Kun as prime minister and he took office on 1 February 2002. Efforts to create a coalition government were rebuffed by the KMT and the Executive Yuan comprises members of the DPP and independents.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Legally, most nations acknowledge the position of the Chinese government that Taiwan is a province of the People's Republic of China, and as a result Taiwan has formal diplomatic relations with only 26 countries and no seat at the UN.

Direct tourism, trade and communications links between mainland China and the Taiwanese islands of Kinmen and Matsu were inaugurated on 2 January 2001, the first direct links between Taiwan and China since 1949.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The legislature is bicameral. The Legislative Yuan has 225 members, 176 elected and 49 appointed proportionately by party, and serves a three-year term. Constitutional reforms passed by the Legislative Yuan in 1994 provide for the President and Vice-President to be directly elected for four-year terms (previously the president was elected by parliament). The National Assembly, which had previously been an elected upper chamber, voted on 24 April 2000 to transform itself into a largely ceremonial body, to be convened when necessary to consider constitutional amendments, the impeachment of a President, or territorial changes. Members are appointed proportionally by the parties in the Legislative Yuan.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Taiwan has transformed itself from a mainly agricultural country to a highly developed industrial economy. The industrial base has expanded to include steel, shipbuilding, chemicals, cement, machinery, electrical equipment and textiles, and the island is now one of the world's top producers of computer technology. In 2002 agriculture contributed 2 per cent of GDP, industry 31 per cent and services 67 per cent.

The soil is very fertile, producing sugar, rice, sweet potatoes, tea, fruit and tobacco. Livestock provided a third of the value of Taiwan's agricultural produce in 1996. Taiwan produces one-tenth of its coal needs and some natural gas.

The principal exports are electronic goods, machinery, metal goods, textiles, plastic products, and toys and games. The main imports are oil, chemicals, machinery and natural resources. The main trading partners are China, the USA, Japan, Hong Kong, Germany, and the Republic of Korea.

GNI – US$14,188 million per capita (2001)

IMPORTS – US$112,758 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$130,457 million (2002)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Taiwan has 1,108 km of railways and a total road network of 35,931 km, 31,583 km of which is surfaced (including 608 km of expressways). Major ports and harbours include Keelung, Hua-lien, Kaohsiung, Su-ao and Taichung, and there are international airports at Taoyuan (near Taipei) and Kaohsiung. There are internal flights between all the major cities.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The media is among the most liberal in Asia. There are some 350 newspapers, all privately owned and reflecting a wide range of views. There are two main Chinese-language dailies, and three published in English.

Traditional Taiwanese culture, based on Buddhism, is very similar to that of China. There is a large number of ornate Buddhist temples and statues, most famously in Tainan on the south-west coast, and religious parades and festivals are common. Chinese opera is an integral part of the culture.

TAJIKISTAN

Ҷумҳурии Тоҷикистон – Republic of Tajikistan

AREA – 143,100 sq. km. Neighbours: Uzbekistan (north-west), Kyrgyzstan (north-east), China (east), Afghanistan (south)

POPULATION – 6,578,681 (2001 estimate): 62 per cent Tajik, 23 per cent Uzbek and 8 per cent Russian, with smaller numbers of Tatars, Kyrgyz, Germans and Ukrainians. The people are predominantly Sunni Muslim. The main languages are Tajik, Uzbek and Russian. Tajik is close to the Farsi spoken in Iran

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The country is mountainous with the Pamir highlands in the east and the high ridges of the Pamir-Altai system in the centre. Plains are formed by wide stretches of the Syr-Darya valley in the north and of the Amu-Darya in the south. Elevation extremes range from 7,495 m (Pik Imeni Ismail Samani) at the highest point to 300 m (Syrdariya) at the lowest. The climate is continental with average temperatures ranging from  $-4^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $18^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July.

The republic includes the Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Province and the Kulyab, Kurgan-Tyubinsk and Khujand Provinces.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area that is now Tajikistan was conquered by Alexander the Great in the fourth century BC and remained under Greek and Greco-Persian rule for 200 years, until the Kingdom of Kusha was established, based on Bacharia (Bukhara). Tajikistan was invaded by both the Arabs and the Samanid Persians between the seventh and ninth centuries AD. The cities of Bukhara and Samarkand were two of the most important cultural and educational centres in the Islamic world. The Tajiks lived under the control of various feudal emirates until the area was subsumed within the Russian Empire in 1868. At the time of the Russian revolution in 1917 the central Asian emirates attempted to re-establish their independence. Soviet power was re-established in northern Tajikistan by 1 April 1918, when the Turkestan Soviet Socialist Republic was formed, and the Bukhara emirate was overthrown by Soviet forces in 1920. In 1924 the Tajikistan Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic was formed as part of the Uzbek Republic, before Tajikistan was given full republican status within the Soviet Union in 1929.

Tajikistan declared independence from the Soviet Union on 9 September 1991. The Islamic-Democratic Alliance formed a government in September 1992 but civil war broke out as forces loyal to the former Communist regime rebelled against the new government. By early November, pro-Communist forces controlled virtually all of the country and the Supreme Soviet installed Emomalay Rakhmonov as its Speaker and head of state.

A cease-fire in October 1994 allowed presidential and parliamentary elections to be held, which were won by Rakhmonov and the ruling (former Communist) People's Democratic Party of Tajikistan (HDKT), although the elections were boycotted by most opposition groups. Fighting restarted in early 1995. A peace agreement was signed in December 1996 which provided for the formation of a National Reconciliation Commission (NRC), a general amnesty and an exchange of prisoners. The agreement has held, although there have been sporadic outbreaks of violence since it was signed.

Presidential elections which took place on 6 November 1999 resulted in a landslide victory for the incumbent President Rakhmonov, who gained over 96 per cent of the vote in a poll which the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe had refused to monitor due to restrictions imposed on candidates and political parties. Akil Akilov was named as prime minister on 20 December. Following an election to the Assembly of Representatives in February and March 2000, the HDKT won 30 of the 63 seats, the Communist Party won 13 seats, the Islamic Renaissance Party won 2 and independent candidates won 15, with three seats remaining vacant.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under new constitutional arrangements agreed in late 1999, the President serves a single seven-year term. However, amendments made in early 2003 permit the current incumbent to stand for two further terms after his current term finishes in 2006. The bicameral legislature consists of a 63-seat Majlisi Mamoyandogan (Assembly of Representatives), which is directly elected and serves a five-year term, and the Majlisi Milli (National Assembly), which has 33 members, 25 of which are elected for a five-year term by five regional assemblies and eight are appointed by the President. Administratively Tajikistan is divided into two regions and one autonomous region.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In spite of steady progress since the end of the civil war, Tajikistan's economy is fragile. A debt restructuring agreement was reached with Russia in December 2002, and the country has received more than $60 million in aid from the USA. Although only around five per cent of the land is arable, agriculture is the major sector of the economy, concentrating on cotton-growing and cattle-breeding. Tajikistan also has rich mineral deposits of mercury, lead, zinc, oil, gold and uranium. Industry specialises in the production of clothing and textiles.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The country has 482 km of railways, and a total of 27,767 km of roads. However, many roads, including the main highway from Dushanbe to Khujand, are only open in the summer months.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Broadcasting is dominated by state-run radio and television, alongside more than 30 local and regional private television stations and a few private radio stations. Tajikistan also has more than 200 registered newspapers, some government owned and others linked to political parties and movements.

Tajikistan has an ancient heritage and figures from its Persian past are still venerated. Cultural figures include the philosopher Abu Ali ibn Sina (980–1037) and Firdausi (c. 934–1032), a poet and composer of the Shah-nameh (Book of Kings).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Tanzania comprises the former Tanganyika, on the mainland of east Africa, and the island of Zanzibar. The greater part of the country is occupied by the central African plateau from which rise, among others, Mount Kilimanjaro (5,894 m), the highest point on the continent of Africa, and Mount Meru (4,564 m). The Serengeti National Park covers an area of 9,656 sq. km in the Arusha, Mwanza and Mara Regions. The climate is tropical equatorial, modified by altitude. The north has two distinct wet seasons with the longest from March to May and the shortest from November to December while the rest of the country has one wet season from November to May. The average temperature in Dar es Salaam is 29°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Tanganyika became an independent state and a member of the British Commonwealth on 9 December 1961, and a republic within the Commonwealth on 9 December 1962. Zanzibar, comprising the islands of Zanzibar, Pemba and Mafia, was formerly ruled by the Sultan of Zanzibar and was a British Protectorate until 10 December 1963 when it became an independent state within the Commonwealth. On 26 April 1964 Tanganyika united with Zanzibar to form the United Republic of Tanzania.

The sole legal political party from 1977 to 1992 was the Chama Cha Mapinduzi, the Revolutionary Party of Tanzania (CCM). The constitution was amended in 1992 to allow multiparty politics, with the stipulation that all parties must be active in both the mainland and in Zanzibar and that parties must not be formed on regional, religious, tribal or racial grounds.

The first multiparty presidential and parliamentary elections were held in October and November 1995 and were won by the CCM.

Presidential and general elections were last held on 29 October 2000. President Mkapa was re-elected, winning 71.7 per cent of the vote, and the CCM won an overwhelming majority in the National Assembly.

The November 2000 presidential and legislative elections in Zanzibar, saw Amani Abeid Karume, the CCM candidate, elected as president and the CCM win a majority in the National Assembly. However, the results of the legislative elections were annulled in 16 of the 50 constituencies by the National Electoral Commission because of irregularities. A re-run was held in the 16 constituencies on 5 November, and all 16 seats were won by the CCM.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is directly elected and may serve two five-year terms. The National Assembly contains up to 296 members, of whom 280 are directly elected, five are chosen by the Zanzibar House of Representatives, up to ten members are appointed by the President and one seat is reserved for the Attorney-General. Constituency members are elected at a general election held at a maximum of five-yearly intervals. The Assembly enacts laws that apply to the entire United Republic of Tanzania, and those that apply only to the mainland; laws that apply specifically to Zanzibar are enacted by the island's own President, Government and 50-member House of Representatives. The President of Zanzibar is also a member of the National Assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Progress is being made in updating Tanzania's economic infrastructure in conjunction with the World Bank and International Monetary Fund; there has been a substantial increase in output of minerals (chiefly gold), and banking reforms have helped increase private sector growth and investment.

The islands of Zanzibar and Pemba produce a large part of the world's supply of cloves and clove oil; coconuts, coconut oil and copra are also produced. Tanzania's chief exports are coffee, cotton and cashew nuts. The chief imports are capital equipment, oil and oil derivatives, and consumer goods. Industry, which accounts for 16 per cent of GDP, is largely concerned with the processing of raw material for export or local consumption.

GNI – US$9,400 million (2001); US$270 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 3.8 per cent (1998)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Tanzania has a total of 88,200 km of roads, only 3,704 km of which are surfaced. The main ports are Dar es Salaam, Tanga, Mtwara, Zanzibar, Mkoani and Wete, in addition to Mwanza, Musoma and Bukoba on Lake Victoria and Kigoma on Lake Tanganyika. Coastal shipping services connect the mainland to Zanzibar, and lake services are operated on Lake Tanganyika and Lake Malawi with neighbouring countries. The principal international airports are Dar es Salaam, Kilimanjaro and Zanzibar, and two airlines – Air Tanzania and Precision Air – operate domestic flights. There are two railway systems; one connecting Dar es Salaam to Zambia, and the second having two main lines running from Dar es Salaam, one to northern Tanzania and Kenya and the other to Lakes Tanganyika and Victoria.

EDUCATION

The school system is administered in Swahili but the government is making efforts to improve English standards for the purposes of secondary and higher education. There are three institutes of higher education.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 15.3 per cent; (f) 32.9 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 67 per cent (1997); tertiary 1 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are many state-owned and private newspapers available in Tanzania and popular titles include Daily News, The Express and Uhuru. Radio is prevalent in urban areas and channels include Radio Free Africa and Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam. State television was officially launched in 2001, several years after the first private television station opened in 1994, but does not yet have national coverage. Zanzibar has a different, less liberal, media policy and there are no private broadcasters or newspapers on the island, although locals can access mainland media.

Culturally, Tanzanian music and dance dominates much of East Africa and there is a thriving dance-band scene while Zanzibar is at the heart of the distinctive taraab, or sung poetry, tradition. Penina Muhando (b. 1948) is one of Tanzania's most prominent writers.

THAILAND

Prathes Thai – Kingdom of Thailand

AREA – 510,900 sq. km. Neighbours: Malaysia (south), Myanmar (west), Laos and Cambodia (east)

POPULATION – 63,584,000 (2001). The principal language is Thai, a monosyllabic, tonal language of the Indo-Chinese linguistic family, with a vocabulary strongly influenced by Sanskrit and Pali. It is written in an alphabetic script derived from ancient Indian scripts. Significant minorities speak Chinese (in urban areas), Lao (in the north-east), Khmer (in the east) and Malay (in the far south). The principal religion is Buddhism (94.37 per cent), with Muslim and Christian minorities

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Thailand, formerly known as Siam, is divided geographically into four regions: the centre is a plain; to the north-east there is a plateau area and to the north-west mountains. The south of Thailand consists of a narrow mountainous peninsula. The principal rivers are the Chao Phraya in the central plains, and the Mekong on the northern and north-eastern borders. Extremes of elevation range from 2,576 m (Doi Inthanon) at the highest point to 0 m (Gulf of Thailand) at the lowest. The climate is tropical and average temperatures in Bangkok range from 20°C in January to 35°C in July.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Thai nation was founded in the 13th century and although it was occupied by Burma in the 18th century, Thailand remained the only country in the region not to have been colonised by a European power.

Following a revolution in 1932, Thailand became a constitutional monarchy. After a military coup in February 1991, a new constitution was approved under which the military would have significant political power. Parties aligned with the military won the general election in March 1992, but mass demonstrations held in Bangkok, with the help of the King, forced the government from power. Military power was curbed, the 1978 constitution was restored and the interim government sacked military chiefs.

Parliamentary elections in September 1992 resulted in a majority for those parties not allied with the military. The first election to the Senate was held on 4 March 2000. A re-run was held in 78 seats on 29 April following evidence of fraud. Further re-runs were necessary for some seats.

A general election took place on 6 January 2001. The Thai Rak Thai (TRT) party won 248 seats, and its leader – Thaksin Shinawatra – became president. The TRT formed a coalition government with the Chart Thai party and the New Aspiration party.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Laos occupied two Thai islands in the Mekong river on 19 August 2000 and evicted the inhabitants, claiming that it had jurisdiction over all the islands in the Mekong under a 1926 treaty.

In January 2003 serious diplomatic unrest with Cambodia followed accusations by a Thai actress that Cambodia's Angkor Wat temple complex was stolen from Thailand. The Thai embassy was attacked by angry crowds and more than 500 Thai nationals were evacuated using military planes.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The Constitution provides for a National Assembly consisting of a 200-member Senate, directly elected on a non-party basis for a six-year term, and a 500-member House of Representatives elected by universal adult suffrage, 400 elected in single-member constituencies and 100 from party lists, for a term of four years.

The Army has 333 main battle tanks, 946 armoured personnel carriers and three attack helicopters. The Navy has one aircraft carrier, 12 frigates, 115 patrol and coastal vessels, 44 combat aircraft and eight armed helicopters at five bases. The Air Force has 194 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.5 per cent of GDP (2002)
MILITARY PERSONNEL – 314,200: Army 190,000, Navy 79,200, Air Force 45,000; Paramilitaries 113,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Thailand was one of the countries worst affected by the economic crisis in south-east Asia in 1997. The stock market fell to an eight-year low and the currency was devalued by 20 per cent, triggering a currency crisis throughout south-east Asia. An IMF loan of US$16.7 billion was announced in return for emergency financial reforms, but the economy continued to contract for another couple of years. However, following a change in government and implementation of remedial measures, the country recovered; it was one of East Asia's best performers in 2002, and GDP grew to 6.3 per cent in 2003.

The agricultural sector employs around half of the labour force. Rice remains the most important crop; other main crops are sugar, maize, sorghum, cassava, rubber, tobacco, kenaf and jute. In recent years fishing and livestock production have gained importance. There are reserves of oil, natural gas and lignite; mineral resources include tin, tungsten, lead and iron.

Important industrial sectors include textiles, transportation vehicles and equipment, construction materials, brewing, petroleum refining, electrical appliances, plastics, computers and parts, and integrated circuits. In 2002, industry contributed 42 per cent of GDP. Since 1982 tourism has been the main foreign exchange earner. In 1998, there were 7.8 million foreign visitors.

Thailand's main exports are computers and parts, cars, integrated circuit boards, precious stones, rice, maize, canned seafood, fabrics, sugar and tin. Main imports are crude oil, chemicals, electrical goods, industrial machinery, iron, steel and transport equipment.

GNI – US$118,500 million (2001); US$1,940 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.4 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 1.5 per cent (2000)

UNEMPLOYMENT – 2.4 per cent (2000)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$79,675 million (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$20,265 million (1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$64,720 million (2002)

EXPORTS – US$68,853 million (2002)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$9,775 million surplus (2002)

Current Account – US$7,650 million surplus (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£532,348,000	£572,692,000
Exports to UK	1,608,303,000	1,687,385,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Thailand has a total of 64,600 km of roads, almost all of which are surfaced, and around 4,071 km of railways. Bangkok is the international airport, though airports at Chiang Mai, Phuket and Hat Yai also receive international flights. There are two important ports in the country, Bangkok and Sattahip, and 3,999 km of principal waterways, some 3,701 km of which are navigable.

EDUCATION

Primary education is compulsory and free, and secondary education in government schools is free. Private universities and colleges are playing an increasing role in higher education. There are 62 higher institutes of learning.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 2.8 per cent; (f) 6.1 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 22 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The government and military control nearly all the national terrestrial television networks and operate many of the country's radio networks. However, media reforms are currently in progress, aimed at reducing military interest and opening up more opportunities to the private sector. The radio market, particularly in Bangkok, is already fiercely competitive, with more than 60 stations in and around the capital. Newspapers are largely privately-run, with popular titles including Bangkok Post and Thairata.

CULTURE

Thailand's countryside is rich with Buddhist temples and archaeological remains. Most notable is Ayuthaya, 85 km north of Bangkok, the capital of the Siamese dynasties from 1350, whose scattered temples and ruins have been declared a World Heritage Site. Nakhon Pathom is the country's oldest city, and is home to the sixth century Phra Pathom Chedi, which at 127 m high is the tallest Buddhist monument in the world.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Togo's climate is tropical with two wet seasons (March to July and September to November). The average temperature in Lomé is 27°C all year round. From hills in the centre of the country, the terrain flattens out to savannah in the north and a plateau leading to a marshy coastal plain in the south. Elevation extremes range from 986 m (Mount Agou) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first president of Togo, Sylvanus Olympio, was assassinated in 1963. In 1967, there was an army coup d'état and the army commander Lt.-Col. (later Gen.) Eyadéma named himself president. In April 1990, following increasing popular pressure, the government was forced to concede a political amnesty, the introduction of a multiparty constitution and a national conference. In August 1991 the national conference stripped President Eyadéma of all powers, banned the Rassemblement du peuple togolais (RPT), which had been the sole legal party, and elected Kokou Koffigoh as prime minister of an interim government. Troops loyal to President Eyadéma attempted to overthrow Koffigoh three times (in October, November and December 1991) but were frustrated by pro-democracy supporters. A new multiparty constitution was approved by referendum in September 1992. In November, Eyadéma, who had regained the position of head of state in August 1992, ordered the Army to crush civil unrest and a general strike against his rule. In February 1993, as violence continued, Koffigoh and Eyadéma agreed on the formation of a crisis government, which the national conference and the Collective Democratic Opposition-2 (COD-2) declared illegal.

The 1998 presidential election was won by Gen. Eyadéma. Legislative elections were announced unexpectedly in September 2002 following repeat postponing and re-scheduling between 2000–2; the election took place on 27 October. The RPT won an overall majority in the National Assembly winning 72 of the 81 seats. In the 2003 presidential election Eyadéma was re-elected with 57.2 per cent of the vote. The government resigned on 24 June 2003 after the president's re-inauguration and Eyadéma stated he intended to appoint a new government of national unity under Prime Minister Koffi Sama, who was re-appointed on 1 July 2003.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Tonga comprises a group of islands situated in the southern Pacific some 724 km east-south-east of Fiji. Most of the islands are of coral formation, but some are volcanic (Tofua, Kao and Niuafoou or 'Tin Can' Island) and elevation extremes range from 1,033 m (unnamed location on Kao island) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. The climate is subtropical, influenced by prevailing south-west trade winds with average temperatures 26°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Kingdom of Tonga is an independent constitutional monarchy within the Commonwealth. Prior to 4 June 1970 it had been a British-protected state for 70 years. The constitution provides for a government consisting of the Sovereign, an appointed privy council which functions as a cabinet, a legislative assembly and a judiciary. The 30-member legislative assembly comprises the King, the 11-member privy council, nine hereditary nobles elected by their peers, and nine popularly elected representatives who hold office for three years. The most recent election took place on 7 March 2002 when the Human Rights and Democracy Movement won seven of the popularly elected seats in the Legislative Assembly. In October 2003 constitutional changes gave greater power to the King, that included extended influence over the Legislative Assembly (Fale Alea).

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy is primarily agricultural; the main crops are coconuts, vanilla, yams, taro, cassava, groundnuts, squash pumpkins and other fruit. Fish is an important staple food, though recent shortfalls have led to canned fish being imported. Industry is based on the processing of agricultural produce, and the manufacture of foodstuffs, clothing and sports equipment. Tourism is also important.

The principal exports are fish and vanilla. The principal imports are manufactures, foodstuffs, machinery and transport equipment and combustible fuels.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Trinidad, the most southerly of the West Indian islands, lies seven miles off the north coast of Venezuela. The island is approximately 80 km in length by 59 km in width. Two mountain systems, the Northern and Southern Ranges, stretch across almost its entire width and a third, the Central Range, lies diagonally across its middle portion; otherwise the island is mostly flat. Elevation extremes range from 940 m (El Cerro del Aripol) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. Tobago lies 30 km north-east of Trinidad. The island is 51 km long at its widest point, and 17 km wide. Corozal Point and Iacos Point, the north-west and south-west extremities of Trinidad, enclose the Gulf of Paria. West of Corozal Point lie several islands, of which Chacachacare, Huevos, Monos and Gaspar Grande are the most important. There is a wet season from June to December and the average temperature in the coastal regions is 27°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Trinidad is assumed to be the oldest site of human habitation in the Caribbean Archipelago, with excavated human remains dating back some 7,200 years. For much of its history, the islands were home to the Nepuyo, Yaio and QuaQua peoples.

Trinidad was discovered by Columbus in 1498, was colonised in 1532 by Spain, capitulated to the British in 1797, and finally ceded to Britain under the Treaty of Amiens (1802). Tobago was also discovered by Columbus in 1498. Dutch colonists arrived in 1632; Tobago subsequently changed hands numerous times until it was ceded to Britain by France in 1814 and amalgamated with Trinidad in 1888. The Territory of Trinidad and Tobago became an independent state and a member of the British Commonwealth on 31 August 1962, and a republic in 1976.

In the general election of 2001 the ruling United National Congress (UNC) and the opposition People's National Movement (PNM) each won 18 of the 36 seats in the House of Representatives. President Robinson chose Patrick Manning, leader of PNM, as prime minister. The UNC condemned the president's choice and called for fresh elections, but a new cabinet was sworn into office. In 2002 President Robinson suspended parliament because no speaker had been elected. Fresh elections took place later that year, in which the PNM won 20 seats, thereby resolving the political deadlock. Patrick Manning was again sworn in as prime minister. George Maxwell Richards was elected president in 2003.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The President is elected for five years by all members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives has 36 members, directly elected for a five-year term, and the Senate has 31, of whom 16 are appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister, six on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and nine at the discretion of the President. Legislation was passed in 1980 that afforded Tobago a degree of self-administration through the 15-member Tobago House of Assembly, of whom 12 are directly elected and three chosen by the House for a four-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Trinidad and Tobago's main source of revenue is oil. Trinidad has large reserves of natural gas, and in March 2000 an agreement was signed to expand significantly the production of liquefied natural gas. In May 2000, it was announced that an additional natural gas deposit of some 56,600 million cubic metres had been discovered and the discovery of a further deposit of some three trillion cubic feet was announced in September. Fertilisers, tyres, clothing, soap, furniture and foodstuffs are manufactured locally while motor vehicles, radios, TV sets, and electro-domestic equipment are assembled from parts, mainly from Japan. The main agricultural products are sugar, cocoa, coffee, horticultural products and teak. GNI – US$7,800 million (2001); US$5,960 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 5.0 per cent (2001)

INFLATION RATE – 3.6 per cent (2000)

Imports from UK	£81,380,000	£104,062,000
Exports to UK	56,963,000	75,048,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The two islands have about 8,300 km of roads, of which about half are surfaced. There is no passenger-carrying railway service. The three main ports are Scarborough (Tobago), Port of Spain and Point Lisas where new industries powered by local natural gas are located. The international airport, Piarco, is at Port of Spain.

EDUCATION

Education is free at all state owned and government-assisted denominational schools and certain faculties at the University of the West Indies. Attendance is compulsory for children aged six to 12 years, after which attendance at free secondary schools is determined by success in the secondary school entrance examination at 11 years.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 1.1 per cent; (f) 2.4 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 99 per cent (1997); secondary 74 per cent (1997); tertiary 8 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

There are both private and state-run media organisations. Private television and radio stations predominate and the freedom of the press is constitutionally protected.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The northern part of Tunisia is mountainous with a central plateau that gives way to the semi-arid plains of the south. Elevation extremes range from 1,544 m (Jebel ech Chambi) at the highest point to –17 m (Shatt al Gharsah) at the lowest. The climate varies considerably from north to south, but average temperatures in Tunis range from 11°C in January to 34°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

A French protectorate from 1881 to 1956, Tunisia became an independent sovereign state on 1956. In 1957 the Constituent Assembly abolished the monarchy and elected M. Bourguiba president of the republic. In 1975 the National Assembly proclaimed M. Bourguiba president for life. However, he was deposed in 1987 and succeeded by President Zine el-Abidine Ben Ali, who was subsequently elected in 1989 and re-elected in 1994.

President Ben Ali was elected for a third term of office in 1999, gaining 99.4 per cent of the vote; there were two other candidates. A parallel legislative election was won by the Democratic Constitutional Rally (RCD), which gained 148 of the 182 seats in the National Assembly (Majlis al-Nuwaab). The other parties represented were the Movement of Social Democrats (MDS), the Unionist Democratic Union (UDU), the Party of People's Unity (PUP), the Movement for Renewal (MR) and the Social-Liberal Party. Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for late October 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1959 constitution was amended in 2002 to allow the president to seek a fourth term and to allow the formation of a second parliamentary assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agriculture and fisheries employed 22 per cent of the workforce in 1999 and accounted for 12 per cent of GDP in 2003. The valleys of the northern region support large amounts of livestock and contain rich agricultural areas in which cereal crops, citrus fruits, dates, melons, potatoes, peppers and tomatoes are grown. Vines and olives are extensively cultivated. Crude oil production in 2002 was 3.6 million tonnes. Gas has also been discovered off the east coast but is only exploited in small quantities. Tourism is the main foreign exchange earner and there were 5.6 million visitors in 2001.

The chief exports are manufactures, textiles and leather goods, phosphates, mechanical and electronic products, agricultural products and energy. The chief imports are manufactures, raw materials and semi-manufactures, consumer goods, capital goods, and foodstuffs. France remains the main trading partner. Tunisia became an associate of the EC in 1969. In July 1995 a new EU-Tunisian partnership agreement was signed which aims to modernise Tunisia's economy and improve its competitiveness with a view to creating a free trade zone with the EU by 2008.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Alongside the state-run radio and television stations, many satellite television channels are available. In addition, a private radio station has recently been founded, ending the state monopoly on radio broadcasting. An independent press exists in Tunisia but its coverage of local political issues is monitored by the government. Popular titles include La Presse, Assabah and Le Quotiden.

The country's archaeology is one of its biggest attractions and includes the famous Roman ruins of Carthage and El-Jem and the ancient hot springs at Hammam Mellegue. Malouf is the traditional Arab-style music of Tunisia.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Turkey in Europe consists of Eastern Thrace, including the cities of Istanbul and Edirne, and is separated from Asia by the Bosphorus at Istanbul and by the Dardanelles (about 64 km in length with a width varying from 1.6 km to 6.4 km). Turkey in Asia comprises the whole of Asia Minor or Anatolia. Turkey has several mountain ranges, and narrow coastal plains and elevation extremes range from 5,166 m (Mount Ararat) at the highest point to 0 m (Mediterranean Sea) at the lowest. Climate varies greatly from region to region. The coastal areas and the mountains (except in the east) have fairly hot summers and wet, mild winters. Average temperatures in Ankara range from  $-4^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $31^{\circ}\text{C}$  in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Once the centre of the Ottoman Empire, Turkey was proclaimed a republic on 29 October 1923 and Gazi Mustafa Kemal (later known as Kemal Atatürk) was elected as president. In 1945 a multiparty system was introduced but in 1960 the government was overthrown by the armed forces. A new constitution was adopted in 1961 and a civilian government took office. Civilian governments remained in power until September 1980 when mounting problems with the economy and terrorism incited a military take-over. After the 1983 general election the military leadership handed power to a civilian government.

Following elections in 2002, the Islamic Justice and Development Party (AKP), led by Recep Tayyip Erdoğan, won an overall majority with 363 of the 550 seats in the parliament. However Erdoğan had been prevented from standing for parliament owing to a past conviction, and the deputy leader of the AKP, Abdullah Gül, was therefore appointed as prime minister. The National Assembly then overruled the president's veto and voted to amend the law to permit Erdoğan to stand for election to parliament. He won a by-election in March 2003 and Prime Minister Gül resigned with his entire government. On 14 March Erdoğan was appointed prime minister and named his new government.

In June and July 2003 the parliament passed a package of laws easing restrictions on freedom of speech, on Kurdish language rights and on reducing the political role of the military, as part of a programme that aims to meet EU preconditions to the commencement of accession negotiations. Turkey abolished the death penalty in 2004.

INSURGENCIES

Since 1984 Turkey has been fighting armed guerrillas of the Marxist Leninist Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) in the south-east of the country where Kurds are the majority population. The leader of the PKK, Abdullah Öcalan, was captured by Turkish authorities in 1999 in Kenya and returned to Turkey to stand trial, where he was found guilty of treason and sentenced to death. The Turkish government announced in 2000 that it would suspend the execution, pending an appeal and in 2004 Öcalan was granted a reprieve. The PKK then declared that it had renounced violence and removed the word 'Kurdistan', which is illegal in Turkey, from its title. The situation remained fragile in 2004, however, with Kurdish secessionists continuing to threaten to end their cease-fire if insufficient progress is made on granting political and cultural rights to the Kurdish community.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new constitution, extending the powers of the president, was approved in 1982. It provided for the separation of powers between the legislature, executive and judiciary, and the holding of free elections to the unicameral Grand National Assembly, which now has 550 members elected every five years.

DEFENCE

The Army has 4,205 main battle tanks, 3,643 armoured personnel carriers, 650 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 37 attack helicopters. The Navy has 13 submarines, 19 frigates, 49 patrol and coastal vessels and 16 armed helicopters at twelve bases. The Air Force has 483 combat aircraft. Between 150,000 and 200,000 troops are stationed in the south-east of the country to prevent Kurdish insurgency. Since its invasion of Cyprus in 1974, Turkey has maintained forces in the north of the island and at present has about 36,000 personnel stationed there.

As a member of NATO, Turkey is host to the Headquarters Joint Command South East and the Sixth Allied Tactical Air Force Headquarters. US (1,742 personnel) air force detachments are based at Incirlik air base in southern Turkey. In March 2003 the parliament rejected a deal which would have allowed deployment of US forces in preparation for the war in Iraq but it allowed US forces the use of Turkish airspace. The deployment of Turkish forces into Kurdish areas of northern Iraq was also authorised.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 5.1 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 514,850: Army 402,000, Navy

52,750, Air Force 60,100; Paramilitaries 152,200

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 18 months

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Agricultural production accounted for 13.8 per cent of GDP in 2002. About 40 per cent of the working population is employed in agriculture. The principal crops are wheat, barley, rice, tobacco, sugar beet, tea, olives, grapes, figs and hazelnuts. Tobacco, sultana and fig cultivation is centred around Izmir, where substantial quantities of cotton are also grown. The main cotton area is in the Cukurova plain around Adana.

The main export minerals are chromate and boron. Tourism is a major industry, with over 7.5 million visitors in 1999.

The bulk of the country's requirements in sugar, cotton, woollen and silk textiles, and cement, is produced locally. Other industries include vehicle assembly, paper, glass and glassware, iron and steel, leather and leather goods, sulphur refining, canning and rubber goods, soaps and cosmetics, pharmaceutical products, and prepared foodstuffs.

Turkey was accepted as a candidate for EU membership in December 1999 and following an EU summit in December 2002, the end of 2004 was set as the earliest possible date for the commencement of accession negotiations, provided reforms continue. After years of economic difficulty, a controversial economic recovery programme was agreed with the IMF in 2002. The government's main priorities are to make progress with tax reforms and privatisation and to reduce employment in the public sector.

The main imports are machinery, crude oil and petroleum products, iron and steel, vehicles, medicines, chemicals and electrical appliances. Agricultural commodities represented 13.9 per cent of total exports in 2000. Other exports are minerals, textiles, glass and cement. Germany, the USA and Italy are the main trading partners.

GNI – US$167,300 million (2001); US$2,530 per capita (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Turkey has nearly 400,000 km of roads, of which just over a third is surfaced. There are over 8,500 km of railways, and 1,200 km of waterways. The principal ports and harbours are at Gemlik, Hopa, Iskenderun, Istanbul, Izmir, Kocaeli (Izmit), Icel (Mersin), Samsun and Trabzon.

EDUCATION

Education is free and secular, and since August 1997, compulsory from the ages of six to 14. There are elementary, secondary and vocational schools.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 6.5 per cent; (f) 23.4 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 107 per cent (1997); secondary 58 per cent (1997); tertiary 21 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Turkey has one state television and radio station, TRT, over 300 private television channels and more than 1,000 private radio stations. The authorities monitor and censor broadcasts that cover sensitive political subjects. TRT has begun to broadcast Kurdish-language programmes, to conform with the EU criteria on minority rights. As with the broadcast media, the Turkish press is subject to some censorship. There are several daily newspapers, including the titles Hurriyet, Milliyet and Cumhuriyet. There is an English-language title Turkish Daily News.

CULTURE

Turkey is rich archaeological remains, including Ephesus – the cultural centre of the Greek Empire, which features in the Bible; Troy, the Homeric city of Ilium, and a wealth of sites from Byzantine, Ottoman, Roman and other periods.

The Roman city of Byzantium was selected by Constantine the Great as the capital of the Roman Empire in AD 328 and renamed Constantinople. Istanbul contains the celebrated church of St Sophia, which, after becoming a mosque, was made a museum in 1934. It also contains Topkapı, former palace of the Ottoman Sultans, which is also a museum.

A tradition of folk music exists today in Turkey and its various strands are known collectively as halk music.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The republic comprises five regions: Ashgabat, Charjou, Krasnovodsk, Mary, and Tashauz. Ninety per cent of the country is taken up by the Kara Kum (Black Sands) desert. Elevation extremes range from 3,139 m (Gora Ayribaba) at the highest point to -81 m (Vpandina Akchanaya) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Ashgabat range from 0°C in January to 29°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Turkmenistan has a long history of conquest and has been invaded and occupied by many empires including the Persian, Greek (under Alexander the Great), Parthian and Mongol. From the early 19th century until 1886 Turkmenistan was gradually incorporated into the Russian Empire. Soviet control over Turkmenistan was established on 30 April 1918 when it became an Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic. Turkmenistan became a full republic of the Soviet Union in 1925. Turkmenistan declared its independence from the Soviet Union on 27 October 1991 and gained UN membership in 1992.

The autocratic government of President Niyazov has, through harassment and authoritarianism, prevented any effective political opposition or free press. The leadership has rejected political pluralism and instead a cult of personality has developed around President Niyazov. The Supreme Soviet voted in 1993 to extend his term of office to 2002 and this was confirmed by a 99.99 per cent vote in a referendum. In 1999, the legislature removed the limit on his term of office, effectively making him life president. The Communist Party, renamed the Democratic Party (DP), remains in power. Legislative elections to the Khalk Maslakhaty held in 1998 were won by the Democratic Party. General elections were held on 1999, in which all seats in the Majlis were won by candidates of the DP, the sole legal party.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Agreement on dual citizenship for ethnic Russians in Turkmenistan was reached in 1993. In the same year Turkmenistan signed the CIS charter to become a full CIS member and in 1994 became a member of the CIS economic union. In 2003 the dual citizenship deal was cancelled by President Niyazov and those holding dual citizenship were given two months in which to decide which passport to retain. A diplomatic row with Russia consequently followed as Turkmenistan rejected Russian allegations that the move would force tens of thousands of ethnic Russians with dual citizenship to leave the country, thereby jeopardising their rights.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1992 constitution declares the President head of state and government. The legislature is the 50-member Majlis (formerly the Supreme Soviet). The Khalk Maslakhaty (People's Council) is a supervisory body with no legislative powers.

HEAD OF STATE

President, Head of Government, Chair of the Council of Ministers, Saparmurad Niyazov, elected 27 October 1990, re-elected 21 June 1992, appointed head of government 18 May 1992, elected by referendum for an eight-year term 15 January 1994, term extended indefinitely 28 December 1999

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Revenues from natural gas reserves make the country economically viable and have enabled the government to maintain low stable prices for basic commodities and utilities. The principal industries are cotton cultivation, stock-raising and mineral extraction, together with natural gas production and the silk industry. Arable land is irrigated by the Niyazov (formerly Kara Kum) canal, which cuts through the Kara Kum desert. There are estimated reserves of some 700 million tonnes of oil and 8,000,000 million cubic metres of natural gas. Natural gas is exported by pipeline to Ukraine and western Europe. An agreement to build further pipelines under the Caspian Sea, through Azerbaijan and Georgia, to supply gas to Turkey was reached in November 1999. In April 2003 agreement was reached under which Russia would buy 60 billion cubic metres of gas from Turkmenistan annually, beginning in 2004.

Imports from UK	£6,909,000	£7,241,000
Exports to UK	4,651,000	2,097,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Turkmenistan has 24,000 km of roads, nearly 20,000 km of which are paved and there are 2,440 km of railways. There are two important waterways, the Niyazov (Kara Kum) canal and the Amu Darya.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

The government's control of the media, both broadcast and print, is total. Newspapers are produced on government owned presses; programmes from broadcasters other than the state channels are censored before airing in Turkmenistan, and internet access is controlled by the country's communication authorities. Newspapers include Galkynys, Turkmen Dunyasi and Adalet.

Carpet-weaving is considered an art form. Each tribe in Turkmenistan has distinctive carpet designs, and traditional dress is still used to show allegiance to a tribe. The Turkmen literary tradition is dominated by one figure, the poet and thinker Makhtumkuli (1770–1840).

TUVALU

Fakavae Alikī-Moloi Tuvalu/Constitutional Monarchy of Tuvalu

AREA – 26 sq. km

POPULATION – 10,991 (2001). About 1,500 Tuvaluans work overseas, mostly in Nauru, or as seamen. The people are almost entirely Polynesian. The principal languages are Tuvaluan and English. A large majority of the population is Christian, predominantly Protestant

CAPITAL – ʻŲFunafuti (population, 3,856)

CURRENCY – The Australian dollar ($) of 100 cents is legal tender. In addition there are Tuvalu dollar and cent coins in circulation

NATIONAL ANTHEM – Tuvalu Mo Te Atua (Tuvalu For The Almighty)

NATIONAL DAY – 1 October (Independence Day)

NATIONAL FLAG – Light blue ground with Union flag in top left quarter and nine five-pointed gold stars in the fly

MORTALITY RATE (per 1,000 population) – 7.34 (2003)

DEATH PENALTY – No (abolished 1978)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.4 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 423 per sq. km (1999)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Tuvalu comprises nine narrow coral atolls situated in the south-west Pacific around the point at which the International Date Line cuts the Equator. The climate is tropical, and the average temperature is 26°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Tuvalu, formerly the Ellice Islands, formed part of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony until 1975, when separate constitutions came into force. Separation from the Gilbert Islands was implemented the following year. On 1 October 1978 Tuvalu became a fully independent state within the Commonwealth.

Following the death of Prime Minister Ionatana Ionatana in 2000, Faimalaga Luka was chosen to replace him in February 2001. Luka's government lost a vote of no confidence later that year and Koloa Talake was elected prime minister in December. In parliamentary elections held in July 2002 Prime Minister Talake lost his seat, and Saufatu Sopanga was elected prime minister by parliament.

Tuvalu became a full member of the UN on 17 February 2000.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The constitution provides for a Prime Minister and four other Ministers, who must be members of the 15-member Parliament, all of whom are directly elected. The Prime Minister presides at meetings of the Cabinet, which consists of the five Ministers and is attended by the Attorney-General. Local government services are provided by elected Island Councils.

Governor-General, Faimalaga Luka

SELECTED GOVERNMENT MEMBERS as at July 2004

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The main imports are foodstuffs, semi-manufactures, machinery and transport equipment and fuels. The main exports are copra and fish, though philatelic sales provide a major source of revenue and handicraft sales are increasing.

Tuvalu has been for many years almost entirely dependent on foreign aid, but in 2000 it sold its internet country suffix, '.tv', for licensing to media companies. This sale, plus the similar leasing of its '900' phone code, now generates several million dollars of revenue annually.

GDP – US$14 million (1998); US$1,491 per capita (2000)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 2.0 per cent (1998)

Trade with UK	2002	2003

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Large parts of Lakes Victoria, Edward and Albert (Mobuto) are within Uganda's boundaries, as are Lakes Kyoga, Kwanja, George and Bisina (formerly Salisbury) and the course of the River Nile from its outlet from Lake Victoria to the Sudan border at Nimule. Uganda is mainly a high plateau and elevation extremes range from 5,110 m (Mount Stanley) at the highest point to 621 m (Lake Albert) at the lowest. There is a wet season from December to February and the average temperature in Kampala are an almost constant 24°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Uganda became an independent state within the Commonwealth on 9 October 1962, after some 70 years of British rule. A republic was instituted in 1967. In 1971 an army coup took place and Maj.-Gen. Idi Amin, the army commander, proclaimed himself head of state, and ruled as dictator until his overthrow in 1979. Dr Milton Obote became president in 1980 but was ousted by a military coup in 1985. A military council was installed but the National Resistance Movement led by Yoweri Museveni captured Kampala in January 1986, securing control of the rest of the country in the following few months. Museveni was sworn in as president in January 1986, and won the first direct presidential election in May 1996. Supporters of the president won a majority of seats in the subsequent legislative elections. The suspension of political party activity, introduced by President Museveni in 1986, was endorsed in a referendum held in 2000, in which 90.7 per cent of those voting backed the continuation of the no party 'Movement' system, in which political parties were allowed to exist, but not to contest elections.

President Museveni was re-elected in March 2001, and a general election was held in which most seats were won by supporters of the no party 'Movement' system.

In 2003 both the courts and the president made moves towards allowing political parties to become active once again.

The former President Idi Amin died in 2003. Many of the Ugandan Asians expelled by Amin are returning to Uganda, following an invitation from President Museveni.

INSURGENCIES

When Idi Amin was overthrown in 1979, thousands of his troops fled across the border into Sudan where some joined a rebel group, the Uganda National Rescue Front (UNRF). Over 1,000 rebels made peace after President Museveni came to power in 1986, and the remainder, known as UNRF 2, signed a peace deal in 2002, ending more than five years of negotiations between the government and rebels.

In 2004, civil unrest continued in north-eastern Uganda because of clashes between tribes, and rebel insurgency, particularly by the Lord's Resistance Army.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A new constitution, promulgated in October 1995, endorsed the existing non-party political system. The President, who is head of government, is directly elected for a five-year term. The legislature, the 276-seat National Assembly, is also directly elected for a five-year term; 214 members are elected by constituencies and 62 are elected indirectly to represent particular groups.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

On 8 February 2000, the IMF pledged US$139 million in debt relief, and the International Development Association (IDA) announced that it would give assistance of US$629 million over 20 years. In March, donor countries pledged at least US$2,000 million over three years to support economic development. The principal export earners are coffee, tobacco, cotton and tea. Hydroelectricity is produced from the Owen Falls power station, some of which is exported to Kenya, Tanzania and Rwanda. The principal food crops are plantains, sugar cane, cassava, maize and sorghum.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There is an international airport at Entebbe, and eight other airfields around the country. Having no coast, Uganda is dependent upon rail and road links to Mombasa in Kenya and Dar es Salaam in Tanzania for its trade. There is over 1,200 km of rail track in Uganda, and 27,000 km of roads, almost all of which are unpaved (only 1,800 km are surfaced).

EDUCATION

Education is a joint undertaking by the government, local authorities and voluntary agencies. In 1996, the Universal Primary Programme was launched, under which four children per family are entitled to receive free primary education.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 22.4 per cent; (f) 43.1 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 2 per cent (1997)

MEDIA AND CULTURE

Alongside the one state owned television, and one radio station, there are now more than a hundred private radio and television stations, following the government's relinquishing its control of the media in 1993. There are two main newspapers in Uganda: New Vision and The Monitor.

Music is central to Ugandan culture as each tribe has a distinctive musical heritage. Popular instruments include the Ugandan lyre, harp, xylophone and the 'thumb piano' or mbira. Okot p'Bitek (1931–82) is one of Uganda's best-known writers.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Ukraine consists of 24 regions and the Autonomous Republic of Crimea. The Carpathian mountains lie in the south-western part of the republic and terrain in the rest of the country is typified by the characteristic steppes and plateaux. Elevation extremes range from 2,061 m (Hora Hoverla) at the highest point to 0 m (Black Sea) at the lowest. The main rivers are the Dnieper with its tributaries, the Southern Bug and the Northern Donets (a tributary of the Don). Average annual temperatures in Kiev range from  $-8^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January to  $28^{\circ}\text{C}$  in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The earliest Slavic state was formed in the middle reaches of the Dnieper River with its capital at Kyiv in the ninth century AD. The state lasted until Kyiv fell to the Tatar-Mongols in 1240. For the next four centuries Ukraine was invaded and ruled by Poles and Lithuanians. Kyiv was liberated from the Poles in 1648 and in 1654 Ukraine became a protectorate of Russia.

Ukraine declared its independence in 1918, but was invaded by Poland in 1919 before becoming a constituent republic of the USSR in 1922.

In 1986 Ukraine was the scene of the world's worst nuclear disaster, when a reactor at the Chernobyl nuclear plant exploded. At least 10,000 people have died from radiation poisoning, and the long-term health of millions more has been affected.

Ukraine declared itself independent of the Soviet Union on 24 August 1991. Independence was confirmed by a referendum in December 1991 and Leonid Kravchuk was elected to the presidency. In the 1994 presidential election Leonid Kuchma defeated President Kravchuk and won a further term of office in a presidential election on 14 November 1999, receiving 56.25 per cent of the vote.

In January 2000, the Supreme Council split into two factions, following a failed attempt by the pro-government faction to remove the Speaker, Oleksandr Tkachenko, from office. The minority left-wing faction remained in control of the Supreme Council building until the pro-government majority took it by force.

In legislative elections held in 2002, the Our Ukraine bloc became the largest party in the parliament, ahead of the For United Ukraine bloc and the Communist Party of Ukraine. Following lengthy discussions during the summer of 2002, a coalition comprising supporters of President Kuchma and a number of independents was agreed in late October. The incumbent Prime Minister, Anatoliy Kinakh, was dismissed by the president on 16 November 2002 and Viktor Yanukovich, his replacement, was approved by parliament on 21 November.

INSURGENCIES

A pro-Russian majority in the Crimean parliament voted to make Crimea an autonomous republic in September 1991, a vote that was accepted by Ukraine, but it then voted for independence, which was not accepted, and the declaration of independence was rescinded in May 1992. Elections to the Crimean parliament in 1995 saw a dramatic drop in support for pro-Russian parties. Arkady Demydenko was appointed Prime Minister of Crimea in 1996. A new constitution, which gave Crimea property and budget rights, came into effect in January 1999.

A referendum in 1994 in the Donbass region of eastern Ukraine, in favour of closer economic ties with Russia and making Russian an official language, was overwhelmingly passed, as was one in the Crimea in favour of dual Russian-Ukrainian citizenship.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

In May 1997, a treaty of friendship and co-operation was signed with Russia. Agreement was also reached over the division of the former Soviet Black Sea Fleet. In the following year, a treaty on economic co-operation was signed between Ukraine and Russia which aimed to strengthen industrial and commercial links and move towards the introduction of the free movement of goods, services, capital and labour.

Ukraine signed a partnership and co-operation agreement with the EU in June 1994 and in July 1997, the NATO-Ukraine Charter to enhance co-operation on peacekeeping was signed.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The unicameral Supreme Council has 450 members, who serve a four-year term. Half of the seats in the Supreme Council are elected from single-seat constituencies by a simple majority, and the other 225 are to be filled by proportional representation from party lists, with a 4 per cent threshold for representation. A member may only be elected if the turnout in the electoral district is above 50 per cent.

DEFENCE

The Constitution bans the stationing of foreign troops on Ukrainian soil, but permits Russia to retain naval bases. The Army has 3,784 main battle tanks, 1,702 armoured personnel carriers, 3,043 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 205 attack helicopters. The Navy has one submarine, three principal surface combat vessels and nine patrol and coastal vessels at six bases. The Air Force has 499 combat aircraft.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 2.2 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 210,600: Army 148,000, Navy 13,500, Air Force 49,100; Paramilitaries 112,500

CONSCRIPTION DURATION – 18 months to two years

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The Communist-led government of 1991–4 was characterised by economic mismanagement and opposition to economic reforms. Successive governments were unable to gain consensus for a reform programme, which delayed economic restructuring. Ukraine joined the CIS economic union as an associate member in 1993.

Since his election in 1999, President Kuchma has introduced a wide-ranging reform programme. Continuing economic difficulties led to the devaluation of the hryvna in February 1999. In March 2000, the IMF issued an interim statement about the alleged misuse of foreign currency reserves and subsequently suspended its loan programme to Ukraine. However, GDP in 2000 showed strong export-based growth of 6 per cent and industrial production grew by 12.9 per cent.

Metal processing, the manufacture of machinery, and the chemical and petrochemical industries are major contributors to Ukraine's GDP; mining and metallurgy account for more than 40 per cent of exports. The southern part of the country contains a coal-mining and iron and steel industrial area. Ukraine also contains engineering and chemical industries and ship building yards on the Black Sea coast. Ukrainian agricultural production is good with large areas under cultivation with wheat, cotton, flax and sugar beet; stock-raising is also important. There are large deposits of coal and salt, iron ore and manganese.

Russia is the main trading partner, accounting for 24 per cent of exports and 41.7 per cent of imports in 2000. Trade negotiations between Ukraine and Russia in April 2002 included agreements on gas transits and oil pipelines. Turkey, Germany, the USA and Turkmenistan are also major trading partners.

GNI – US$35,200 million (2001); US$720 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 6 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 22.7 per cent (1999)

Current Account – US$3,174 million surplus (2002)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£182,436,000	£245,680,000
Exports to UK	148,201,000	96,087,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Ukraine has a total of 170,000 km of roads, 164,000 km of which are surfaced. It has 22,500 km of railways, and 4,500 km of waterways. Its ports are at Berdyansk, Feodosiya, Illichivsk, Izmayil, Kerch, Kherson, Kyiv, Kiliya, Mariupol, Mykolayiv, Odesa, Reni, Sevastopol, Yalta and Yuzhnyy.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are several private and state owned television and radio networks in operation. Ukraine has seven daily newspapers, many of which are mass-circulation publications and titles include Silski Visti and Segodnya.

The folk music of Ukraine has an ancestry that can be traced back to the 16th century. The most popular instrument in modern Ukraine is the bandura, a large stringed instrument. In the 20th century, Ukrainian literature – which dates back as far as the 12th century – became politically significant, as authors became openly critical of the Soviet occupation. Celebrated cultural figures include Schmueel Yosef Agnon (1888–1970) who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1966, the poet Taras Shevchenko (1814–61) and the novelist Olha Kobylianska (1863–1942). Mykola Lysenko (1842–1912) and Dimitri Klebanov (1907–87) are two prominent Ukrainian composers.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The United Arab Emirates is situated in the south-east of the Arabian peninsula. Six of the emirates lie on the shore of the Gulf between the Musandam peninsula in the east and the Qatar peninsula in the west while the seventh, Fujairah, lies on the Gulf of Oman. Much of the inland terrain is desert, leading to the flat coastal plain and there are mountains in the east of the country. Elevation extremes range from 1,527 m (Jabal Yibir) at the highest point to 0 m (Persian Gulf) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Sharjah range between 12°C in January to 38°C in August.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The United Arab Emirates (formerly the Trucial States) is composed of seven emirates which came together as an independent state on 2 December 1971 when they ended their individual special treaty relationships with the British government (Ras al-Khaimah joined the other six on 10 February 1972). On independence, the Union Government assumed full responsibility for all internal and external affairs apart from some internal matters that remained the prerogative of the individual emirates.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Overall authority lies with the Supreme Council of the seven emirate rulers, each of whom also governs in his own territory. The president and vice-president are elected every five years by the Supreme Council from among its members. The president appoints the Council of Ministers. A 40-member Federal National Council, comprising eight members each from Abu Dhabi and Dubai, six each from Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah and four each for Fujairah, Umm al-Qaiwain and Ajman, appointed by the rulers of each emirate, studies draft laws referred to it by the Council of Ministers.

The legal system consists of both secular and religious courts guided by the Islamic philosophy of justice. Individual emirates retain their own penal codes and courts alongside a federal court system and penal code.

FEDERAL STRUCTURE

Each emirate has its separate government, with Abu Dhabi having an executive council chaired by the Crown Prince. The Emirates are (population 2000 census): Abu Dhabi (1,186,000), Ajman (174,000), Dubai (913,000), Fujairah (98,000), Ras al-Khaimah (171,000), Sharjah (520,000), Umm al-Qaiwain (46,000).

The Army has 443 main battle tanks, 517 armoured personnel carriers and 430 armoured infantry fighting vehicles. The Navy has two frigates and 16 patrol and coastal vessels. The Air Force has 106 combat aircraft and 51 armed helicopters.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 4.0 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 50,500: Army 44,000, Navy 2,500, Air Force 4,000

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The UAE is the Gulf's third largest oil producer after Saudi Arabia and Iran, with oil reserves of 98,200 million barrels and gas reserves of 5,800 million cubic metres. Oil production in 2000 accounted for 33.9 per cent of GDP. Other important sectors of the economy are manufacturing (aluminium, cement, chemicals, fertilisers, pharmaceuticals, ship repair), government services, construction, transport, communications, financial services and tourism. Agricultural production has increased due to large-scale water desalination and irrigation projects. There is no personal or corporate taxation apart from on oil companies and foreign banks. There are several free zones, where overseas companies can trade tax-free.

Oil revenues over the past 30 years have enabled the government to invest heavily in education, health and social services, housing, transport and communications infrastructure, and agriculture.

GNI – US$49,205 million (1998); US$17,870 per capita (1998)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 7.0 per cent (1998)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Roads total 1,088 km, all of which are surfaced, but the country has no railway system. There are 15 major ports, and six international airports.

EDUCATION

In 2000 there were 747 government schools, where education is free; and 426 private schools. There are five universities.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 25.9 per cent; (f) 21.1 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 89 per cent (1997); secondary 80 per cent (1997); tertiary 12 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

Dubai is an important media hub and is home to pan-Arab satellite television channels and other international media organisations. UAE residents can receive several local and pan-Arab television and radio stations. There are three national newspapers, Al-Bayan, Gulf News and Khaleej Times.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

AREA – 9,159,000 sq. km. Neighbours: Canada (north), Mexico (south)

POPULATION – 285,926,000 (2001). The language is English. There is a significant Spanish-speaking minority

CAPITAL – Washington DC (population, 4,923,153, 2000 census). The area of the District of Columbia (with which the City of Washington is considered co-extensive) is 61 sq. miles, with a resident population (2000 census) of 572,059. The District of Columbia is governed by an elected mayor and City Council

MAJOR CITIES – ΨChicago; Dallas; ΨDetroit; ΨHouston; ΨLos Angeles; ΨNew York; ΨPhiladelphia; Phoenix; San Antonio; ΨSan Diego

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.0 per cent
(1990–2001)

POPULATION DENSITY – 31 per sq. km (2001)

URBAN POPULATION – 77 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The coastline has a length of about 3,329 km on the Atlantic Ocean 12,268 km on the Pacific, 1,705 km on the Arctic, and 2,624 km on the Gulf of Mexico. The principal river is the Mississippi-Missouri-Red (5,970 km long), traversing the whole country to its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico. The chain of the Rocky Mountains separates the western portion of the country from the remainder. West of these, bordering the Pacific coast, the Cascade Mountains and Sierra Nevada form the outer edge of a high tableland, consisting in part of stony and sandy desert and partly of grazing land and forested mountains, and including the Great Salt Lake, which extends to the Rocky Mountains. In the eastern states large forests still exist, the remnants of the forests which formerly extended over all the Atlantic slope. The highest point is Mount McKinley (6,193 m) in Alaska, and the lowest point of dry land is in Death Valley (Inyo, California), 85 m below sea level. Temperatures vary dramatically and average temperatures in Washington DC range from 6°C in January to 27°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area which is now the USA was first inhabited by nomadic hunters who probably arrived from Asia c.30,000 BC. The first (failed) European colony was founded by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1585. By 1733 there were 13 British colonies, composed largely of religious non-conformists who had left Britain to escape persecution; the French and Spanish had also founded colonies. The War of Independence broke out in 1775 largely because of the colonists' objection to being taxed by, but having no representation in, the British Parliament. The forces of the British government were defeated with French, Spanish and Dutch assistance. The Declaration of Independence which inaugurated the United States of America was signed on 4 July 1776; Britain recognised American sovereignty in 1783. The first federal constitution was drawn up in 1787; ten amendments, termed the Bill of Rights, were added in 1791. The 13 original states of the Union ratified the constitution between 1787 and 1790. Vermont, Kentucky and Tennessee were admitted in the 1790s but most of the states acceded in the 19th century as the opening up of the centre and west led to the creation of new states and European or neighbouring countries ceded or sold their territories to the USA.

The Civil War (1861–5) was fought over the issue of slavery, which was integral to the economy of the southern states but was opposed by the northern states. The northern states defeated the Confederacy of southern states (South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana).

The USA emerged as a world economic and military superpower in the 20th century and played a decisive role in the two world wars. Its economic and military (including nuclear) supremacy has given the USA a key role in shaping the post-war world.

Presidential and legislative elections held on 7 November 2000 saw the Republican candidate George W. Bush win 47.9 per cent of the vote with the Republican Party securing 51 seats in the Senate. Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for November 2004.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Following the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington DC on 11 September 2001, responsibility for which was claimed by Osama bin Laden's Islamist group, al Qa'eda, the USA led a military operation against al Qa'eda and the Taliban in Afghanistan in October 2001 (see Afghanistan). Attempts to capture bin Laden and the Taliban leader, Mullah Omar have, to date, been unsuccessful.

Tensions rose between the USA and Iraq in 2002 over US concerns that Iraq was developing weapons of mass destruction. UN weapons inspections continued into 2003 but the situation deteriorated and on 20 March 2003 the USA began a military campaign (which included British military involvement) to remove the Iraqi president, Saddam Hussein, from power. This move to war created a rift in foreign policy between the European Union (with the exception of Spain), which was opposed to military action, and the United States. US forces advanced into central Baghdad in early April. On 1 May, US President George Bush declared the major part of the war in Iraq to be over. However, as of September 2004, US troops remained in Iraq to stabilise the country and continue to be the targets of sniper and bomb attacks.

In response to the threat of terrorist attacks on US soil a Department of Homeland Security was created in November 2002, in the biggest reorganisation of the federal government for more than 50 years.

THE STATES OF THE UNION

The United States of America is a federal republic consisting of 50 states and the federal District of Columbia and of organised territories. Of the present 50 states, 13 are original states, seven were admitted without previous organisation as territories, and 30 were admitted after such organisation.

IMMIGRATION

From 1820 to 2000, 666,089,431 immigrants were admitted to the United States. The total number of immigrants in 2002 was 1,063,733. Five countries supplied 40 per cent of new immigrants: Mexico (219,380), India (71,105), the People's Republic of China (61,282), the Philippines (51,308), and Vietnam (33,627).

POLITICAL SYSTEM

By the constitution of 17 September 1787 (to which amendments were added in 1791, 1798, 1804, 1865, 1868, 1870, 1913, 1920, 1933, 1951, 1961, 1964, 1967, 1971 and 1992), the government of the United States is entrusted to three separate authorities: the executive (the President and Cabinet), the legislature (Congress) and the judiciary. The President is indirectly elected by an electoral college every four years. There is also a Vice-President, who, should the president die, becomes President for the remainder of the term. The tenure of the presidency is limited to two terms. The President, with the consent of the Senate, appoints the Cabinet officers and all the chief officials. He makes recommendations of a general nature to Congress, and when laws are passed by Congress he may return them to Congress with a veto. But if a measure so vetoed is again passed by both Houses of Congress by two-thirds majority in each House, it becomes law, notwithstanding the objection of the President. The President must be at least 35 years of age and a native citizen of the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

Each state elects (on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of the year preceding the year in which the presidential term expires) a number of electors (members of the electoral college), equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the state may be entitled in the Congress. The electors for each state meet in their respective states on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December following, and vote for a President by ballot. The ballots are then sent to Washington, and opened on 6 January by the President of the Senate in the presence of Congress. The candidate who has received a majority of the whole number of electoral votes cast is declared president for the ensuing term. If no one has a majority, then from the highest on the list (not exceeding three) the House of Representatives elects a president, the votes being taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote. A presidential term begins at noon on 20 January.

THE CONGRESS

Legislative power is vested in two houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate has 100 members, two Senators from each state, elected for the term of six years, and each Senator has one vote. The House of Representatives consists of 435 Representatives, directly elected in each state for a two-year term, a resident commissioner from Puerto Rico and a delegate each from American Samoa, the District of Columbia, Guam and the Virgin Islands, making a total of 440 members. Members of the 108th Congress were elected on 5 November 2002 and the elections were scheduled for November 2004. The 108th Congress is constituted as follows:

Senate Republicans 51; Democrats 48; Independent 1; 2 vacancies; total 100

House Republicans 229; Democrats 205; Independent 1; total 435

President of the Senate, The Vice-President

Senate Majority Leader, Bill Frist (R), Tennessee

Speaker of the House of Representatives, J. Dennis Hastert (R), Illinois

THE JUDICATURE

The federal judiciary consists of three sets of federal courts: the Supreme Court at Washington DC, consisting of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, the United States Courts of Appeals, consisting of 168 circuit judges within 13 regional circuits and the 94 United States district courts served by 575 district court judges.

DEFENCE

Each military department is separately organised and functions under the direction, authority and control of the Secretary of Defence. The Air Force has primary responsibility for the Department of Defence space development programmes and projects. Under strategic command the USA has 432 submarine-launched ballistic missiles, 550 inter-continental ballistic missiles, 208 heavy nuclear-capable bombers and 60 strategic defence interceptor aircraft together with 75 multiple intelligence satellites, radars and early warning systems throughout the world. The Army has 7,620 main battle tanks, 6,719 armoured infantry fighting vehicles, 14,300 armoured personnel carriers, 282 aircraft and 1,132 armed helicopters.

The Navy has 72 strategic submarines, 54 tactical submarines, 12 aircraft carriers, 27 cruisers, 49 destroyers, 30 frigates, 21 patrol and coastal vessels, 40 amphibious and support ships, 1,705 combat aircraft and 693 armed helicopters. The Marine Corps has 403 main battle tanks and 1,321 amphibious armoured vehicles. The Air Force has 208 long-range strike aircraft, 2,928 tactical combat aircraft and 227 helicopters.

The major deployments of US personnel overseas are: Germany (73,500); South Korea (41,360); Japan (40,680); Italy (11,965); UK (11,097); Turkey (1,742).

AGRICULTURE

The total number of farms in 2003 was 2,126,860 with a total area of land in farms of 938,750,000 acres, and an average acreage per farm of 441 acres. Principal crops are maize for grain, soybeans, wheat, hay, cotton, tobacco, grain sorghums, potatoes, oranges and barley. Agricultural trade for the 2003 fiscal year saw exports rise to an estimated US$56.2 billion, with imports of US$41 billion.

MINERALS

The value of non-fuel raw mineral production in 2003 totalled an estimated US$40 billion. Mineral exports in 2003 were valued at US$40 billion, and imports at US$60 billion. In 2003 the following quantities of minerals were produced: iron ore 50,000,000 tonnes; marketable phosphate rock 300,000 tonnes; copper 1,120,000 tonnes; zinc 77,000 tonnes; lead 50,000 tonnes.

ENERGY

Production in 2002 was 70.92 quadrillion British Thermal Unit (BTU), principally coal, natural gas and crude oil. Petroleum accounted for almost half of energy exports of 3.65 quadrillion BTU. Net imports were 25.74 quadrillion BTU, of which crude oil was 19.90 quadrillion BTU, to meet consumption of 97.90 quadrillion BTU (quadrillion=10<sup>15</sup>).

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Exports to UK	26,040,615,000	23,691,622,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are approximately 6.4 million km of roads, with surfaced roads and streets accounting for 64.7 per cent of the total. The USA has nearly 195,000 km of railway, and more than 41,000 km of waterways. Its main ports and harbours are at Anchorage, Baltimore, Boston, Charleston, Chicago, Duluth, Hampton Roads, Honolulu, Houston, Jacksonville, Los Angeles, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Port Canaveral, Portland (Oregon), Prudhoe Bay, San Francisco, Savannah, Seattle, Tampa and Toledo. US domestic and international scheduled airlines in 2000 carried approximately 665,042,490 passengers over 692,008,214,000 revenue passenger miles.

EDUCATION

All the states have compulsory school attendance laws. In general, children are obliged to attend school from seven to 16 years of age. Most of the revenue for public elementary and secondary school purposes comes from federal, state and local governments. Less than three per cent comes from gifts and from tuition and transportation fees.

Among the better-known universities are: Harvard, founded in 1636, and named after John Harvard of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, England, who bequeathed to it his library and a sum of money in 1638; Yale, founded in 1701; Princeton, New Jersey, founded 1746.

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); secondary 97 per cent (1997); tertiary 81 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The American media is vast and powerful both at home and abroad. American film (based in Hollywood) and television (via the major networks of ABC, CBS, NBC, CNN, Fox, MTV, HBO, and PBS) are exported all over the world. The USA has around 10,000 commercial radio stations, and more than 1,500 daily newspapers (including USA Today, The Wall Street Journal, The Washington Post and The New York Times).

CULTURE

The USA has perhaps the most diverse culture in the world. Notable writers include Mark Twain (1835–1910), Herman Melville (1819–91), William Faulkner (1897–1962), Henry David Thoreau (1803–82), John Berryman (1914–72), Sylvia Plath (1932–63) and Toni Morrison (b. 1931), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1993.

The Hollywood film industry is the most wide-reaching in the world and celebrated names include Orson Welles (1915–85), Frank Capra (1897–1991), Stanley Kubrick (1928–99), Martin Scorsese (b. 1942) and Francis Ford Coppola (b. 1939).

Modern art found a spiritual home in New York, and the Guggenheim and Metropolitan Museums of Art both house vast collections of famous works. Renowned artists include Edward Hopper (1882–1967), Roy Lichtenstein (1923–97), Andy Warhol (1928–1987) and Jackson Pollock (1912–1956).

US TERRITORIES, ETC

Responsibility within the federal government for the United States insular areas other than Puerto Rico and Kingman Reef lies with the United States Department of the Interior, either the Office of Insular Affairs (for American Samoa, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, the United States Virgin Islands, Navassa Island (7.8 sq. km), Palmyra Atoll (4 sq. km) and Wake Atoll (6.4 sq. km) (shared with the United States Army Space and Missile Defense Command)) or the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (for Baker Island (1.5 sq. km), Howland Island (2.5 sq. km) and Jarvis Island (4.2 sq. km), Midway Atoll (5.2 sq. km) and Johnston Atoll (2.5 sq. km) (shared with the Defence Special Weapons Agency)). Four of the eight populated insular areas are represented in the United States House of Representatives, Puerto Rico by a resident commissioner and American Samoa, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands each by one non-voting delegate. Although represented in the United States House of Representatives by a delegate, the District of Columbia was an incorporated territory for only three years, from 21 February 1871 to 20 June 1874.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO

AREA – 9,104 sq. km

POPULATION – 3,834,000 (2001). The majority of the inhabitants are of Spanish descent, and Spanish and English are the official languages

CAPITAL –  $\Psi$ San Juan, population of the municipality (2002 estimate), 433,412. Other major towns are: Bayamón; Carolina;  $\Psi$ Ponce

Puerto Rico (Rich Port) is an island of the Greater Antilles group in the West Indies and was discovered in 1493 by Columbus. It was a Spanish possession until 1898, when the USA took formal possession as a result of the Spanish–American War. The 1952 constitution establishes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with full powers of local government. The Legislative Assembly consists of two elected houses: the Senate of 27 members and the House of Representatives of 51 members. The term of the Legislative Assembly is four years. The Governor is popularly elected for a term of four years. Residents of Puerto Rico are US citizens. Puerto Rico is represented in Congress by a resident commissioner, elected for a term of four years, who has a seat in the House of Representatives but not a vote, although he has a right to vote on those committees of which he is a member.

Guam is the largest of the Mariana Islands, in the north Pacific Ocean. Guam was occupied by the Japanese in December 1941 but was recaptured by US forces in 1944. Under the Organic Act of Guam 1950, Guam has statutory powers of self-government, and any person born in Guam is a US citizen but cannot vote in a US presidential election. A 15-member unicameral legislature is popularly elected biennially. The Governor and Lieutenant-Governor are popularly elected. There is also a District Court of Guam, with original jurisdiction in cases under federal law. Guam's two main sources of revenue are tourism (particularly from Japan) and US military spending.

Governor, Felix Perez Camacho

AMERICAN SAMOA

AREA – 199 sq. km

POPULATION – 63,000 (1997 estimate)

CAPITAL –  $\Psi$ Pago Pago (population, 3,519)

NATIONAL DAY – 17 April (Flag Day)

American Samoa consists of the islands of Tutuila, Aunu'u, Ofu, Olesega, Ta'u, Rose and Swains Islands. Those born in American Samoa are US non-citizen nationals, but some have acquired citizenship through service in the United States armed forces or other naturalisation procedure. The constitution of 1966 grants American Samoa a measure of self-government, with certain powers reserved to the US Secretary of the Interior. There is a bicameral legislature of 21 seats, 20 elected, one appointed, with popularly elected representatives and 18 traditionally elected senators, and a popularly elected Governor.

Governor, Togiola Tulafono

THE UNITED STATES VIRGIN ISLANDS

AREA – 363 sq. km

POPULATION – 123,000 (2001)

CAPITAL – ΨCharlotte Amalie (population, 12,331, 1990), on St Thomas

The US Virgin Islands were purchased from Denmark and came under US sovereignty in 1917. There are three main islands, St Thomas, St Croix, St John and about 50 small islets or cays. Under the provisions of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands 1954, legislative power is vested in the Legislature, a unicameral body composed of 15 senators popularly elected for two-year terms. The Governor is popularly elected. Those born in the US Virgin Islands are US nationals.

Governor, Charles Wesley Turnbull

NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS

AREA – 477 sq. km

POPULATION – 77,000 (2001)

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT – Saipan (population, 52,706, 1995 census)

The USA administered the Northern Mariana Islands as part of a UN Trusteeship until the trusteeship agreement was terminated in 1986, bringing fully into effect a 1976 congressional law establishing the Northern Mariana Islands as a Commonwealth under US sovereignty. Most of the then residents became US citizens. Those born subsequently in the Northern Mariana Islands are US citizen nationals. There is a popularly elected bicameral legislature and a popularly elected Governor.

Governor, Juan N. Babauta

URUGUAY

República Oriental del Uruguay – Eastern Republic of Uruguay

AREA – 175,000 sq. km. Neighbours: Argentina (west), Brazil (north and east)

MILITARY EXPENDITURE – 1.8 per cent of GDP (2002)

MILITARY PERSONNEL – 24,000: Army 15,200, Navy 5,700, Air Force 3,100; Paramilitaries 920

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The country consists mainly of undulating grassy plains, with low hills. Elevation extremes range from 514 m (Cerro Catedral) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The principal river is the Rio Negro (with its tributary the Yí), flowing from north-east to south-west into the Rio Uruguay. Average temperatures in Montevideo range from 6°C in July and to 28°C in January.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Uruguay (or the Banda Oriental, as the territory lying on the eastern bank of the Uruguay River was then called) formed part of Spanish South America from 1726 to 1814, when it was annexed by the Argentine Confederation and then Portugal, becoming a province of Brazil. In 1825, the country threw off Brazilian rule. Uruguay was declared an independent state in 1828 and was inaugurated as a republic in 1830.

General elections held in 1984 marked the return to civilian rule after 11 years of presidential and military rule. The first fully free presidential and legislative elections since 1971 were held in 1989, and were won by the National (Blanco) Party (NP).

The presidential election of 1999 was won by Jorge Batlle Ibáñez of the Colorado Party (CP). The legislative elections for both houses of the General Assembly, which were held simultaneously with the first round of the presidential election, resulted in the Progressive Encounter-Broad Front (EP-FA) winning seats, the others being won by the CP 33 seats, the NP 22 seats and the New Space party (NE) four seats in the House of Representatives, with the EP-FA winning 12 seats, the CP, the NP seven seats and the NE one seat in the Senate. A coalition government of the CP and the NP was formed.

Presidential and legislative elections were scheduled for late October 2004.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the constitution the President (who may serve only a single term of five years) appoints a council of ministers and a Secretary (Planning and Budget Office), and the Vice-President presides over Congress. The Congress consists of a Chamber of 99 deputies and a Senate of 30 members (plus the Vice-President), elected for five years by proportional representation. The republic is divided into 19 Departments, each with an elected Governor and legislature.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Beef, mutton and wool are produced and rice, wheat, barley, linseed and sunflower seed are cultivated. Other foodstuffs (citrus, wine, beer), fishing and textile industries are also of importance. Textiles, tyres, sheet-glass, three-ply wood, cement, leather-curing, beet-sugar, plastics, household consumer goods and edible oils are produced. Exploited minerals include clinker, dolomite, marble and granite. Much of the economy is in the hands of state monopolies and there has been only limited market liberalisation.

The economic problems of neighbouring Brazil and Argentina have had a negative influence on the Uruguayan economy. Inflation became a serious issue, and as a consequence both unemployment, and Uruguay's external debt burden, increased significantly. In 2003 the IMF extended Uruguay's existing standby credit facility, due to expire in March 2004, to March 2005. Repayments of loans amounting to about US$94 million were postponed until August 2004.

The major exports are meat, meat by-products and livestock, agricultural products and textiles. The principal imports are machinery and transport equipment and chemical products. Principal trading partners are Brazil, Argentina, the USA and Germany.

GNI – US$19,200 million (2001); US$5,710 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.3 per cent (2000)

INFLATION RATE – 4.8 per cent (2000)

Imports from UK	£31,023,000	£31,723,000
Exports to UK	46,490,000	44,265,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are nearly 9,000 km of roads, 8,000 km of which are surfaced, and over 2,000 km of railway in use. The international airport of Carrasco lies 19 km outside Montevideo. There are 1,600 km of waterways. The River Uruguay is navigable from its estuary to Salto, 200 miles north, and the Negro is also navigable as far as Mercedes. In December 1998, the Senate approved the construction of a 45 km bridge across the River Plate, linking Uruguay and Argentina. Uruguay's main ports are at Colonia, Fray Bentos, Juan La Caze, La Paloma, Montevideo, Nueva Palmira, Paysandú, Punta del Este, and Piriapolis.

EDUCATION

Primary and secondary education is compulsory and free, and technical and trade schools and evening courses for adult education are state controlled. The university at Montevideo (founded in 1849) has ten faculties and a new university has been built at Salto.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 2.6 per cent; (f) 1.8 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – primary 100 per cent (1997); tertiary 30 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The constitution enshrines freedom of expression. There are more than 100 daily and weekly newspapers, all privately owned, and more than 100 radio stations, as well as 20 television channels. The government runs one television and one radio station.

CULTURE

The music of Uruguay has European origins, from which the local versions (of, for example, polkas and waltzes) have evolved. The literature and art of Uruguay is well developed and diverse, from the epic poetry of Juan Zorillo de San Martín (1855–1931) to the complex symbolist writing of Juan Herrera y Reissig (1875–1910). Celebrated painters include Juan Manuel Blanes (1830–1901) and Joaquin Torres-García (1874–1949).

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Uzbekistan occupies the south-central part of former Soviet Central Asia, lying between the high Tien Shan mountains and the Pamir highlands in the east and south-east and sandy lowlands in the west and north-west, in the basin of the Amu Darya and Syr Darya rivers. Uzbekistan consists of the Republic of Karakalpakstan and 12 regions: Andijan, Bukhara, Jizak, Fergana, Kashka-Darya, Khorezm, Namangan, Navoi, Samarkand, Surhan-Darya, Syr-Darya and Tashkent. Elevation extremes range from 4,301 m (Adelunga Toghi) at the highest point to –12 m (Sariqarnish Kuli) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Tashkent range from –2°C in January to 33°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

In the 13th century the area that is now Uzbekistan became the centre of a great Muslim empire under Amir Timur (Tamerlane), with its capital at Samarkand. By the beginning of the 19th century three independent Khanates, Khiva, Kokand and Bukhara, existed in what is now Uzbekistan. These were annexed to the Russian Empire in the second half of the 19th century. In 1917 a Communist revolution broke out in Tashkent and by 1921, all of Uzbekistan had been absorbed into the Soviet Union. Under Soviet rule a massive land irrigation programme was implemented to allow the cultivation of cotton.

Uzbekistan declared its independence from the Soviet Union on 1 September 1991. Its independence was confirmed in a referendum and recognised internationally. Elections to the new Oliy Majlis were held in 1994 and won by the ruling People's Democratic Party (PDP) and its allies.

Despite the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of religion and thought, and respect for human rights and multiparty democracy, censorship is still widely used and little political opposition is tolerated. In 1995 President Karimov's term of office was extended to 2000 by a national referendum and he won a further five-year term in a presidential election held in 2000, gaining 91.9 per cent of the vote. The election result attracted criticism from the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, which claimed that no real opposition candidate had been allowed to stand. Legislative elections were held in December 1999; the People's Democratic Party and its allies won 123 seats. The remaining seats were won by independent candidates and citizens' groups.

The main opposition parties, Erk (Freedom) and Birlik (Unity) nationalist parties, had been banned since the introduction of the multiparty constitution in 1992, but Birlik held a congress openly for the first time in ten years in May 2003 and Erk held its first formal meeting for 11 years in June. Erk pledged to raise the party's political profile at future elections.

Legislative elections were due in December 2004.

INSURGENCIES

The Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan (IMU), which seeks to overthrow the government and establish an Islamic state, was founded in 1996. Whilst it has carried out car bombings in Tashkent, its activities have centred on the Fergana valley and it has clashed with Kyrgyz armed forces.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Uzbekistan is a member of the UN, OSCE, UNESCO and the WHO. In 2002, a military agreement was signed with the USA over the anti-terrorist operation in Afghanistan, outlining future co-operation and more frequent contact between the two countries.

A final agreement demarcating the 2,240 km border with Kazakhstan was signed on in 2002. A previous border agreement signed in 2001 had left unresolved the issue of a number of settlements in northern Uzbekistan, populated by significant numbers of Kazakh citizens.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

A referendum held in 2002 approved constitutional amendments on the extension of the presidential term of office from five to seven years and the creation of a bicameral legislature. The amendments were then approved by parliament. A second legislative chamber was planned for December 2004, following the end of the 1999–2004 parliamentary term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Uzbekistan's economy is based on intensive agricultural production. Cotton production is approximately 4 million tonnes per year, made possible by extensive irrigation schemes. Textile manufacture, silk production and leather goods are also important while wheat, potatoes and rice are widely grown. There are some agricultural and textile machinery plants and several chemical combines.

Uzbekistan possesses a wide range of mineral deposits including copper, uranium, oil, gold and many other metals. The Muruntao mine is the largest open-cast gold mine in the world; in 1998, 81 tons of gold were produced. Total gold reserves are estimated at more than 5,000 tons. In 1998 oil output was 8.0 million tons, and gas production was 55 billion cubic metres. Foreign direct investment exceeds US$9 billion. South Korea, the USA, Japan, Turkey and the UK are the main investors. Uzbekistan is a member of the Commonwealth of Independent States economic union.

Imports from UK	£14,622,000	£18,225,000
Exports to UK	22,035,000	28,956,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Uzbekistan has 81,600 km of roads, 71,000 km of which are paved. It has nearly 4,000 km of railway, and 1,100 km of waterways.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There is a mix of government-run and private television and radio stations in Uzbekistan. Almost all newspapers are produced by the state or by pro-government organisations. In both print and broadcast media, despite constitutional protection of free speech, the government strictly controls political content. Khalq So'zi is one of the major daily newspapers.

Many aspects of Uzbek culture reflect the country's Islamic heritage, notably the religious architecture and the decorative arts traditions of calligraphy and wood carving. The folk art of the region includes carpet weaving, embroidery and jewellery making. Oral tradition remains strong throughout rural Uzbekistan and includes the sung poems Koshuk and Lapar.

VANUATU

Ripablik blong Vanuatu / Republic of Vanuatu / République de Vanuatu

AREA – 12,189 sq. km

POPULATION – 192,910 (2001 estimate). About 95 per cent are Melanesian, the rest being mostly Micronesian, Polynesian and European. The national language is Bislama, but English and French are also official languages

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Vanuatu is situated in the South Pacific Ocean. It includes 13 large and some 70 small islands, of coral and volcanic origin, including the Banks and Torres Islands in the north. The principal islands are Vanua Lava, Espiritu Santo, Maewo, Pentecost, Ambae, Malekula, Ambrym, Epi, Efate, Erromango, Tanna and Anietyum. Most islands are mountainous and there are active volcanoes on several. Elevation extremes range from 1,877 m (Tabwemasana) at the highest point to 0 m (Pacific Ocean) at the lowest. Vanuatu has a tropical climate and the average temperature is 29°C all year round.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Some of the islands of Vanuatu have been inhabited for over 4,000 years. Europeans first arrived in the early 17th century, and Captain Cook named the islands the New Hebrides in 1774. Settlers began to arrive in Vanuatu in the second half of the 19th century. In 1906 Britain and France held joint sovereignty over the country which was only relinquished in 1980 when Vanuatu gained independence and became a republic within the Commonwealth.

Parliament consists of 52 members, directly elected for a term of four years. A Council of Chiefs advises on matters of custom. Executive power is held by the Prime Minister (elected from and by parliament) and a Council of Ministers who are responsible to parliament. The President is elected for a five-year term by the presidents of the six provincial governments and the members of parliament.

In the legislative elections of July 2004, the National United Party (NUP) won 10 of the 52 seats in parliament, thereby securing a majority. On 29 July 2004, Serge Vohor of the Union of Moderate Parties (UMP) was named as prime minister of a coalition government that included the NUP, the UMP and the Vanuaaki Pati (VP). Alfred Maseng was elected president in April 2004 but was removed from office on 10 May. His successor, Kalkot Matas Kelekele, was elected on 17 August 2004.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Most of the population is employed on plantations or in subsistence agriculture. Subsistence crops include yams, taro, manioc, sweet potato and breadfruit; principal cash crops are copra, cocoa and coffee. Cattle are kept on the plantations and beef is the second largest export. There is a small light industrial sector. Principal exports are copra, meat, timber and cocoa. The main trading partner is Japan. Tourism is a growing industry and the absence of direct taxation has led to growth in the finance and associated industries. Following a tightening up of the country's tax and regulatory systems in May 2003 the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development removed Vanuatu from its list of unco-operative tax havens.

HISTORY

The office of the ecclesiastical head of the Roman Catholic Church (Holy See) is vested in the Pope, the Sovereign Pontiff. For many centuries the Sovereign Pontiff exercised temporal power but by 1870 the Papal States had become part of unified Italy. The temporal power of the Pope was in suspense until the treaty of 1929, which recognised the full and independent sovereignty of the Holy See in the City of the Vatican.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The mountains of Venezuela are the Eastern Andes and Maritime Andes, running south-west to north-east. The main range is known as the Sierra Nevada de Mérida and elevation extremes range from 5,007 m (Pico Bolívar) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest. The principal river is the Orinoco. The upper waters of the Orinoco are united with those of the Rio Negro (a Brazilian tributary of the Amazon) by a natural river or canal, known as the Brazo Casiquiare. The coastal regions contain many lagoons and lakes including Maracaibo (area 13,351 sq. km), the largest lake in South America. Venezuela's wet season lasts from May to November and average temperatures in Caracas range from 16°C in January to 29°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The first Spanish settlement was established at Cumaná in 1520 and Venezuela became part of the Vice royalty of New Granada in 1718. An Act of Independence was signed on 15 July 1811 but was followed by several years of struggle until troops led by Simón Bolívar defeated the Spanish at the battle of Carabobo in 1821. Independence from Great Colombia, into which Venezuela had been incorporated in 1819, was achieved in 1830.

In May 1999, a referendum on convening a constituent assembly to rewrite the constitution was passed and an election to decide the members of the constituent assembly was subsequently held in July. The new constitution was approved in a referendum and was proclaimed on 20 December. The National Congress was dissolved in early 2000, pending elections to the new National Assembly. In the presidential election held in July 2000, President Chávez was re-elected, winning 59 per cent of the vote. In the simultaneous election for the National Assembly, the Fifth Republic Movement (MVR) won nearly half of the seats; the other main parties represented were Democratic Action and Movement towards Socialism. Other parties won over a quarter of the seats. The National Assembly granted President Chávez the power to rule by decree in industrial and economic policy and matters concerning the civil service. An attempted military coup in April 2002 forced President Chávez to resign, but he was reinstated with his Cabinet two days later after popular protest.

In 2003 a deal, brokered by the Organisation of American States (OAS) between President Chávez and parts of the extra-parliamentary opposition, was finalised. This established the framework for a recall referendum to be held in August 2003 to ask the electorate if they wished to cut short Chávez's presidential term and hold immediate elections. A petition was delivered in August with more than three million signatures in favour of a referendum, but it was rejected by the electoral body. The referendum finally took place on 15 August 2004 and the result saw President Chávez remain in office.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Under the 1999 constitution a unicameral legislature, the National Assembly, was created, and the post of Vice-President instituted. The President, who is directly elected, serves a six-year term, which is renewable once only. The Vice-President is appointed by the President. Legislative power is exercised by the 165-member Asamblea Nacional (National Assembly), which is directly elected for a five-year term.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

President Hugo Chávez pledged in 1998 that his government would cut public spending and tackle tax evasion and corruption. Agriculture comprises large-scale commercial farms together with subsistence farming. Land distribution is uneven, with 1 per cent of farms occupying 46 per cent of arable land and 250,000 smallholdings occupying less than 2 per cent of arable land. Products of the tropical forest region include orchids, wild rubber, timber, mangrove bark, balata gum and tonka beans. Agricultural products include corn, bananas, cocoa beans, coffee, cotton, rice, maize, sugar, sesame, groundnuts, potatoes, tomatoes, other vegetables, sisal and tobacco. There is an extensive beef and dairy farming industry. The principal industry is petroleum and gas, which together account for 78 per cent of exports. There are eight refineries.

Aluminium is abundant while iron ore deposits in eastern Venezuela have been exploited. Other industry includes a wide variety of manufacturing and component assembly, principally petrochemicals, gold, diamonds and foodstuffs.

A week-long national strike took place in October and December 2002 crippling the oil industry and leading to fuel shortages. Shops, factories and universities re-opened in February 2003.

Apart from oil, the main exports are bauxite, iron ore, agricultural products and basic manufactures. The main imports are machinery and transport equipment, chemicals and foodstuffs. The USA and Colombia are the major trading partners.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 96,155 km of roads, some 32,308 km of them surfaced. Road and river communications have made railways of negligible importance in Venezuela except for carrying iron ore in the south-east, though the government is expanding the network, and there are now some 682 km of railway lines. The Orinoco is navigable for ocean-going ships and Venezuela's major ports include Maracaibo and Caracas.

MEDIA AND CULTURE

There are six daily newspapers including the daily titles El Mundo and El Nacional. Radio and television services are a mixture of state and privately owned.

Rómulo Gallegos (1884–1969) and Arturo Pietri (1906–2001) are two of Venezuela's most celebrated writers.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The terrain consists of flat delta in the north and south, divided by central highlands. The country is mountainous in the far north with elevation extremes ranging from 3,144 m (Ngoc Linh) at the highest point to 0 m (South China Sea) at the lowest. Vietnam has a humid climate dominated by a monsoon season that lasts from May to September in the north of the country, and from September to January in the south. Average temperatures in Hanoi range from 17°C in January to 29°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Vietnam became a unified state at the end of the 18th century, with the assistance of France, whose influence on the region grew. In 1899 the Indo-Chinese Union was proclaimed, uniting Vietnam with Cambodia and Laos under French rule. Vietnam was under Japanese occupation from 1940 to 1945; insurrection by Communist, Nationalist and Revolutionary forces led to a French withdrawal in 1954 and the division of the country into Communist North Vietnam and non-communist South Vietnam. War broke out between the two countries in 1961, and lasted until 1975; the USA entered the war on the side of South Vietnam. North and South Vietnam were reunified in 1976 as the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. The national flag, anthem and capital of North Vietnam were adopted, and Saigon was renamed Ho Chi Minh City.

INSURGENCY

In March 2002 the office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) withdrew from a programme to repatriate about 1,000 Montagnard refugees to Vietnam from camps in Cambodia, after claiming that the Vietnamese authorities were using unacceptable levels of coercion. However, this claim was rejected by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry. A week later the Cambodian government announced that it would allow more than 900 refugees to be moved from the camps to the USA, and in June the first group of 50 refugees left the Cambodian capital Phnom Penh on their way to asylum in the USA.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

Effective power lies with the Vietnamese Communist Party (VCP), its highest executive body being the Central Committee, elected by a Party Congress on a national basis. The Politburo and the Secretariat of the Central Committee exercise the real power. The constitution of 1992 reaffirmed Communist Party rule but also formalised free market economic reforms. A new National Assembly (Quoc-Hoi) was elected on 19 May 2002; the VCP holds 449 of the 500 seats. The President is elected for a five-year term by the members of the National Assembly.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

Vietnam experienced economic difficulties following the imposition of socialist reforms in the south after 1975.

However, economic reforms, known as 'Doi Moi' liberalisation, were instituted in 1986 and have had significant success. The state's share of control has been greatly reduced in most sectors, leading to significant improvement in agricultural production, with Vietnam becoming a major rice exporter. Industry has grown and now contributes around 37 per cent of GDP. Building materials, chemicals, machinery and foodstuffs are the main products.

Foreign investment has been actively encouraged and was further boosted by Vietnam's accession to ASEAN in August 1995, but the level of foreign investment has begun to fall in response to the lack of economic reform and the difficult local business environment. A stock exchange was opened in July 2000. Oil production has increased and large natural gas reserves have been found offshore, though these are also claimed by China.

A bilateral trade agreement between Vietnam and the USA was signed in July 2000. In June 2001, the World Bank granted Vietnam a US$250 million poverty reduction loan and the EU announced that it would commit €2,600 million in aid.

Vietnam has 93,300 km of roads, nearly 70,000 km of which are unsurfaced. It has over 3,000 km of railway, and 17,700 km of waterways. Chief ports include Da Nang, Haiphong, and Ho Chi Minh City.

MEDIA

There are many local television stations and one national station; some satellite channels are also available, though these, like all other media, are closely controlled by the government. The state-run radio network operates several national stations. The Communist Party and the People's Army both publish a daily newspaper, and there are also newspapers published in English and French.

Included in the state of Yemen are the offshore islands of Perim and Kamaran in the Red Sea, and Suqutra in the Gulf of Aden. The border with Saudi Arabia, except for the north-west corner, is unclear and is being delineated following an agreement between the two countries signed on 12 June 2000.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

A mountainous region divides the desert and the coastal regions of Yemen. Elevation extremes range from 3,760 m (Jabal an Nabi Shu'ayb) at the highest point to 0 m (Arabian Sea) at the lowest. The coastal area has high humidity, but rainfall throughout the country is unpredictable resulting in droughts and severe floods. Average temperatures in Aden range from 22°C in January to 37°C in June.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The area around modern-day Yemen became part of the Ottoman Empire in the early 16th century. Independence from the Ottoman Empire was initiated by the Zaydi dynasty in the 17th century and Aden came under British rule in 1839.

Turkish occupation of North Yemen (1872–1918) was followed by the rule of the Hamid al-Din dynasty until a revolution in 1962 overthrew the monarchy and the Yemen Arab Republic was declared. The People's Republic of South Yemen was set up in 1967 when the British government ceded power to the National Liberation Front, bringing to an end 129 years of British rule in Aden and some years of protectorate status in the hinterland. Negotiations towards merging the two states began in 1979 and unification was proclaimed on 22 May 1990. The constitution was approved by referendum in 1991.

A power struggle between the former Northern and Southern Yemen élites led to civil war in 1994. However, Aden was quickly captured by victorious Northern forces on 7 July, bringing the war to an end.

After the war a coalition government of the General People's Congress and the Islamic Islah was formed and the constitution amended. Gen. Saleh was elected president by the House of Representatives for a five-year term. Multiparty democracy, a free market economy and Sharia law are enshrined in the constitution.

A general election in April 1997 was won by the ruling General People's Congress (GPC). President Ali Abdullah Saleh was re-elected in the first direct presidential election held in 1999, winning 96.3 per cent of the vote. Legislative elections took place in April 2003, in which the GPC held on to the presidency and a large majority in the House of Representatives, having won 238 of the 301 seats. Bajammal was re-appointed prime minister at the head of a re-shuffled cabinet.

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The 1991 constitution was amended following a referendum in 2001. The President is directly elected and serves a seven-year term which may be renewed once only. The unicameral legislature, the House of Representatives (Majlis an-Nowab), has 301 directly-elected members, who serve a six-year term. In addition, there is an advisory Shura Council, which is appointed by the president and has 111 members.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The civil war, although damaging much of Yemen's economy and transport infrastructure, had little effect on oil production. An agreement was signed with the French oil company Total in September 1995 for the exploitation of liquefied natural gas over a 25-year period and the construction of a gas liquefaction plant. The principal imports are machinery and transport equipment, raw materials, and foodstuffs and livestock. Agriculture is the main occupation of the inhabitants. This is largely of a subsistence nature, sorghum, sesame, millet, wheat and barley being the chief crops. Exports include cotton, coffee, fruit, vegetables and hides.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Zambia lies on the plateau of Central Africa and elevation extremes range from 2,361 m (Mafinga Hills) at the highest point to 321 m (Zambezi River) at the lowest. The climate is tropical with an average temperature of 28°C all year.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Northern Rhodesia came under British rule in 1889. It achieved internal self-government when the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland was dissolved in 1963, and became an independent republic within the Commonwealth on 24 October 1964 under the name of Zambia.

Zambia was a one-party state (the United National Independence Party) from 1973 until 1990, when pressure from opposition groups led to a new constitution (in August 1991) and multiparty legislative and presidential elections in October 1991. The Movement for Multiparty Democracy (MMD) won a majority of seats in the parliament, and the MMD candidate Frederick Chiluba defeated Kenneth Kaunda in the presidential election; Kaunda was later stripped of his Zambian citizenship.

Presidential elections held on 27 December 2001 were won by MMD candidate Levy Mwanawasa with 28.7 per cent of the vote. In simultaneous legislative elections the MMD won 69 of the 150 elected seats in the National Assembly; the United Party for National Development (UPND) won 49 seats; and other parties and independents won 32 seats. A new Cabinet composed of the MMD was appointed in early 2002. Vice-President Enoch Kavindele was dismissed in 2003, and was succeeded on the same day by Nevers Mumba.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

In 1991, the MMD government began the transition from a state-controlled economy to a free market system. Privatisation has been encouraged, foreign exchange controls have been removed and the Kwacha has been floated on international stock markets. Price subsidies and tariffs have been lowered or abolished, but increased imports have affected manufacturing. In 2001, 85 per cent of the workforce were engaged in agriculture, which accounted for 14.9 per cent of GDP that year. Principal agricultural products are maize, sugar, groundnuts, cotton, livestock, vegetables and tobacco. The principal exports are copper and cobalt. The principal imports are industrial goods, machinery and transport equipment, fuel and foodstuffs.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The country is divided into eight provinces: Manicaland, Mashonaland Central, Mashonaland East, Mashonaland West, Masvingo, Matabeleland North, Matabeleland South and Midlands. Zimbabwe's terrain is mainly high plateau with mountains in the east. Elevation extremes range from 2,592 m (Inyangani) at the highest point to 162 m (Runde River) at the lowest. Average temperatures in Harare range from 7°C in May to 29°C in November.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Organised settlement of the region began at least 20,000 years ago and culminated in the establishment of a powerful settlement at Great Zimbabwe.

European colonisation of Zimbabwe began in 1890 when settlers forcibly acquired Shona lands, followed by the seizure of Ndebele lands in 1893. It became a self-governing colony under the name of Southern Rhodesia in 1923. A unilateral declaration of independence, under Prime Minister Ian Smith, in 1965 resulted in UN sanctions against the country, and was finally terminated in 1979. Following elections in February 1980, won by Robert Mugabe, the country became independent on 18 April 1980 as the Republic of Zimbabwe, a member of the British Commonwealth.

The independence constitution was amended in 1987, making the presidency an executive post. The President is popularly elected for a six-year term, he appoints the Cabinet and can veto parliamentary bills. The unicameral legislature, the House of Assembly, has 150 members: 120 elected, ten traditional chiefs and 20 others appointed by the president.

The most recent general election was held in June 2000. The Zimbabwe African National Union – Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF) won 62 of the 120 elective seats and the Movement for Democratic Change (MDC), a new opposition grouping formed by various civic groups and the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, won 57 seats. President Mugabe was re-elected in 2002 with 56.2 per cent of the vote, while Morgan Tsvangirai of the MDC gained 42.0 per cent. However, the integrity of the election was called into question by Tsvangirai who claimed that thousands of opposition supporters had been disenfranchised.

In June 2003 Tsvangirai was arrested and charged with treason.

LAND REFORM

Following independence, about 30 per cent of agricultural land remained in the possession of around 4,000 white farmers. They employed nearly 300,000 workers and accounted for about 70 per cent of the country's agricultural production and about a third of foreign currency earnings. A further 37 per cent of agricultural land was in the possession of 1.2 million black peasant farmers, mainly engaged in subsistence farming. Most of this land was located in less fertile, drought-prone regions. Land reform was designed to achieve a more equitable distribution of land. By 1997 the state had acquired 3.4 million hectares of land, but either left it fallow or distributed it to members of the government. The 1990 amendments to the 1980 constitution had made provision for the compulsory acquisition of farms, with compensation to be paid to the owners. The occupation of white-owned farms by protestors, led by former veterans of the war against the white minority regime, began in February 2000. The Supreme Court ordered the police to evict the black war veterans who had occupied around 600 white-owned farms. The police ignored the judgement with the support of President Mugabe. The House of Assembly then approved the Land Acquisition Act, which amended the constitution to enable the government to take over white-owned farms without compensation and redistribute them to landless blacks. A meeting of representatives of the British and Zimbabwean governments in April 2000 failed to resolve the crisis and in May the UK imposed an embargo on weapons sales to Zimbabwe, making financial support for land reform dependent on an end to the farm occupations.

The Supreme Court ruled late in 2000 that the compulsory land seizures were illegal and ordered the removal of squatters. The government rejected the ruling and accelerated the land acquisition programme. The Supreme Court then directed the President to produce a land distribution programme within six months and to protect white farmers whose land had been occupied by squatters. Following a Commonwealth meeting, Zimbabwe agreed to end the illegal land occupations and restore the rule of law in return for international assistance. But the Supreme Court, dominated by recent appointees of President Mugabe, issued an interim order reversing all previous rulings in order to allow the government to proceed with its fast-track land reform programme, and the government issued a decree that any farm given a 'notice of acquisition' would become state property immediately. The government would then be entitled to move settlers onto the land and the owner would be banned from conducting any farming on it. Mugabe ordered some 2,900 white farmers, whose farms had been earmarked to be seized and given to blacks under the government's 'fast-track land reform' programme, to cease work as of June 2002. In September the House of Assembly passed an amendment to the 1992 Land Acquisition Act reducing the time given to white farmers to vacate before being evicted from 90 days to 7. Zimbabwe was suspended from the Commonwealth in March 2002 and in September 2002 a Commonwealth committee, meeting to discuss Zimbabwe's political and economic crisis, failed to reach an agreement on new sanctions against President Mugabe. On 7 December 2003 Zimbabwe officially withdrew from the Commonwealth.

ECONOMY AND TRADE

The economy remains highly regulated and weak, unemployment is high and huge rises in the prices of basic commodities and fuel, caused by rampant inflation, have resulted in widespread strike action and protests. Agriculture accounted for 28 per cent of GDP in 1998 and two-thirds of the workforce are engaged in agriculture, but the activities of squatters and the government land acquisition campaign have had a dramatic effect on productivity at commercial farms, preventing the planting of many crops. Tobacco remains the most important crop in terms of export (Zimbabwe is the largest exporter in the world), and maize the most important for domestic consumption. Other crops include wheat, cotton, sugar, horticultural products, fruit and vegetables.

The manufacturing sector is very dependent on the agricultural sector for raw materials and on imports e.g. fuel oil, steel products and chemicals, as well as heavy machinery and items of transport. The mining sector, although contributing a relatively small portion to GDP, is important to the economy as a foreign exchange earner. Almost all mineral production is exported. Gold is the most important product; others are asbestos, diamonds, silver, nickel, copper, platinum, chrome ore, tin, iron ore and cobalt. There is a successful ferro-chrome industry and a substantial steel works which has been heavily subsidised by government. The main trading partners are South Africa and the UK.

GNI – US$6,200 million (2001); US$480 per capita (2001)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.6 per cent (1999)

INFLATION RATE – 58.5 per cent (1999)

TOTAL EXTERNAL DEBT – US$4,002 million (2000)

FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT – US$284 million
(1997–2000)

IMPORTS – US$2,803 million (1996)

EXPORTS – US$2,406 million (1996)

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£34,146,000	£29,294,000
Exports to UK	86,200,000	58,295,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Zimbabwe has at least 18,000 km of roads, over 8,500 km of which are surfaced. There are also 3,000 km of railways. Its main ports are at Binga and Kariba.

EDUCATION

Education is compulsory, and the language of instruction is English. Over 80 per cent of schools are government-aided. There are four universities; the University of Zimbabwe was founded in 1955.

ILLITERACY RATE – (m) 7.2 per cent; (f) 15.3 per cent (2000)

ENROLMENT (percentage of age group) – tertiary 7 per cent (1997)

MEDIA

The Zimbabwean government exercises strict control over the print and broadcast media, and some foreign journalists are prevented from reporting from within the country. The only television and radio stations are government controlled. There is one independent radio station that broadcasts in Zimbabwe. Two of the three daily newspapers are government run, they are The Herald and The Chronicle.

EXPLANATION OF TERMS

1. Ψ = seaport.
2. (m) = male; (f) = female.
3. Life expectancy figures are averages for males and females.
4. Infant mortality rate – total number of deaths of infants under one year old. Includes both male and female infants.
5. Paramilitaries are not included in the total military personnel figure for each country.
6. HIV/AIDS adult prevalence rate – this entry gives an estimate of the percentage of the total population of adults (aged 15–49) living with HIV/AIDS.
7. Population below poverty line – although strict definitions of poverty vary considerably between nations, this figure represents the percentage of the population whose income is less than US$1 a day.

8. Death Penalty:

No – abolished for all crimes (year in which death penalty was abolished in parenthesis). This also includes 'abolitionists in practice', i.e. countries that retain the death penalty but have not executed anybody in the last ten years.

Yes* – abolished but retained for exceptional circumstances (i.e. crimes under military law).

Yes – used as legal form of punishment.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Anguilla is a flat coralline island in the Caribbean, and is the most northerly of the Leeward islands. The climate is tropical, modified by north-east trade winds, with temperatures ranging from 24°C to 30°C throughout the year. Elevation extremes range from 65 m (Crocus Hill) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Anguilla has been a British colony since 1650. For much of its history it was linked administratively with St Kitts, but three months after the Associated State of Saint Christopher (St Kitts)-Nevis-Anguilla came into being in 1967, the Anguillans repudiated government from St Kitts. A Commissioner was installed in 1969 and in 1976 Anguilla was given a new status and separate constitution. Final separation from St Kitts and Nevis was effected in December 1980 and Anguilla reverted to a British dependency. A new constitution was introduced in 1982, providing for a Governor, an Executive Council comprising four elected Ministers and two ex-officio members (the Attorney-General and Deputy Governor), and a 12-member legislative House of Assembly, consisting of seven elected members, two nominated members, two ex-officio members (the Attorney-General and Deputy Governor) and presided over by a Speaker. The last general election was held in March 2000, with the next scheduled for June 2005.

Governor, HE Alan Huckle, aptd 2004

Deputy Governor, Roger Cousins, OBE, aptd 1997

ECONOMY

Low rainfall limits agricultural output and export earnings are mainly from sales of fish and lobsters. Tourism has developed rapidly in recent years and accounts for most of the island's economic activity.

GDP – US$95 million (1998); US$11,678 per capita (1998)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 4.1 per cent (1998)

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Trade – US$64 million deficit (2001)

Current Account – US$35 million deficit (2001)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE AND MEDIA

Highways total 105 km, of which 65 km are paved (1997). Ports and harbours include Blowing Point and Road Bay, and there are three airports. Around 12 radio stations and one television broadcast station serve the island.

BERMUDA

AREA – 20 sq. miles (52 sq. km)
 POPULATION – 63,400 (2002 estimate)
 CAPITAL – ΨHamilton (population, 2,277, 1994)
 CURRENCY – Bermuda dollar of 100 cents
 FLAG – British red ensign with the shield of arms in the fly
 LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 77 (2001)
 POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 1.7 per cent (1999)
 POPULATION DENSITY – 1,231 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The climate is subtropical, regulated by the Gulf Stream, with an average temperature of 23°C. All the islands are volcanic in origin, with hilly interiors, surrounded by coral reefs. Elevation extremes range from 76 m (Town Hill) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Internal self-government was introduced in 1968. There is a Senate of 11 members and an elected House of Assembly of 40 members. The Governor retains responsibility for external affairs, defence, internal security and the police, although administrative matters for the police service have been delegated to the Minister of Labour, Home Affairs and Public Safety. Independence from the UK was rejected in a referendum in August 1995. The last general election was held on 24 July 2003. The Progressive Labour Party won 22 of the 40 seats.

Governor and Commander-in-Chief, HE Sir John Vereker, KCB, aptd 2002

ECONOMY

The islands' economic structure is based on tourism and international company business, attracted by the low level of taxation and sophisticated telecommunications system.

Locally manufactured concentrates, perfumes, cut flowers and pharmaceuticals are the islands' leading exports.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£30,920,000	£41,983,000
Exports to UK	18,047,000	67,991,000

EDUCATION

Free elementary education was introduced in 1949. Free secondary education was introduced in 1965 for those children in the aided and maintained schools who were below the upper limit of the statutory school age of 18.

MEDIA

One daily and two weekly newspapers are published in Bermuda. Three commercial companies operate radio and television services, including a cable-television system.

BRITISH ANTARCTIC TERRITORY

AREA - 660,000 sq. miles (1,709,340 sq. km)

FLAG - British white ensign, without the cross of St

George, with the coat of arms of the territory in the fly

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The British Antarctic Territory (BAT) consists of the areas south of 60°S. latitude and bounded by longitudes 20°W. and 80°W. The territory includes the South Orkney Islands, the South Shetland Islands, the mountainous Antarctic Peninsula (highest point Mount Jackson, 3,183 m above sea level) and all adjacent islands, and the land mass extending to the South Pole.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Britain made its first territorial claim to part of the Antarctic in 1908. Since 1943, a permanent presence has been maintained which became the British Antarctic Survey (BAS) in 1962. In the same year, the BAT – originally administered as a Dependency of the Falkland Islands – became an Overseas Territory of the United Kingdom in its own right.

GOVERNMENT

The BAT is administered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), and has a full suite of laws, and legal and postal administrations. All activities are governed by the Antarctic Treaty of 1961, agreed with the objectives of keeping Antarctica demilitarised and to promote international scientific co-operation.

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

AREA - 59 sq. km

FLAG - Divided horizontally into blue and white wavy stripes, with the Union Flag in the canton and a crowned palm-tree over all in the fly

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT) comprises an archipelago of 2,300 islands that covers some 54,400 sq. km of ocean. The islands have a land area of only 60 sq. km and 698 km of coastline.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The British Indian Ocean Territory was established by an Order in Council in 1965 and included islands formerly administered from Mauritius and the Seychelles. The islands of Farquhar, Desroches and Aldabra became part of the Seychelles when it became independent in 1976; since then the Territory has consisted of the Chagos Archipelago only. Successive Mauritian governments have asserted a sovereignty claim to the islands, arguing that they were annexed illegally.

The Chagos Archipelago consists of six main groups of islands situated on the Great Chagos Bank. The largest and most southerly of the Chagos Islands is Diego

Garcia, a sand cay with a land area of about 44 sq. km, used as a joint naval support facility by Britain and the USA. In 2003, Diego Garcia was populated by around 3,000 UK and US military personnel and civilian contract employees.

The other main island groups of the archipelago, Peros Banhos (29 islands with a total land area of 6.5 sq. km) and Salomon (11 islands with a total land area of 3.2 sq. km) are uninhabited.

The islands' former inhabitants (the Ilois) were expelled between 1967 and 1973 to allow for the construction of the naval base, most being resettled in Mauritius. Following legal action by representatives of the Ilois, in November 2000 the High Court overturned the ordinance that had required the Ilois to seek permission to visit the territory, effectively granting them the right of return.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS

AREA - 153 sq. km

POPULATION - 21,000 (2001: Tortola 16,630; Virgin

Gorda 3,063; Anegada 204; Jost Van Dyke 176; other islands 181)

CAPITAL - ΨRoad Town (population, 3,983, 2001 estimate)

CURRENCY - US dollar (US$)

FLAG - British blue ensign with the shield of arms in the fly

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) - 76 (2001)

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) - 20 (2001)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE - 2.9 per cent (1999)

POPULATION DENSITY - 134 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The principal islands are Tortola, Virgin Gorda, Anegada and Jost Van Dyke. Apart from Anegada, which is a flat coral island, the British Virgin Islands are hilly, being an extension of the Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands archipelago. The highest point of elevation is 1,780 m (Sage Mountain) while the lowest is 0 m (Caribbean Sea).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Initially settled by the Arawak Indians from South America, the islands were named by Christopher Columbus on his second visit to the New World. Under the 1977 constitution the Governor, appointed by the Crown, remains responsible for defence and internal security, external affairs and the civil service but in other matters acts in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council. The Executive Council consists of the Governor as Chairman, one ex-officio member (the Attorney-General), the Chief Minister and four other ministers. The Legislative Council consists of a Speaker chosen from outside the Council, one ex-officio member (the Attorney-General), and 13 elected members returned from ten electoral districts.

Governor, HE Thomas Macan

ECONOMY

Tourism is the main industry but the offshore financial centre is gaining importance. Other industries include a rum distillery, three stone-crushing plants and factories manufacturing concrete blocks and paint. The major export items are fresh fish, gravel, sand, fruit and vegetables. Chief imports are building materials, machinery, cars and beverages.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£25,839,000	£13,944,000
Exports to UK	18,871,000	32,636,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The principal airport is on Beef Island, linked by bridge to Tortola, and an extended runway enables larger aircraft to call. There is a second airfield on Virgin Gorda and a third on Anegada. There are direct shipping services to the UK and the USA and fast passenger services connect the main islands by ferry.

CAYMAN ISLANDS

AREA – 264 sq. km

POPULATION – 44,144 (2003 estimate)

CAPITAL – ΨGeorge Town (population, 20,626, 1999 census)

CURRENCY – Cayman Islands dollar (CI$) of 100 cents

FLAG – British blue ensign with the arms on a white disc in the fly

LIFE EXPECTANCY (years) – 77 years (2003)

INFANT MORTALITY (per 1,000 births) – 4.8 (2003)

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.6 per cent (2002)

POPULATION DENSITY – 163 per sq. km (2002)

GNI – US$43,703 per capita (2002)

ANNUAL AVERAGE GROWTH OF GDP – 1.7 per cent (2002)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Cayman Islands comprise Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac, and Little Cayman. About 241 km south of Cuba, the islands are divided from Jamaica, 289 km to the south-east, by the Cayman Trench, the deepest part of the Caribbean Sea.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The colony derives its name from the Carib word for the crocodile, 'caymanas', which appeared in the log of an early English visitor to the islands, Sir Francis Drake. Permanent settlers followed the first land grant by Britain in 1734 and the islands were placed under direct control of Jamaica in 1863. When Jamaica became independent in 1962, the islands opted to remain under the British Crown.

The constitution provides for a Governor, a Legislative Assembly and a Cabinet, and allows a large measure of self-government. Unless there are exceptional reasons, the Governor accepts the advice of the Cabinet, which comprises three appointed official members and five ministers elected from the 15 elected members of the Assembly. The official members also sit in the Assembly. The Governor has responsibility for the police, civil service, defence and external affairs. The normal life of the Assembly is four years; a general election was scheduled for November 2004.

A constitutional review, begun in 2001, resulted in the Executive Council being renamed the Cabinet and the official appointments (incorporated in the Constitution for the first time) of a Leader of Government Business, Leader of the Opposition, and an Electoral Boundary Commission.

ECONOMY

With a complete absence of direct taxation, the Cayman Islands has become successful as an offshore financial centre. At the end of 2003 there were 474 banks and trust companies. In addition, there were 672 licensed insurance companies, 68,078 registered companies, 4,820 registered mutual funds, and 735 listings on the stock exchange. Tourism, with an emphasis on scuba diving, has also been developed successfully.

Import duties and fees have provided revenue enabling the government to undertake investment in education, health, social programmes and infrastructure.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£8,969,000	£8,694,000
Exports to UK	4,477,000	3,754,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are two main airports on the Cayman Islands and one small airfield on the island of Little Cayman. Georgetown is the main port and there are 785 km of surfaced roads.

FALKLAND ISLANDS

AREA – 4,700 sq. miles (12,173 sq. km)

POPULATION – 2,564 (2001 census)

CAPITAL – ΨStanley (population, 1,989, 2001 census)

CURRENCY – Falkland pound of 100 pence

FLAG – British blue ensign with the arms on a white disc in the fly

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 2.4 per cent (2004)

URBAN POPULATION – 84.0 per cent (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Falkland Islands consist of East Falkland (area 6,759 sq. km), West Falkland (5,413 sq. km) and over 700 small islands. Elevation extremes range from 705 m (Mt Usbourne) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The Falkland Islands have experienced a long history of occupation by European countries including France, Spain and the UK, which established its first settlement in 1766.

After Argentina declared independence from Spain, the Argentine government in 1820 proclaimed its sovereignty over the Falklands and a settlement was founded in 1826 but was subsequently destroyed by the USA in 1831. In 1833 occupation was resumed by the British for the protection of the seal-fisheries, and the islands were permanently colonised. Argentina continued to claim sovereignty over the islands (known to them as las Islas Malvinas), and invaded the islands in April 1982. A naval and military task-force dispatched from the UK recaptured the islands some seven weeks later on 14 June 1982. A British naval and military garrison of 1,265 personnel remains in the area.

Under the 1985 constitution, the Governor is advised by an Executive Council consisting of three elected members of the Legislative Council and two ex-officio members, the Chief Executive and the Financial Secretary. The Legislative Council consists of eight elected members and the same two ex-officio members.

ECONOMY

Since the establishment of an interim conservation and management fishing zone around the islands in 1987 and the consequent introduction of a licensing regime for vessels fishing within the 321 km zone, the economy has diversified. Income from the associated fishing activities, mainly for illex squid, is now the largest source of revenue. The increase in government revenue from fishing licences has led to the establishment of a substantial health, education and welfare system. Chief imports are provisions, alcoholic beverages, timber, clothing and hardware. In 2002, a consortium of oil companies, led by Global Petroleum, were awarded 10 exploration licences by the Falkland Islands Government. It is expected that substantial reserves of oil will be found within the next five years.

An EU-standard abattoir was opened in 2001, enabling the Falkland Islands to export meat to the European Union.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Gibraltar is a rocky promontory which juts southwards from the south-east coast of Spain, with which it is connected by a low isthmus. It is about 32 km (20 miles) from the opposite coast of Africa.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Gibraltar was captured in 1704, during the War of the Spanish Succession, by a combined Dutch and English force, and was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Utrecht (1713). This treaty stipulates that if Britain ever relinquishes colonial rights over Gibraltar the colony would return to Spain.

The 1969 constitution makes provision for certain domestic matters to devolve on a local government of ministers appointed from among elected members of the House of Assembly. The House of Assembly consists of an independent Speaker, 15 elected members, the Attorney-General and the Financial and Development Secretary.

The Governor retains responsibility for external affairs, defence, internal security and financial security, while the local government is responsible for other domestic matters. The Gibraltar government has recently been pressing for more local autonomy especially in its relations with the EU, and this has led to tension with the UK and Spanish governments. Gibraltar is part of the EU (with the UK government responsible for enforcing EU directives affecting Gibraltar) but is not a full member and is exempt from the Common Customs Tariff and the Common Agricultural Policy. Value added tax is not applied. The last elections were held on 27 November 2003 and the Gibraltar Social Democrats won 51.5 per cent of the vote and secured 8 seats in the House of Assembly. A coalition of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and the Liberal Party won 39.7 per cent and 7 seats in the Assembly. Talks between the UK and Spain on the future of Gibraltar resumed in July 2001, but have stalled since Gibraltar residents voted overwhelmingly by referendum in 2003 against a 'total shared sovereignty' arrangement.

ECONOMY

Gibraltar has an extensive shipping trade and is a popular shopping centre and tourist resort. The chief sources of revenue are the port dues, the rent of the Crown estate in the town, and duties on consumer items. A financial services industry is expanding, based on Gibraltar's status as an offshore financial centre.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Montserrat is a mountainous volcanic island with elevation extremes ranging from 914 m (Chances Peak) at the highest point to 0 m (Caribbean Sea) at the lowest.

The climate is tropical and the average temperature is 29°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Discovered by Columbus in 1493, Montserrat became a British colony in 1632. The first settlers were predominantly Irish indentured servants from St Christopher. France and Britain fought over the island during the 17th and 18th centuries but Montserrat was finally assigned to Great Britain in 1783.

A ministerial system was introduced in Montserrat in 1960. The Executive Council is presided over by the Governor and is composed of four elected members (the Chief and three other Ministers) and two ex-officio members (the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary). The four Ministers are appointed from the members of the political party or coalition holding the majority in the Legislative Council. The Legislative Council consists of the Speaker, two ex-officio members (the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary) and nine elected members. Following elections in April 2001 the elected element of the legislature comprised the following parties: New People's Liberation Movement 7; National Progressive Party 2.

Two-thirds of the population fled the island following the resumption of volcanic activity in 1995 and a disastrous eruption of the Soufrière Hills volcano in 1997. Acting Governor, HE Sir Howard Fergus apptd 2004

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Pitcairn is the chief of a group of islands situated about midway between New Zealand and Panama in the South Pacific Ocean. The other three islands of the group (Henderson, lying 168 km east-north-east of Pitcairn, Oeno, lying 120 km north-west, and Ducie, lying 470 km east) are all uninhabited. The climate is tropical, and the average temperature is 29°C

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Pitcairn became a British settlement under the British Settlement Act 1887 and was administered by the Governor of Fiji from 1952 until 1970, when the administration was transferred to the British High Commission in New Zealand and the British High Commissioner was appointed Governor. The local Government Ordinance of 1964 provides for a Council of ten members of whom six are elected.

Governor of Pitcairn, Henderson and Oeno Islands,
HE Richard Fell, CVO (British High Commissioner to New Zealand)

ECONOMY

The islanders live by subsistence gardening and fishing. Other than small fees charged for gun and driving licences there are no taxes and government revenue is derived almost solely from the sale of postage stamps and income from investments. Henderson Island, the largest of islands in the group, was declared a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1988.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

There are 6.4 km of roads on the islands, none of which are paved. Communication with the outside world is maintained by cargo vessels travelling between New Zealand and Panama which call at irregular intervals.

SOUTH GEORGIA AND THE SOUTH SANDWICH ISLANDS

AREA – 1,580 sq. miles (4,092 sq. km)

POPULATION – No permanent population

CAPITAL – Ψ King Edward Point (Administrative Centre)

CURRENCY – Pound Sterling

FLAG – British blue ensign, with the shield of arms in the fly

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

South Georgia is an island 1,390 km east-south-east of the Falkland Islands. More than half of the island is covered by permanent ice with many large glaciers reaching the sea at the head of fjords. The main mountain range is the Allardyce and elevation extremes range from 2,960 m (Mt Paget) at the highest point to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean) at the lowest. The South Sandwich Islands, lying some 750 km miles south-east of South Georgia, consist of a chain of 11 volcanic islands some 350 km long. Some of these islands are still active. The climate is wholly Antarctic, and in the late winter the Islands may be surrounded by pack ice.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Britain annexed South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands by Letters Patent in 1908 and since then they have been under continuous British occupation apart from a brief period during the Falklands war in 1982. Following the conflict, a small British Army garrison was maintained at King Edward Point on South Georgia, but this was withdrawn in March 2001. The population comprises the government's marine officer and the staff of the scientific research station operated by the British Antarctic Survey at King Edward Point, the curators of the museum at Grytviken and staff of the British Antarctic Survey at Bird Island, to the north-west of South Georgia.

The present constitution came into effect in 1985. It provides for a Commissioner who, for the time being, is the officer administering the government of the Falkland Islands.

Commissioner for South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, Howard Pearce, CVO, apptd 2002

ECONOMY

Some fishing takes place in adjacent waters, and there is a potential source of income from harvesting finfish and krill. In 1993 the UK government decreed an extension of Crown sovereignty and jurisdiction from 19 km around South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands to 321 km around each in order to preserve marine stocks.

The islands receive income from postage stamps produced in the UK, sale of fishing licences, and harbour and landing fees from tourist vessels. Tourism from specialised cruise ships is increasing.

ST HELENA AND DEPENDENCIES

AREA – 47 sq. miles (122 sq. km)
 POPULATION – 7,417 (2004 estimate)
 CAPITAL – ΨJamestown (population, 884, 1998)
 CURRENCY – St Helena pound (£) of 100 pence
 FLAG – British blue ensign with the shield of arms in the fly
 POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 0.8 per cent (1998)
 POPULATION DENSITY – 40 per sq. km (1998)
 URBAN POPULATION – 39.2 per cent (1998)
 ILLITERACY RATE – 3.6 per cent (1998)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

St Helena is situated in the South Atlantic Ocean, 1,500 km south of the Equator. The islands are 16.8 km long and around 10.5 km wide. Elevation extremes range from 2,060 m (St Mary's Peak on Tristan da Cunha) to 0 m (Atlantic Ocean). The climate is mild and the annual average temperature is 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

St Helena is believed to have been discovered by the Portuguese navigator João da Nova in 1502. It was used as a port of call for vessels of all nations trading to the East until it was annexed by the Dutch in 1633. It was never occupied by them, however, and the English East India Company seized it in 1659.

From 1815 to 1821 the island was lent to the British government as a place of exile for the Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte who died in St Helena on 5 May 1821, and in 1834 it was annexed to the British Crown. The Zulu Chief, Dinizulu, was exiled to the island in 1890 and up to 6,000 Boer prisoners were held there between 1900 and 1903.

The government of St Helena is administered by a Governor, with the aid of a Legislative Council, consisting of a Speaker, three ex-officio members (Chief Secretary, Financial Secretary and Attorney-General) and 12 elected members. Five committees of the Legislative Council are responsible for the overseeing of the activities of the five biggest government departments, and have in addition a wide range of statutory and administrative functions. The Governor is also assisted by an Executive Council of the three ex-officio members and the chairmen of the Council committees.

Governor, HE Michael Clancy, apptd 2004

ECONOMY

St Helena was intended as a maritime base, with an economy dedicated to the provision of supplies for shipping and the local garrison, rather than as a self-sufficient colony. St Helena still receives an annual grant from the UK, the only UK Overseas Territory to do so, with the exception of Montserrat. The only significant export is canned and frozen fish.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE AND MEDIA

St Helena has 138 km of roads, most of which are single track. James's Bay, on the north-west of the island is the principal port.

Television programmes are received in St Helena via satellite and distributed by cable. The island also has one radio station.

ASCENSION ISLAND

AREA – 34 sq. miles (88 sq. km)
 POPULATION – 980 (2001 census)
 CAPITAL – ΨGeorgetown
 CURRENCY – Currency is that of St Helena or the UK

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The small island of Ascension lies in the South Atlantic some 1,200 km north-west of St Helena. It is a rocky peak of purely volcanic origin. The highest point (Green Mountain), some 860 m, is covered with lush vegetation.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Ascension is said to have been discovered by João da Nova in 1501 and two years later was visited on Ascension Day by Alphonse d'Albuquerque, who gave the island its present name. It was uninhabited until the arrival of Napoleon in St Helena in 1815 when a small British naval garrison was stationed on the island. As HMS Ascension it remained under the supervision of the Board of Admiralty until 1922, when it was made a dependency of St Helena.

The British Foreign Secretary appoints the Administrator who is responsible to the Governor resident in St Helena. There is a small police force, bank and post office. In August 2002, a plebiscite was held with residents to decide on a form of democratic self-government for the island, and an Island Council was formed as a result. A general election to appoint members to the Council took place in November. The Council consists of seven elected members plus the Director of Financial Services and the Attorney-General, and is chaired by the Governor, represented locally by the Administrator.

Administrator, Andrew Kettlewell, apptd 2002

ECONOMY AND TRADE

A new fiscal regime was introduced in 2002, and finance for public and common services is raised through taxation. Healthcare and schooling are provided free of charge to local tax payers.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Ascension has 40 km of roads, and there is a monthly shipping service and a flight every five days by RAF Tristars which transit Ascension en route to the Falkland Islands.

TRISTAN DA CUNHA

AREA – 38 sq. miles (98 sq. km)
 POPULATION – 277 (2003 estimate)
 CAPITAL – ΨEdinburgh of the Seven Seas
 CURRENCY – Currency is that of the UK

FLAG – Tristan da Cunha's own flag was raised on 18 November 2002 and the coat of arms reads: 'Our Faith is our Strength'.

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

Tristan da Cunha is the chief island of a group of islands in the South Atlantic which lies some 2,333 km south-south-west of St Helena. All the islands are volcanic and steep-sided with cliffs or narrow beaches. The highest point of elevation is 2,060 m (Queen Mary's Peak) while the lowest is 0 m (Atlantic Ocean).

HISTORY AND POLITICS

Tristan da Cunha was discovered in 1506 by the Portuguese admiral Tristão da Cunha. In 1760 a British naval officer visited the islands and gave his name to Nightingale Island. In 1816 the group was annexed to the British Crown and a garrison was placed on Tristan da Cunha, but this force was withdrawn in 1817. Corporal William Glass remained at his own request with his wife and two children and this party, with two others, formed a settlement. In 1827 five women from St Helena, and afterwards others from Cape Colony, joined the party.

Due to its position on a main sailing route the colony thrived, with an economy based on trading with whalers, sealers and other passing ships. However, the replacement of sail by steam and the opening of the Suez Canal in the late 19th century led to decline.

In October 1961 a volcano, believed to have been extinct for thousands of years, erupted and the danger of further volcanic activity led to the evacuation of inhabitants to the UK. An advance party returned to Tristan da Cunha in 1963 and subsequently the main body of the islanders returned to the island.

GOVERNMENT

In 1938 Tristan da Cunha and the neighbouring islands of Inaccessible, Nightingale (both uninhabited) and Gough were made dependencies of St Helena. They are administered by the Governor of St Helena through a resident Administrator, with headquarters at Edinburgh. Under a constitution introduced in 1985, the Administrator is advised by an Island Council of eight elected members, of whom one must be a woman, and three appointed members. Elections are held every three years. Administrator, Mike Hentley, apptd 2004

ECONOMY

The island is almost financially self-sufficient; UK government aid finances training scholarships and a resident medical officer at the hospital. The main industries are crayfish fishing, fish-processing and agriculture.

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

Tristan da Cunha has 20 km of roads. Scheduled visits to the island are restricted to about six calls a year by fishing vessels from Cape Town and annual calls of the RMS St Helena and the SA Agulhas, also from Cape Town, which carry passengers, cargo and mail to and from the island.

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

AREA – 497 sq. km (191.2 sq. miles)

POPULATION – 20,014 (2001 census estimate)

CAPITAL – Ψ Grand Turk (Cockburn Town; population, 3,691, 1994)

CURRENCY – US dollar (US$)

FLAG – British blue ensign with the shield of arms in the fly

POPULATION GROWTH RATE – 3.3 per cent (2004)

POPULATION DENSITY – 37 per sq. km (2001)

CLIMATE AND TERRAIN

The Turks and Caicos Islands are about 80 km south-east of the Bahamas, of which they are geographically an extension. There are over 30 islands, of which eight are inhabited, covering an estimated area of 430 sq. km. The principal island and seat of government is Grand Turk. Climate is marine tropical moderated by trade winds and the average annual temperature is 27°C.

HISTORY AND POLITICS

The islands were part of the UK's Jamaican colony until Jamaica's independence in 1962, when they assumed the status of a separate crown colony.

A constitution was introduced in 1988, and amended in 1993, which provides for an Executive Council and a Legislative Council. The Executive Council is presided over by the Governor and comprises the Chief Minister and five elected Ministers, together with the ex-officio Chief Secretary and Attorney-General.

At the general election of 24 April 2003, the People's Democratic Movement won seven seats and the Progressive National Party six seats in the Legislative Council.

Governor, HE Jim Poston, apptd 2002

ECONOMY

The most important industries are fishing, tourism and offshore finance. The islands were visited by 151,000 tourists in 2000, although tourism fell by 6 per cent in 2002.

Trade with UK	2002	2003
Imports from UK	£1,167,000	£1,514
Exports to UK	495,000	344,000

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE

The principal airports are on the islands of Grand Turk and Providenciales. Air services link Providenciales with London, Miami, Fort Lauderdale, Atlanta, Jamaica, the Bahamas, Haiti and the Dominican Republic. An internal air service provides a regular service between the principal islands. There are direct shipping services to the USA (Miami). The islands also have a total of 121 km of roads, 24 km of which are surfaced.

BRITISH AFFAIRS

SEPTEMBER 2003

4. In Birmingham, the Bullring shopping centre was officially opened after 2½ years of construction and a total cost of £550 million, as part of the city's urban regeneration programme. The first phase of the Hutton Inquiry closed. 7. A mock chemical attack was carried out at Bank underground station in London as a training exercise for the emergency services. 8. Defence Secretary Geoff Hoon announced that 1,200 extra British troops would be sent to the south of Iraq. 9. The Government published a White Paper on the future constitution of Europe which supported the appointment of a full-time chairman for the Council of Ministers and the use of Qualified Majority Voting (QMV) for EU business. 11. Commander Richard Farrington and his officers were reprimanded after pleading guilty at a court martial in Portsmouth to a range of charges relating to £39 million of damage caused to HMS Nottingham when it ran aground on Wolf Rock, off the coast of Australia, in 2002. 14. An investigation started on 30 June by the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) into alleged fee-fixing among four leading public schools was extended to include a further 700 independent schools. 15. The Hutton Inquiry started a second round of witness-calling with Sir Richard Dearlove, the chief of MI6, and Greg Dyke, Director-General of the BBC, giving evidence. 16. Six platforms at King's Cross station had to be closed during the morning rush hour after a train derailed at low speed in the station; no one was injured. 18. The Times reported that the headmaster of Winchester College had admitted in a letter to parents that exchanging information on fees had been standard practice throughout the independent schools sector for many years, in a possible infringement of the 1998 Competition Act. Andrew Gilligan, the BBC reporter who interviewed Dr Kelly, was called to give further evidence to the Hutton Inquiry. 20. Lord Williams of Mostyn, life peer, privy councillor and leader of the House of Lords died unexpectedly at his Gloucestershire home of a heart attack aged 62. 22. The Liberal Democrat Party began its annual conference in Brighton. 23. The Office of the Rail Regulator (ORR) approved a revised budget submitted by Network Rail to spend £24.5 billion over the next five years on the rail network. 25. The Hutton Inquiry completed its main public proceedings. 30. Tony Blair addressed the Labour Party Conference in Bournemouth, stating that there would be no reversal on the Party's schedule of reforms, including policies on foundation hospitals and tuition fees, and that he had no regrets over the conflict in Iraq.

OCTOBER 2003

1. A high court judge ruled that under European Law NHS patients on waiting lists could have surgery in European hospitals, refunded by the NHS, if they had faced an 'undue delay' receiving treatment in the UK. 2. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority announced major reforms for secondary education, including tailoring education to each individual's aptitude and ability and allowing pupils to study at their own speed, with courses such as GCSEs not having a pre-determined time span. 4. Pope John Paul II held his first private audience with the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, at the Vatican. The Strategic Rail Authority admitted that up to 500 new railway carriages, commissioned after legislation insisted on safer carriages, would have to be held in storage as there was not enough power to run them on the network. 5. Allegations were made throughout the media that the Conservative leader Iain Duncan Smith improperly claimed allowances for 15 months for his wife, Betsy, after he became party leader. 10. John Armit, the Chief Executive of Network Rail, announced that it would take control of all three maintenance contracts surrendered by Jarvis, one of the main contractors used by Network Rail, effectively putting 40 per cent of the country's track back under public control. Lord Bach, Minister of Defence Procurement, admitted in a written parliamentary answer, that on 21 December 1990, three-and-a-half weeks before the 1991 Gulf War began, the MoD was told that tests on mice had produced serious side effects when anthrax and whooping cough vaccines were given together. Since the war thousands of soldiers had reported suffering from 'Gulf War Syndrome', believed to be caused by the vaccination programme. 15. Parliamentary Standards Commissioner Sir Philip Mawer began a formal investigation into Iain Duncan Smith's employment of his wife as diary secretary. 19. The Times reported a study by Datamonitor which found that 500 call centres in Britain had installed technology that filtered customers according to whether their postcodes represented 'poor' or 'wealthy' areas. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, was admitted to Hammersmith Hospital in west London suffering from an irregular heartbeat, he was later discharged and returned home to rest. The second London underground derailment in 48 hours happened when a Northern Line train derailed at Camden station injuring seven passengers. 20. NHS hospital consultants voted in favour of a new contract under which they would work a 40-hour week and receive a 20 per cent pay rise. 21. The House of Lords again overturned the Government's attempt to ban fox hunting, with Peers voting 261 to 49 for a regulated system. Private correspondence of the late Diana, Princess of Wales, was published in The Mirror; the letters were obtained by the newspaper after it bought the serialisation rights to a book written by Paul Burrell, Diana's former butler. 22. New guidelines were published by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) on antenatal healthcare, aiming to standardise care across the country and offer earlier scans and Down's Syndrome screening to all pregnant women. 23. The MP for Glasgow Kelvin, George Galloway, was expelled from the Labour Party after he was found guilty of four out of five charges of bringing the party into disrepute; including inciting British troops to disobey orders in Iraq. Dame Brenda Hale was appointed to Britain's highest court becoming the first female judge to be made a law lord, or Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. 24. Concorde flew its last flight after being decommissioned by British Airways. Network Rail announced that it planned to take all remaining contracted-out track maintenance work back in-house by mid 2004. Prince William issued a statement asking Paul Burrell, the former butler to his late mother, to bring an end to the revelations regarding her private life. 29. Iain Duncan Smith resigned as leader of the Conservative Party after losing a vote of confidence by 90 votes to 75. 30. Eighteen-year-old paratrooper, Christopher Finney, became the youngest serviceman to be awarded the George Cross for saving a comrade in a 'friendly-fire' incident in the war in Iraq. The MoD's annual report and accounts were published revealing losses of £1.7 billion; the Auditor-General, Sir John Bourne, stated that the losses were significant.

NOVEMBER 2003

1. Fifteen out of 73 postal areas in Britain were closed due to unofficial strike action by 30,000 members of the Communication Workers Union (CWU). 2. Despite formal complaints and threats of schism within the Church, the consecration of the first openly gay bishop in the Anglican Communion took place in the US when Gene Robinson became Bishop of New Hampshire. 3. At Durham Castle the Deputy Prime Minister, John Prescott, launched a Labour campaign to encourage electors to participate in three referendums to create three new regional assemblies for the North-East, the North-West and Yorkshire and Humberside. 5. Michael Howard was elected leader of the Conservative Party. 6. The House of Lords voted 150 to 100 against Labour plans to create Foundation Hospitals. 8. The Countess of Wessex gave birth to a baby girl, Lady Louise Alice Windsor, eighth in line to the throne, at the NHS Frimley Park Hospital in Surrey. 18. The US President, George W. Bush, arrived to begin his four-day state visit, the first state visit by a US President since Woodrow Wilson in 1918. 20. Roger Short, the UK consul general in Turkey, was killed in a terrorist bomb blast at the UK consulate in Istanbul. 26. The Government's 2003–4 legislative programme was delivered in the Queen's speech at the state opening of Parliament.

DECEMBER 2003

3. The Queen arrived in Nigeria to attend the Commonwealth summit, her first visit to the country since it became independent. 5. The Independent Schools Council (ISC) issued a code of practice to all its 1,280 members banning the exchange of information on fees and costs between schools. 9. Britain's first toll motorway, running for 27 miles around the edge of Birmingham, was officially opened to vehicles. 22. Mark Henderson, a British tourist, was released alongside four Israelis, after being held hostage for 102 days in the Colombian jungle by Marxist guerrillas. The world's biggest passenger liner, the Queen Mary 2, set sail from its French shipyard after being handed over to its British owners, Cunard Line. 25. Princess Alice, the Queen's aunt and oldest member of the British Royal family, celebrated her 102nd birthday. 26. The Health Secretary John Reid announced that an additional £12 million was to be allocated to train medical staff working with the terminally ill. 28. The Department for Transport made a joint announcement with the Home Office that armed, plain-clothes agents, or 'sky marshals', were to be deployed on British flights for the first time. 31. British Airways flight 223 from Heathrow was escorted by fighter jets to a remote area of tarmac when it came to land at Dulles Airport in Washington following a security alert.

JANUARY 2004

1. New rules were introduced allowing the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) to automatically fine car owners who fail to renew their car tax within 6 weeks of date of expiry of their tax disc. British Airways flight

223 to Washington was cancelled as a security measure after British and US security forces received intelligence of a plot to hijack a BA airliner. 4. On his way home from his Christmas break Tony Blair made a surprise visit to British forces stationed in Basra in southern Iraq; during his address he stated that it was expected that several thousand soldiers would remain in Iraq until at least 2006. 5. A report published by the European Commission showed that more Britons were working longer than the weekly maximum of 48 hours than when the EU legislation was introduced 11 years ago. 6. The Royal Coroner, Michael Burgess, opened two separate inquests into the deaths of Diana, Princess of Wales, and Dodi Fayed in a car crash on 31 August 1997 and asked the Metropolitan Police Commissioner Sir John Stevens to make enquiries into the incident. Two MPs, David Chidgey and Richard Ottaway, were cleared of contempt of Parliament after being accused of using prompts from a witness when questioning Dr Kelly at the Foreign Affairs Committee. Downing Street named Canon Stephen Cottrell as the Bishop of Reading after Canon Jeffrey John stood down in 2003 following objections within the church concerning his homosexuality. The National Executive Committee voted 22 to 2 in favour of re-appointing Ken Livingstone, Mayor of London, to the Labour Party so that he could become the party's official candidate for the Mayoral elections in June. 7. US Officials announced that all British travellers to the USA with passports issued after 26 October 2004 would need a visa under new security measures imposed by the US Congress. 8. It was announced in The Times that the Ministry of Defence had paid out its first compensation awards to the families of three men in Iraq who died after British troops allegedly tortured them whilst held in custody in Iraq. Pierre-Richard Prosper, the US Ambassador at Large for War Crimes, agreed that the nine British terrorist suspects held in Cuba could be repatriated, as long as they were 'managed' by British authorities. A new Higher Education Bill was published which would abolish the £1,125-a-year advance tuition fee by 2006 and allow universities to set their own fees of up to £3,000 a year. Students from the poorest 20 per cent of homes would be exempt from paying the first £1,200 of their fees and would also qualify for bursaries of at least £300 at universities charging the full £3,000. 12. The Health Secretary John Reid announced that seven private companies had been awarded contracts to run 24 mobile specialist treatment centres in England; the centres would offer a limited range of treatments, including ophthalmology units offering cataract operations, and would travel to areas where waiting lists are longest. 22. Steve Gough, also known as the 'naked Rambler', completed his Land's End to John o' Groats solo nude hike; he was arrested 15 times and spent nearly five months in prison. The National Audit Office revealed that four defence projects, including the construction of three Astute submarines, the Eurofighter aircraft, Brimstone anti-armour missiles and 18 Nimrod MRAs, were running so late and over-budget that the total cost for the projects had risen by £2.7 billion. 23. Charles Kennedy, leader of the Liberal Democrats, formally dismissed Dr Jenny Tonge from her position as party spokeswoman for international development, after she expressed sympathy to terrorists at a pro-Palestinian lobby on 21 January; she will stand down as MP for Richmond Park at the next election. The Health Secretary John Reid announced that patients infected with hepatitis C after receiving blood from the NHS would be eligible for compensation of £20,000, with a further £25,000 available to patients with the more advanced stage of the disease. 27. At a second reading, the Higher Education Bill was passed by the House of Commons by a majority of just five votes. 28. Lord Hutton's report on the death of Dr David Kelly was published clearing Tony Blair and the Government of behaving duplicitously in revealing Dr Kelly's name to the media. The report strongly criticised BBC governance, stating that editorial control and complaints procedures were defective. It criticised the MoD for not informing Dr Kelly that he had been identified as the 'source' prior to publication and stated that BBC allegations that Downing Street had knowingly doctored an intelligence dossier were unfounded. The report concluded that Dr Kelly had killed himself after a 'severe loss of self esteem'. Gwyn Davies resigned as BBC chairman following the findings of the Hutton report. Snow fell throughout Britain with temperatures reaching  $-15^{\circ}\text{C}$  in some parts of the country. 29. Greg Dyke, the director-general of the BBC, resigned from his position following the results of the Hutton Inquiry. 30. Andrew Gilligan, the journalist who originally made the claims on the BBC Today programme that the Government had 'sexed-up' a dossier on weapons of mass destruction resigned from the BBC, stating that the BBC had been served a grave injustice by the Hutton Inquiry.

FEBRUARY 2004

3. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, set up an inquiry, to be led by Lord Butler of Brockwell, into the reliability of pre-war intelligence on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. 6. Nineteen Chinese migrant workers drowned while picking cockles at night in Morecambe Bay, 16 workers were rescued but it was not known how many were still missing. The RMT transport union voted 42 to 8 in favour of allowing union branches to affiliate to other parties if they felt they better represented their interests; five branches had already affiliated to the Scottish Socialist Party and two more had requested to do so. 7. Labour took the unprecedented step of expelling the RMT transport union from the party following the union's decision to allow branches to affiliate to other political parties. 9. The government announced plans for the formation of a new FBI-style police force combining the functions of the National Crime Squad (NCS), the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS), the investigative arm of Customs and Excise and the Home Office's Immigration Service into one body: the Serious Organised Crime Agency. The Queen approved reforms put forward by Lord Falconer, the Lord Chancellor, to appoint a moderator and an additional body made up of three privy councillors to oversee Westminster Abbey and the five other *Royal Peculiar*s, distancing the monarch from the role as sole authority. 10. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, met the Libyan Foreign Minister, Abdul Rahman Mohammad Shalgam, at Downing Street. 12. The Health Minister, Rosie Winterton, announced that the cost of a NHS prescription would rise by 10p to £6.40 in England from 1 April 2004. 17. All SAS One-Step pregnancy testing kits used by the NHS were recalled by the Medicines Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) after the Co. Durham and Darlington NHS Trust discovered abnormally high false negative readings during a routine quality control check. Estimates suggested that between 15,000 and 20,000 women could have been affected. 18. The Chancellor Gordon Brown unveiled a national voluntary work scheme for young people which would allow school leavers to take a gap year to help their local communities; participants would receive help with basic living expenses and a possible contribution towards university or college fees. 19. The Foreign Secretary Jack Straw announced that five British men held for more than two years without trial at the Guantanamo Bay camp in Cuba would be flown back to the UK. 23. The Home Secretary David Blunkett announced that citizens of countries joining the EU on 1 May 2004 would be free to work in Britain, provided they registered their employment, but would not be eligible for benefits, apart from tax credits and housing benefit, until they had worked for at least a year. 25. The Home Secretary David Blunkett announced that MI5's budget would rise by 50 per cent to £300 million to support a recruitment drive to expand staff numbers to around three thousand. 26. The former International Development Secretary, Clare Short, alleged on the Radio 4 Today programme that Britain had spied on Kofi Annan, the Secretary-General of the UN prior to the war in Iraq. 27. Snow and extreme temperatures spread across the country forcing more than 1,000 schools to close.

MARCH 2004

9. Five Britons arrived in Britain after being released from Camp X-Ray in Guantanamo Bay. The five men were taken to Paddington Green high-security police station and one man was released immediately after questioning. 10. The remaining four detainees who arrived back in Britain from Guantanamo Bay were released without charge. 17. In the 2004 Budget the Chancellor Gordon Brown announced detailed proposals based on Sir Michael Lyons' report of 15 March to cut 54,000 posts by 2008 from the Department for Work and Pensions, Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise in a move to reduce administration costs. During an adventure-training exercise in Mexico partly funded by the Armed Forces, 13 British cavers, including nine military personnel, became trapped 120ft underground by unseasonable floodwater. 25. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, met with Libyan leader Colonel Gaddafi in Libya after a 20-year deadlock in diplomatic relations between the two countries. In a six-hour operation, a team of British cavers were rescued, after being trapped underground by floodwater for eight days in Mexico. 26. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, called for the new constitution for Europe to be agreed within three months and, if possible, prior to the European elections on 10 June. 28. The Home Secretary, David Blunkett, suspended all immigration applications from Romania and Bulgaria and promised an inquiry, following allegations that immigration officials were allowing bogus claims to be processed from these areas. 31. The Higher Education Bill passed through to the House of Lords by a majority of 28 after a Labour back bench amendment to strike out the principle of varying fees was defeated by 316 votes to 288 in the House of Commons. The Civil Partnerships Bill was published to enable homosexual couples to register their partnerships in a civil ceremony and receive legal rights similar to those of a married couple. The first ten hospitals; Basildon and Thurrock; Bradford Teaching Hospital; Countess of Chester; Doncaster and Bassetlaw; Homerton University; Moorfields Eye Hospital; Peterborough & Stamford; Stockport; Royal Devon and Exeter and Royal Marsden assumed their status as Foundation Hospitals.

APRIL 2004

1. The Immigration Minister Beverley Hughes resigned after admitting that she had been warned over a year previously by Labour Deputy Chief Whip Bob Ainsworth that the Home Office was approving visa claims from eastern Europe backed by forged documents. The Prime Minister replaced Ms Hughes with Work and Pensions Minister Des Browne. 5. Thames Trains was fined a record £2 million for its part in the 1999 Paddington rail disaster in which 31 people died. The judge ruled that the company had failed to limit the risk to passengers by not correcting faults with its driver-training programme. 17. Research by the Audit Commission found there were at least 3.5 million excess names on GP lists in England alone, as practices receive NHS funds based on the number of patients registered, doctors were warned that they would face prosecution if they had deliberately failed to strike-off names. 19. Tony Blair announced in the House of Commons that the British people would be given the chance to vote on whether to adopt a European constitution. 22. On security advice from MI5, MPs voted in favour of spending £1.3 million on a permanent glass security barrier to be erected in the House of Commons between the public gallery and the rest of the chamber. 23. Universities such as Durham, Nottingham, Warwick, Edinburgh, London and Bristol warned that thousands of candidates would face rejection due to unprecedented pressure on places due to an increase in the number of students achieving high grades. 25. The car of French National Front leader, Jean-Marie Le Pen was pelted with eggs and rubbish by protesters after he left the launch of the British National Party's European election campaign at a hotel in Altrincham. 26. A letter signed by 52 signatories including former ambassadors, high commissioners and governors was sent to the Prime Minister, Tony Blair, expressing concern regarding foreign policy on the Middle East and Iraq. 27. Market analysts Mintel published figures showing that a quarter of seven to ten-year olds own mobile phones. The rail maintenance company Jarvis admitted joint liability with Network Rail for the Potters Bar rail crash, enabling compensation claims to proceed. 28. New NHS guidelines developed in consultation with the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the Collaborating Centre for Women's and Children's Health recommended that NHS doctors should not automatically arrange caesareans on request without legitimate medical reasons.

MAY 2004

2. Senior investigators from the Royal Military Police flew to Cyprus to interview soldiers from the Queen's Lancashire Regiment following claims that members of the regiment had been involved in mistreating Iraqi prisoners. 6. The Government announced that John Scarlett, an MI6 intelligence officer and former head of the Joint Intelligence Committee, was to be the next chief of MI6 on the retirement of Sir Richard Dearlove in July 2004. Dr Jeffrey John was installed as the Dean of St Albans following his withdrawal from the post of Bishop of Reading in 2003 after protests concerning his homosexuality. 9. Prime Minister, Tony Blair, apologised for the abuse of Iraqi prisoners in British custody and stated that those responsible would be punished according to Army disciplinary rules. 11. Eight people were killed and more than 40 injured in Glasgow when a plastics factory collapsed following a huge explosion on the ground floor. A report leaked from the International Red Cross stated that officials within the US and UK armed forces had ignored its repeated and detailed complaints, regarding the abuse of prisoners held in custody in Iraq, throughout a period of many months. Figures published by Christian Research compiled on rural ministries showed that attendance at Anglican churches in the countryside had decreased by more than a third in the last ten years. 19. Prime Minister Tony Blair was hit by a missile made of purple flour during Question Time in the House of Commons; the missile was thrown by two protesters in the public gallery who were there at the invitation of Lady Golding. A review of Commons security already underway by MI5 and Scotland Yard was accelerated following the incident. 24. Britain and the USA tabled a draft United Nations Security Council resolution outlining their plans for the transfer of responsibility for all aspects of statehood in Iraq, excluding security, to an interim Iraqi government on 30 June. 29. Some 20,000 people living in caravans on local authority sites won the same tenancy rights as council house tenants after a European court in Strasbourg ruled that summary evictions, without justification or the right to appeal, were against their human rights.

JUNE 2004

3. More than a thousand flights were delayed or cancelled when the computer system at West Drayton air traffic control centre failed. 6. A BBC cameraman was killed and the BBC's security correspondent, Frank Gardner, was seriously injured in an attack blamed on Islamist extremists in the Saudi Arabian capital, Riyadh. 10. European parliamentary, local and London mayoral elections took place. In the London mayoral elections, Labour candidate Ken Livingstone, was re-elected for a second term, having completed his first term as an independent candidate. 11. With three-quarters of the results declared in the local authority elections Labour had lost more than 400 seats with the Conservatives and the Liberal Democrats gaining more than 200 and 100 seats respectively. Turnout for the local elections was at 40 per cent, an increase from 31 per cent in 2003. 12. The Queen's 2004 Birthday Honours List was published. Among those recognised were newsreader and presenter, Angela Rippon, who was awarded an OBE alongside bestselling author Jilly Cooper, poets Pam Ayres and Roger McGough and weather forecaster Michael Fish were awarded MBEs. 15. Lord Goldsmith, the Attorney General, announced that four soldiers from the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers were to face a court martial on charges of abusing and sexually assaulting Iraqi civilians. 17. The Fire Brigades Union (FBU) voluntarily disaffiliated from the Labour Party following a vote in which 250 delegates voted 35,105 to 14,611 in favour of leaving the Party. 23. The Higher Education Minister, Alan Johnson, told the House of Commons that the Higher Education Bill, passed in January by five votes, would be amended to protect students opting for a gap year in 2005. Students completing their A-levels in 2005 who decided to take a gap year would pay the existing £1,125-a-year fee, capped for the duration of their studies. 24. The Government announced, as part of its draft manifesto for the health service, that it would cut hospital waiting times (the time from GP referral to receiving hospital treatment) from 13 months to 18 weeks by 2008. The results of the first national education assessments for five-year-olds were published; the assessments known as Foundation Stage profile became compulsory in state schools in 2003. The tests had been widely criticised by teaching unions as well as the Chief Inspector of Schools, David Bell, as unreliable, unhelpful and time-consuming for teachers; initial results showed that more girls than boys were reaching or working beyond early learning goals. 29. The RMT union began a 24-hour London Underground strike over pay; the union wanted a 35-hour, 4-day week and a minimum of £22,000 pa for all station staff. 30. The London Underground strike continued; five tube lines were operating but with severe delays, many major roads were gridlocked.

JULY 2004

6. Prime Minister Tony Blair conceded for the first time, during a biannual appearance before the Commons Liaison Committee, that weapons of mass destruction might never be found in Iraq. 7. The Times reported that doctors were treating record numbers of teenagers and young adults for mumps; the Health Protection Agency recorded 578 cases in the first three months of 2004, a 75 per cent increase over the first quarter in 2003. The UK was hit by severe storms with winds of up to 60mph recorded in some exposed places, an inch of rain fell across the Solent and 25ft-high waves were recorded in the English Channel forcing freighters to take shelter in emergency anchorages and ferries to be cancelled. 8. Ian Gibson, Chairman of the Commons Science and Technology Committee, proposed that a joint committee of peers and MPs should be formed to re-consider the 1967 Abortion Act and the 1990 amendment, under which a foetus can be legally aborted for social reasons up to 24-weeks gestation. The Government's five-year plan for Education was published; the main reforms included the expansion of popular schools to increase admissions, financial independence for all schools from local authorities, the closure of failing schools and the introduction of more personalised learning for all children, such as the opportunity to learn a musical instrument or a foreign language at primary school level. 9. The Department of Health announced that pilot 'fee-for-service' schemes would be introduced in 32 trusts in England in which doctors and other NHS staff will receive bonus payments for carrying out extra operations and treatments. 14. Lord Butler of Brockwell's report into the reliability and quality of intelligence used to support the case for war with Iraq was published. Lord Butler surmised that the intelligence reports used to support the conflict were 'seriously flawed' although he cleared the Prime Minister Tony Blair of deliberately attempting to mislead the public and Parliament about the intelligence, finding no evidence to question Mr Blair's faith in the information he was given. Lord Butler reported that the Joint Intelligence Committee's warnings on the limitations of the intelligence were not made sufficiently clear in the dossier and that language used in the dossier and by the Prime Minister may have left readers with the impression that there was firmer intelligence than was the case. 15. A new White Paper for the Rail Industry outlined proposals to abolish the Strategic Rail Authority and transfer its responsibilities to the Department for Transport. 16. Health Secretary John Reid unveiled a plan to rescue NHS dentistry, promising to spend an extra £368 million on the service and recruit 1,000 extra dentists by October 2005. 19. The Home Secretary David Blunkett announced plans for a five-year anti-crime drive, initiatives included on-the-spot fines for anti-social behaviour, the use of satellite tracking technology to keep track of offenders with an increase in the use of electronic tagging. Plans also included new border controls that would help to track criminals and terrorists, such as the introduction of photographic records for every traveller entering or leaving the UK. 20. Transport Secretary Alistair Darling announced that the long-awaited £10 billion Crossrail scheme linking east and west London would go ahead. 22. Culture Secretary Tessa Jowell, said in a statement to Parliament that the date for switching off analog television could be postponed until 2012; ministers had maintained that a 2010 deadline was possible but broadcasters said that not enough people would have access to digital television by then. 29. #### AUGUST 2004

3. Severe flooding in London shut parts of the Underground and major road routes out of the capital. 12. A human skeleton from the Iron Age was discovered almost intact on the island of Orkney; the body appeared to have been ritualistically buried with a set of antlers resting on its chest and a toe ring on each foot. 13. The General Secretary of the train drivers' union ASLEF was dismissed for gross misconduct for allegedly failing to co-operate with an independent inquiry into the union's affairs. 15. The Information Commissioner Richard Thomas voiced concerns over Government plans to introduce an identity card scheme and proposals by the Office for National Statistics for a population register, warning that civil liberties could be infringed. 16. Torrential rain in Cornwall caused the River Valency to burst its banks resulting in a 10ft wall of water flooding the village of Boscastle. In total 108 people were rescued by the emergency services; there were no fatalities. 19. A-level results showed that students gained a record 171,639 A-grades in the 2004 exams, representing 22.4 per cent of the total entry of 766,247. The overall pass rate increased for the 22nd consecutive year to 96 per cent. Scotland was hit by 24-hours of torrential rain, causing widespread flooding and mudslides. 22. Paul Miller, chairman of the British Medical Consultants' Committee, warned that there could be a mass exodus of experienced consultants from the NHS due to the introduction of a new pension scheme. 25. The 2004 GCSE exam results were published. The overall pass rate remained unchanged from 2003 with 97.6 per cent awarded A* to G grades with the proportion of entries awarded A* or A rising from 16.7 to 17.4 per cent.

NORTHERN IRELAND AFFAIRS

SEPTEMBER 2003

2. Sean Hoey, an alleged Real IRA bomb-maker, was arrested in Jonesborough, south Armagh, in connection with the 1998 Omagh bombing, and another man was arrested on suspicion of designing the 500lb car bomb. 4.

Northern Ireland Secretary Paul Murphy announced the formation of the International Monitoring Commission, set up to monitor paramilitary cease-fires in Northern Ireland and to try and restore the Northern Ireland Assembly. 5. Sean Hoey was charged with conspiracy to cause an explosion, possessing explosive substances with intent to endanger life, and membership of the Real IRA and was due to appear in court on 6 September. 8. It was announced that paramilitaries being held in Northern Ireland's Maghaberry prison would be segregated to avoid attacks on prison officers and fights between republican and loyalist prisoners. 9. Shadow Defence Minister Gerald Howarth called for a halt to the five-year Bloody Sunday inquiry due to it having cost £113 million. It was not due to reach a conclusion for 12 months. 10. Paddy Ward, a former member of the IRA's youth wing, told the Saville inquiry that Martin McGuinness had arranged the supply of 16 detonators for nail bombs which the IRA had planned to use on Bloody Sunday. 18. Four men and a woman were arrested in Strabane, Co Tyrone, after several Roman Catholic members of Northern Ireland's community policing boards received death threats; two members had their cars set alight and one member was sent a hoax bomb. 25. General Sir Mike Jackson, the Chief of the General Staff, was recalled for further questioning by the Bloody Sunday inquiry to answer questions after it emerged that he was in possession of documents containing interviews with some of the soldiers who had fired shots on Bloody Sunday. 29. Our Lady of Mercy Roman Catholic girls' secondary school in North Belfast was attacked by Protestants who set six cars on fire.

OCTOBER 2003

1. A former paratrooper, known as 'Soldier F' during the Saville Inquiry, who had been shown by forensic scientific evidence to have shot dead Michael Kelly on Bloody Sunday, told the Inquiry that he had complete memory loss about his actions on the day in 1972. He had previously admitted that he had shot three men during the demonstration in Londonderry. 2. Northern Ireland Secretary Paul Murphy announced that a new law would be introduced by ministerial order to enable people to be more effectively prosecuted for committing 'hate crime', and would include a clause aimed specifically at dealing with anti-gay bigotry. 'Soldier F' admitted at the Saville Inquiry that he had shot dead Bernard McGuigan as he attempted to go to the aid of a dying man during the civil rights march on 30 January 1972. 7. Martin McGuinness issued a statement to the Saville Inquiry denying that he had planned an IRA nail bomb attack hours before 13 people were shot dead on Bloody Sunday. 12. Residents in Roslea, Co Fermanagh, were evacuated while army bomb experts carried out a controlled explosion on a crude car bomb containing 59kg of explosives, which had been left outside a police station. 17. Five former members of the Provisional IRA submitted statements to the Saville inquiry in which they said that Martin McGuinness had not distributed nail bombs during the Londonderry peace march. 21. The Bloody Sunday inquiry moved from London to Londonderry after the total bill for its time in London came to £120 million. 24. The IRA issued an apology to the families of the 'disappeared' men and women who were abducted and killed by the IRA in the 1970s and 80s, and said that they had begun an inquiry to locate the remains of those still missing.

NOVEMBER 2003

4. Seven suspected members of the Real IRA were arrested in a joint operation by Irish and French police in Dublin and Brittany after automatic weapons and ammunition were found in a forest near Dieppe. 5. Martin McGuinness was threatened with legal action for refusing to co-operate with the Saville inquiry after he refused to reveal the names of IRA colleagues. 12. A former member of the IRA, known as OIRA1, told the Saville Inquiry that he had shot at a soldier on Bloody Sunday and claimed that the soldier had previously wounded two civilians. 28. The Revd Ian Paisley's Democratic Unionist Party won 30 seats in the elections to the National Assembly, the Ulster Unionist Party won 27 seats and Sinn Fein won 24 seats. The Democratic Unionist Party had previously promised to abolish the Good Friday agreement if it won the election.

DECEMBER 2003

1. The Revd Ian Paisley met the Northern Ireland Secretary Paul Murphy and told him that his party would not deal with republicans. 12. Mitchell B. Reiss, a US government official, was selected as the special envoy to Northern Ireland in order to focus on issues of IRA decommissioning. 16. Prime Minister Tony Blair held talks with the leader of the Democratic Unionist Party, Revd Ian Paisley, to attempt to break the political deadlock in Northern Ireland; Revd Paisley said there was 'no way' his party would share power with Sinn Fein. 17. Charges against Fiona Farrelly, who had been accused of being part of an IRA spy ring that led to the collapse of the power-sharing Executive at Stormont, were dropped without explanation. 18. Jeffrey Donaldson resigned from David Trimble's Ulster Unionist Party, saying that the party had 'abandoned its principles'.

JANUARY 2004

4. A 16-year-old boy was shot in both legs by three men who broke into a house in east Belfast and another 17-year-old youth was shot in both ankles by a man who broke into his home in west Belfast. 9. Police in Northern Ireland published figures which showed that racist crimes in the predominantly loyalist areas of Belfast had soared from 25 in 1998 to 223 a year. 19. The Police Ombudsman Nuala O'Loan announced that an investigation into the murder of Roman Catholic Sean Brown in 1997 had found that there had been 'significant failures' by the Royal Ulster Constabulary at the time. 25. Around 100 former members of the Parachute Regiment were issued with handguns in Northern Ireland after police obtained information about the Provisional IRA gathering intelligence from the Bloody Sunday inquiry and other sources in order to kill those that gave evidence at the inquiry. 26. Education Minister Jane Kennedy announced that all 71 grammar schools in Northern Ireland would be abolished and that the last 11-plus examinations would be held in 2008. 27. It was announced that the Bloody Sunday Inquiry only had until 13 February 2004 to hear the evidence of around 900 witnesses, and that lawyers had a deadline of 12 March to hand in their written submissions. 29. The Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern met Revd Ian Paisley, the leader of the Democratic Unionist Party, for talks at the Irish Embassy in London, a week before the opening of a review designed to revive the Good Friday agreement.

FEBRUARY 2004

4. Jaybe Ofrasio was arrested in Belfast on charges of making money and property available to terrorists in the Far East; he is believed to have links to the Bali nightclub bombing in October 2002. 17. The funeral of 18-year-old Barney Cairns took place in the Ardoyne area of Belfast after he committed suicide as a result of being shot in the legs in 2002 for 'squaring up' to the Irish National Liberation Army; his friend Anthony O'Neill had committed suicide a week earlier after also being a victim of a 'punishment attack'. 22. Alasdair McDonnell, a GP from south Belfast, was elected the new deputy leader of the nationalist SDLP party, replacing Brid Rodgers. 27. The Police Service of Northern Ireland announced that punishment attacks had risen to a record high with 51 beatings and shootings carried out in 2004 by republican and loyalist groups who claim to be helping their communities to combat antisocial behaviour.

MARCH 2004

2. Seamus Daly, one of the leading suspects in the 1998 Omagh bombing, was jailed for three-and-a-half years at the Special Criminal Court in Dublin for being a member of the Real IRA. The Ulster Unionist leader, David Trimble, walked out on talks in Belfast aimed at restoring devolved government to Northern Ireland, in protest at the British government's failure to exclude Sinn Fein from the talks following the alleged abduction of dissident republican Bobby Tohill. 11. The British government secured the right to prevent new investigations into alleged 'shoot to kill' deaths by security forces in Northern Ireland, after five Law Lords ruled that investigations into killings that occurred before the Human Rights Act 2002 came into force did not fall under the Act. 22. A 46-year-old man was arrested in England and taken to Belfast in connection with the murder of 10-year-old Brian McDermott whose torso was found in the River Lagan in 1973. 27. Ulster Unionist leader David Trimble urged his opponents to unite behind him after he secured a majority 448 votes during a leadership contest at a party meeting in Belfast.

APRIL 2004

8. Arthur Templeton, a member of the Democratic Unionists, was suspended by the Party after being found guilty at Belfast Magistrates' Court of harassing a gay colleague. 13. A man was being questioned by police in connection with the murder of 16-year-old Megan McAlorum, whose body was found in woodland close to a quarry in west Belfast. 17. Five prison officers, including one woman, were suspended after it was alleged that they had 'improper relations' with inmates at Maghaberry Prison in Co Antrim. 20. The Independent Monitoring Commission in Northern Ireland issued a report condemning the Sinn Fein leaders, Gerry Adams and Martin McGuinness, for failing to use their influence to end violence by the IRA, which the commission claimed was still linked to the political party.

MAY 2004

12. Chief Constable Hugh Orde told the Northern Ireland Policing Board that loyalist and republican paramilitaries had carried out 1,700 punishment attacks in Northern Ireland since 1998. 26. At Belfast Crown Court, Mr Justice Girvan ruled that the Real IRA could not be described as a proscribed group because the British Government had failed to list the organisation in the Terrorism Act 2000.

JUNE 2004

3. Kevin McAlorum, a former member of the Irish National Liberation Army, was shot dead outside Oakwood integrated primary school in Derriagh, Belfast. 17. Lt.-Gen. Sir Philip Trousdell, the General Officer Commanding Northern Ireland, announced that 1,200 members of the Devon and Dorset Regiment and the Queen's Dragoon Guards would leave Northern Ireland and revert to mainland command. 25. Tony Blair announced that the IRA had until September 2004 to end its paramilitary activities and decommission its weapons, otherwise plans to reinstate the Northern Ireland Assembly could be abandoned. 29. Donald Mullan, Brendan O'Connor, Sean Dillon and Kevin Murphy were cleared of plotting to murder police and troops in Northern Ireland at Belfast Crown Court after they were found with a rocket launcher outside Dungannon in 2002. 30. The High Court in Belfast overturned the ruling by Justice Paul Girvan that the Real IRA is not an illegal terrorist organisation.

JULY 2004

The media group Hollinger International, the American parent company of the Daily Telegraph Group, revealed $32.5 million in payments to Hollinger executives had not been approved by the full board of directors or the audit committee. 19. An 18-month joint undercover operation by the FBI, US Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and the US Attorney for the Southern District for New York into alleged fraudulent foreign exchange activities resulted in the arrests of 48 traders on Wall Street. Lord Black of Crossharbour announced his resignation as the chief executive of Hollinger International following the revelations concerning payments to Hollinger executives on the 14 November.

DECEMBER 2003

10. Chancellor Gordon Brown delivered his pre-budget report to the House of Commons in which he revealed that borrowing of up to £37.4 billion would be required in 2003–6 to meet government spending commitments. The price of platinum soared above $800 an ounce, the highest for 23-years, as concerns grew that not enough was being produced to satisfy demand. 18. The price of platinum continued to rise closing at $840 an ounce, an all-time high. 31. The US Securities and Exchange Commission started legal proceedings against Parmalat in a New York Court and sent investigators to Italy to liaise with prosecutors. Two executives at the Italian branch of Grant Thornton, auditors for Parmalat, were arrested on suspicion of fraudulent accounting practices. The FTSE 100 index of leading companies finished the year up for the first time since 1999 and the pound gained more than a cent against the dollar to finish at $1.7904.

JANUARY 2004

1. Citibank and HSBC Holdings became the first foreign bank to win approval to issue credit cards in China. The aerospace group Boeing was awarded a $1.6 billion (£900 million) extension from NASA to its contract to supply the International Space Station. 9. Royal Dutch/Shell, the Anglo-Dutch oil company, revealed that it had overstated its oil and gas reserves by 20 per cent resulting in a drop in oil stocks world-wide. 12. Figures from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister showed that house price inflation was back into single figures after house prices dropped by 1.1 per cent in November 2003. 13. Standard Life, one of the largest mutual insurance companies in Europe, stated that it was considering a stock market listing. 15. The retailer Boots plc confirmed that it would be cutting 900 jobs at its head office in Nottingham. 18. Sir David and Sir Frederick Barclay launched a bid to buy Lord Black of Crossharbour's 78 per cent stake in the Canadian-listed Hollinger Incorporated, which owns 30 per cent of the New York-listed Hollinger International's equity and controls 73 per cent of the voting shares. 19. A resurgence in the stock market due to gains in insurance and oil shares raised the FTSE 100 index to its highest level for 18 months, closing up 30.2 points (0.7 per cent), at 4,518.1. 26. The New York law firm, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, launched a lawsuit against Shell, the Anglo-Dutch oil company, on behalf of investors after the company's admission on 9 January that it had overstated its proven oil reserves by 20 per cent. Hollinger International filed a lawsuit to prevent the former chairman, Lord Black of Crossharbour, selling his controlling stake in the company to brothers Sir David and Sir Frederick Barclay. 27. The media regulator Ofcom ruled that the operator of the 118 118 directory enquiry service had used the 'trademark' long hair, drooping moustache and red socks of the former 10,000-metre world record holder, David Bedford, without his permission in its £16 million advertising campaign. The Barclay brothers tabled a formal tender offer to buy Lord Black of Crossharbour's 30 per cent stake in Hollinger International for £259 million.

FEBRUARY 2004

3. The European Commission ruled that the Ryanair airline should repay more than £2 million in unlawful subsidies given by the Walloon regional government as an incentive for the airline to fly from Charleroi airport near Brussels. 5. The Bank of England raised the base interest rate by 0.25 per cent to 4.0 per cent. 6. Figures released by the Department of Trade and Industry showed the number of personal bankruptcies had risen by 29 per cent in the last four months of 2003 compared to the same period in 2002. A total of 36,328 people in England and Wales declared themselves personally insolvent in 2003, the highest figure for a decade. 7. Tickets went on sale for a new European lottery organised and run by Camelot in partnership with its French and Spanish counterparts. 9. The Treasury's annual assessment of European economic reform stated that EU spending should be capped at one per cent of gross national income and subjected to the same value-for-money assessment as spending by member states. 10. The US dollar dropped to $1.86 against the pound sterling; its lowest level since Black Wednesday. 17. The latest UK inflation data was published showing that the Consumer Prices Index was rising by an annual 1.4 per cent in January 2004, an increase from 1.3 per cent in December 2003. Italian police arrested the son and a daughter of Calisto Tanzi, founder of Parmalat, and six others, in connection with the investigation into suspected fraud and misappropriation of funds within the Parmalat group. 18. The dollar continued to fall against the pound sterling, closing at $1.91 against the pound. 25. Figures released by the Office for National Statistics showed an unchanged rate of economic expansion of 0.9 per cent for the fourth quarter, equivalent to a year-on-year 2.8 per cent increase in GDP for 2003. 26. Lord Black of Crossharbour had his proposal to sell his controlling stake in Hollinger International to the Barclay brothers blocked after a judge in Delaware, USA, ruled that he had breached company law.

MARCH 2004

1. The Times newspaper reported that the Inland Revenue had written off more than £750 million in unpaid national insurance contributions after attempts to recover the money failed; the shortfall arose after the Inland Revenue failed to send out reminders for the five years (1996–2002) to those whose contributions fell short. The British retailer Marks & Spencer said that it would raise £400 million by issuing bonds to fund a £1 billion shortfall in its pension scheme funds. HSBC, the high-street bank announced record pre-tax profits of £7.8 billion, the biggest profit ever recorded by a British bank in a single year. 8. Lord Penrose's report on the near-collapse of Equitable Life was published after two-and-a-half years. The report found that regulators failed to monitor the company adequately but blamed the company's former management as the direct cause of the losses suffered by policyholders, thereby ruling out the possibility of government compensation for the one million investors. 17. The Chancellor Gordon Brown delivered the 2004 Budget to the House of Commons. Many taxes and duties were frozen but beer went up 1p a pint, wine up 4p a bottle and tax on cigarettes increased in-line with inflation. The inheritance tax threshold was increased to £263,000 and a £3,000 fine for late filing was introduced. Individual pension allowances were capped at £1.5 million under a new scheme to be introduced in 2006 with the allowance scheduled to rise to £1.8 million by 2010. Public spending plans included an annual 7.2 per cent increase in NHS funding until 2008 and an additional £6 billion allocated to fight terrorism. Overall the economy grew by 2.3 per cent in 2003, meeting Treasury forecasts, and growth forecasts remained at 3–3.5 per cent for 2004–5 and at 2.5–3 per cent for 2006. 18. In Milan, prosecutors called for 29 people to stand trial in connection with the collapse of the Italian dairy firm, Parmalat. These included the company's founder, Calisto Tanzi, his son Stephano and his former financial chief, Fausto Tonna. The Anglo-Dutch business Shell admitted that revised figures issued in January for its proven oil and gas reserves, following revelations that it had overestimated stocks for 2003 by 20 per cent, were also too high. 22. The European Commission fined Microsoft a record €497 million after ruling that Microsoft had abused its market position by not making its operating systems compatible with rival software. 24. Figures published by the National Audit Office (NAO) showed that the Inland Revenue failed to collect £14 billion of tax for the financial year 2002–3; the missing debt included £4.9 billion in PAYE, £4.5 billion in self-assessment, £3.1 billion in corporation tax and £1.8 billion in other taxes. 29. A survey published by Hometrack stated that house prices were continuing to rise at a high rate forecasting an eight per cent rise in 2004. The Post Office launched the first of a wide range of low-cost financial services products in collaboration with the Bank of Ireland.

APRIL 2004

8. The Bank of England kept the base interest rate on hold at four per cent despite much speculation that it would be raised by a quarter of a percentage point. 13. The HSBC bank launched a new pension fund compliant with Shari'ah or Islamic law. 18. The Sunday Times Rich

List reported that Britain's richest people had seen their wealth increase by almost 30 per cent in the past 12 months, an increase of 15 times the rate of inflation. 19. An investigation carried out on behalf of Royal Dutch Shell by US law firm, Davis, Polk and Wardwell, reported that former executives at the company had knowingly lied to investors about the true level of the company's oil and gas reserves for a number of years. 23. Figures released by the Office for National Statistics showed that the UK economy grew by its fastest annual rate in almost three-and-a-half years in the first quarter of 2004, the growth was mainly from rapid expansion in the retailing, hotels and leisure sectors. The Financial Services Authority (FSA) confirmed that it had launched a formal investigation into Royal Dutch Shell, following the conclusion by its internal investigation. 26. The US aerospace company, Boeing, announced it would start production of its new 7E7 Dreamliner jet after the Japanese airline All Nippon Airways ordered 50 of the jets in a deal worth about $6 billion. 29. Figures released by the Nationwide Building Society showed that the value of the average home went up by almost £3,400 in a month to £145,918; overall, house prices had climbed seven per cent since January and 18.9 per cent in the past 12 months.

MAY 2004

2. Between 750 and 1,000 passengers were left stranded when a new airline, Duo, went into administration after only operating for seven months. 6. The Bank of England raised the base interest rate by 0.25 per cent to 4.25 per cent. 10. The FTSE-100 index dropped by 2.3 per cent, its sharpest one-day decline for a year, closing down 103.2 points at a five-week low of 4,395.2, amid fears of surging oil prices and a possible increase in US interest rates. 12. From midnight British Airways added a £5 surcharge to its non-European fares due to an increase in oil prices. 16. The Office of Fair Trading announced that British credit card companies were over-charging retailers for processing card payments and these costs were eventually borne by consumers. 24. Oil prices continued to rise with the cost of a barrel of crude oil reaching $41.80, close to a 21-year high, on the New York Stock Exchange.

JUNE 2004

8. Carl Cushnie and Fred Clough, the former chairman and finance director of Versailles, the trade finance house which collapsed in 2000, were both convicted of conspiracy to defraud; Cushnie was convicted of defrauding £23 million from investors and Clough £19 million. 10. The Bank of England raised the base interest rate by a quarter percentage point to 4.5 per cent. 16. It was reported that UK inflation reached 1.5 per cent in May 2004, its highest level for more than one year. 21. The Barclay twins, Sir David and Sir Frederick were successful, subject to regulatory approval, in their £665 million bid for the ownership of The Daily Telegraph.

JULY 2004

12. Chancellor Gordon Brown unveiled his 2004 Spending Review; public spending by government departments was forecast to rise from £279.3 billion in 2004–5 to £340.5 billion in 2007–8. NHS funding was to be increased from £69 to £92 billion by 2008, security spending to increase by 10 per cent annually (real-terms rise) with the Armed Forces budget to increase from £29.7 billion to £33.4 billion by 2008. Cutbacks included the loss of 84,150 civil service posts and plans to raise £30 billion from the sale of Government assets. 16. Martha Stewart, former chief executive of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia, was sentenced to five months in jail followed by five months house arrest, after being found guilty on 1 March of lying to the FBI and securities regulators; she was granted bail pending appeal. 22. The British high street had its longest run of retail sales growth in at least two decades when sales rose for the thirteenth consecutive month in June. A warning from the Russian oil company Yukos, that a liquidity crisis could force it to cease export operations increased American crude oil prices to above $41 per barrel on the New York stock exchange. 25. The board of Abbey agreed in principle to sell the high street bank to Santander Central Hispano, Spain's biggest finance group, for an estimated £8.5 billion. 28. The price of American crude oil reached a 21-year high of $43.05 a barrel and London Brent oil reached a 14-year high of $39.60, after Siberian oil company Yukos received an order from the Russian Justice Ministry to halt all sales. Oil analysts believed the order to be a restraint aimed at stopping the company selling or changing the status of its assets, however, the Russian Justice Ministry failed to clarify the meaning of the order, resulting in shares in Yukos falling by 20 per cent.

AUGUST 2004

5. The Bank of England raised interest rates to 4.75 per cent, the highest level for almost three years. 6. Analysts' concerns over the crude oil market subsided after the Moscow Arbitration Court ruled that seizure of a key production subsidiary of Russian oil company, Yukos, was illegal. 8. Figures from the Land Registry showed that house prices in the three months to June were 17 per cent higher than in the same period in 2003; taking the average house price from just under £150,000 to more than £175,000 within a 12-month period. 20. As the price of American crude oil reached nearly $50 a barrel and London Brent oil above $40 a barrel, fuel retailers across the UK began to raise prices with Total becoming the first chain to confirm a forecourt price increase of 0.6p a litre for petrol and diesel. 24. Britain's largest gas and electricity supplier, British Gas, announced its highest single price increase since privatisation in 1996; gas would rise by 12.4 per cent and electricity by 9.4 per cent from 20 September 2004. British Gas blamed rises in the prices of wholesale energy and oil for the increase.

ENVIRONMENT AND SCIENCE

SEPTEMBER 2003

3. Scientists from the Weizmann Institute of Science in Israel developed a test to measure the activity of 8-oxoguanine DNA N-glycosylase (OGG), an enzyme responsible for DNA repair, and discovered that some people are better at repairing smoking-related damage to their DNA. 7. NASA announced that Galileo space probe's 14-year mission to explore Jupiter and its moons would be brought to a close as the craft had run low on fuel; technicians put Galileo on course to disintegrate in the Jovian atmosphere. 10. The Institute of Child Health in London identified a small fraction of the human genetic code that affects the part of the brain implicated in autism. Lord Winston warned of the possible long-term dangers of IVF treatment, stating that poorly researched fertility treatments were being used as a matter of course. He was particularly concerned with the long-term effects of freezing embryos and the use of intra-cytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI), which involves directly injecting a sperm into an egg, increasing the risk of genetic defects being passed on. 15. Prof. Alex Markham, chief executive of Cancer Research UK, said that a national screening programme for bowel cancer could save 5,000 lives a year but could not be implemented because the NHS did not have the capacity to treat the number of patients that such a programme would identify. 19. It was reported in The Times that a complete fossil of a giant guinea-pig type creature, Phoberomys pattersoni, had been unearthed at Urumaco in Venezuela. The creature lived in South America eight million years ago and would have weighed about 700kg (110st), was 3m long and 1.3m high at the shoulder. 24. Scientists reported that the largest ice shelf in the Arctic, the Ward Hunt ice shelf on the north coast of Ellesmere Island in Canada, had split into two main parts, each of which had cracked into many smaller pieces. Researchers stated that local warming of the climate was responsible. 30. Cancer Research UK launched a 10-year study to test if the drug Arimidex anastrozole can reduce the risk of post-menopausal women developing breast cancer; initial studies had suggested that it could reduce the risk by up to 70 per cent.

OCTOBER 2003

1. The Met Office announced that September 2003 had been the sunniest September since sunshine records began in 1961, with an average of just over six hours of sunshine each day across England and Wales. 3. Provisional figures released by the Office for National Statistics showed that the summer's exceptionally hot weather caused 2,045 more deaths compared to the averages for the previous five years. 6. The Central Science Laboratory announced that wild boar were again breeding in the south east of England; government scientists estimated the numbers to be about 200, although farmers believed the numbers to be much higher. British physicist Sir Peter Mansfield and American scientist Paul Lauterbur from the University of Illinois jointly won the Nobel Prize for Medicine for developing magnetic resonance imaging (MRI), a technique for producing images of internal organs without using X-rays. 7. Anthony Leggett, a British scientist and Professor of Physics at the University of Illinois, was honoured with the Nobel Prize for Physics for his work on superfluidity. 9. A study by the Zoological Society of London and the University of Las Palmas in Gran Canaria reported that military sonar is confusing whales and dolphins by causing them to surface too quickly and suffer fatal attacks of decompression sickness. 14. A team of scientists from Duke University in Durham, North Carolina reported they had successfully taught two rhesus macaque monkeys to control a cursor on screen via electrodes planted in the frontal and parietal lobes of their brains. 15. The European Food Safety Authority confirmed its scientists had discovered the toxin semicarbazide, which can damage DNA and has been linked to a range of cancers in a variety of jarred food products, including baby food. China became the third nation to send a man into space after Lieutenant-Colonel Yang Liwei completed his mission. 21. Microsoft launched a new range of software which allows users to send emails that can be ordered to 'self-destruct' at a date set by the sender. 23. The first three-year phase of the 10-year marine life census recorded 15,304 species of fish and 210,000 marine species of all types. 29. One of the most powerful solar storms on record hit Earth's atmosphere resulting in problems with aircraft navigational systems and a spectacular display of Northern Lights; the storm resulted from a massive gas cloud which erupted from the sun two days previously. 30. The British award winning wildlife film-maker, Michael Linley, pleaded guilty in a Perth court to smuggling protected reptiles out of Australia; he was caught in October at Perth airport as he tried to leave with the protected species.

NOVEMBER 2003

4. A run of wild salmon were rescued from the waterfall at Cargill's Leap on the river Erich in Perthshire after becoming too exhausted to leap upstream in shallow water. They were transported upstream to their spawning ground by the Tay District Salmon Fisheries. A new osteoporosis drug, the hormone derivative teriparatide, which increases the number of bone forming cells, was licensed for use in Britain for post-menopausal women. 14. A possible new planet, named Sedna, located eight billion miles away from the sun, was sighted from the Palomar Observatory in California.

DECEMBER 2003

19. The Beagle 2 Mars probe was successfully released from the nose cone of the European Space Agency's Mars Express spacecraft for the final part of its journey to the red planet where it was due to land on 25 December. 26. The Jodrell Bank Radio Observatory in Cheshire failed to pick up a signal from the Beagle 2 lander for a second night, the failure followed a second unsuccessful attempt at contact by the NASA Mars Odyssey orbiter.

JANUARY 2004

2. NASA successfully flew the Stardust space probe through the tail of the Wild 2 comet where it took pictures of the comet's nucleus and was hoped to have successfully gathered a sample of comet dust. 4. The first of two NASA exploration rovers successfully landed on Mars to begin a 90-day mission to establish if Mars was capable of sustaining life. 5. The World Health Organisation confirmed that a new case of SARS had been identified in Guangdong, in south China. 7. The Mars Express passed the landing site for the Beagle 2, but failed to pick up any radio signal from the missing probe. 12. Research carried out by a team of scientists led by Philippa Darbre, a lecturer in cellular and molecular biology at Reading University, established the possibility of a link between the parabens contained in some antiperspirants and breast cancer. 15. The NASA Spirit rover successfully left its landing platform on Mars and drove three metres across the planet's surface. 21. NASA lost contact with the Spirit Mars rover after it failed to send back expected scientific data and sent a simple signal instead. 22. The Big Bird Race (The Ultimate Flutter) was launched in London by David Bellamy to raise money for the Conservation Foundation's work on seabird protection; gamblers could place bets on which one of 18 electronically tagged Tasmanian shy albatrosses would finish first on their 6,000-mile annual migration from Tasmania to South Africa. 23. The European Mars Express transmitted a spectrometer image providing the first direct evidence that the Martian South Pole contained deposits of frozen water. 25. NASA's second Mars rover Opportunity touched down in a shallow meteorite crater. 26. The Beagle 2 team announced that they accepted that the probe was probably lost and commenced an evaluation of what could have gone wrong. 29. NASA re-established partial contact with the Spirit Mars rover which successfully transmitted an image back to Earth.

FEBRUARY 2004

11. A study published by the British Medical Association (BMA) aiming to consolidate medical evidence on the effects of smoking on fertility, pregnancy and childhood health concluded that smoking causes early menopause and reduces the chances of conceiving by approximately 40 per cent. 12. The journal Science reported that a team of South Korean scientists had successfully produced human stem cells from cloned embryos as part of their research into therapeutic cloning. 13. Microsoft called in the FBI to investigate the alleged theft of a 660-megabyte portion of the source code for the Windows 2000 and Windows NT 4 operating systems after they discovered the code was being traded over the internet. 16. A study for the Global Initiative for Asthma reported that the asthma rate for British teenagers aged 13 to 14 years was the highest in the world, with 33.6 per cent suffering from the condition. 17. A study reported in The Times, conducted by scientists at the University of Washington in Seattle, showed that long-term and regular users of antibiotics increased their risk of developing breast cancer by one-and-a-half times compared to those who had never taken antibiotics. 22. The General Medical Council announced it was to investigate allegations that research by Dr Andrew Wakefield published in The Lancet in 1998, linking the MMR vaccine with autism, was fundamentally flawed due to a conflict of interests between Dr Wakefield's research projects at the time. 23. The British Medical Association stated that if current trends in childhood weight gain and obesity continued, three million Britons would suffer from diabetes by 2010; twice the number recorded four years ago.

MARCH 2004

2. The European Space Agency's Rosetta spacecraft began a 12-year mission to land on Comet 67P/Churyumov-Gerasimenko in 2014 after an Ariane-5 rocket carrying the probe was launched successfully from the Kourou spaceport in French Guiana. 3. Ten of the 12 authors of the 1998 paper which linked autism with the MMR vaccine issued a retraction statement stating that while no causal link was established between the MMR vaccine and autism, the possibility of such a link had been raised. 9. A study was published in the medical journal The Lancet, which announced that scientists at the Cornell University, New York, had for the first time successfully managed to conceive an embryo using tissue from a frozen human ovary. 24. The Health Secretary John Reid announced a £1 million project to look into providing a 24-hour angioplasty service across the country, with the aim of offering patients the procedure, which unblocks arteries, within two hours of a heart attack. 28. The world's first working 'scramjet', built by NASA, reached 5,000 mph (seven times the speed of sound) in its test flight; the flight lasted just 11 seconds and ended with a planned splashdown into the Pacific ocean.

APRIL 2004

6. The Times reported that a study conducted by scientists in America and published in the US journal Pediatrics found that for every hour of television watched daily, children under two faced a 10 per cent increased risk of having attention problems by the age of seven. 16. A team of scientists lead by Ian Bond of the Institute of Astronomy in Edinburgh announced the discovery of a planet 17,000 light years away orbiting a dwarf star in the constellation Sagittarius. 18. A study by researchers from the University of Catania in Italy and the New York Medical College showed high concentrations of curcumin, which is present in turmeric, protected the brain against the progression of neurodegenerative diseases, such as Alzheimer's. 29. Scientists at the Weizmann Institute in Israel, announced that they had built the world's smallest biological computer measuring just 100 nanometres across.

MAY 2004

3. Japanese car company Honda unveiled its new eco-friendly concept-car: the FCX car, which runs entirely on water-generated hydrogen gas and is completely soundless; the car looked like an ordinary car and had a top speed of 100mph. 7. A report by Dutch scientist Jan Andries van Franeker concluded that the deaths of hundreds of seabirds on beaches along the North Norfolk coast in February were due to food shortages several months earlier; the bodies of up to 250 seabirds had been found daily mainly between Holkham and Cromer. 20. A government-funded study published in the Journal of Pathology predicted that 3,800 people might be infected with vCJD. Pathologists found three cases of the prion protein responsible for vCJD in 12,500 specimens of tonsils and appendices and concluded that if this proportion was repeated throughout the country, about 3,800 people would be carrying the infective agent. 27. It was reported in The Times, that a golden eagle had been successfully bred from frozen sperm via artificial insemination; the technique could be used to safeguard rare birds of prey.

JUNE 2004

1. Figures presented to Parliament by the Health Protection Agency indicated that the amount of teenagers with sexually transmitted diseases had increased. Cases of gonorrhoea in boys aged 13 to 19 more than tripled between 1995 and 2002, while cases in girls increased at almost the same rate. 8. Between 6.19 a.m. and 12.23 p.m. the planet Venus could be seen moving across the face of the sun; the first visible 'transit' made by the planet since 6 December 1882. 9. A well-preserved embryo of a pterosaur, dating back 121 million years, was discovered in a fossilised egg in north-eastern China. 11. The first close-up pictures of Phoebe, one of Saturn's moons, were taken by the Cassini spacecraft when it flew within 2,000 km (1,240 miles) of the satellite. 18. The first pictures of a comet taken by the Stardust probe, which passed within 149 miles of the nucleus of comet Wild 2 on 2 January 2004, were published in the journal Science; the images showed the comet to be a rounded chunk of rock and ice, unexpectedly covered with craters, flat-topped hills and canyons. 21. SpaceShipOne became the world's first manned vehicle to free itself from the Earth's gravitational pull and return to Earth immediately after it climbed to 340,000ft on gained momentum, before being steered back to Earth by 62-year old test pilot, Michael Mevill. 28. The Government designated the New Forest as a National Park, covering an area of 220 sq. miles (571 sq. km) and with an estimated population of 38,000 it became England's first new National Park for almost half a century. 30. It was reported in The Times that a 32-year old woman was 24-weeks pregnant after successfully undergoing a procedure to re-implant ovarian tissue removed and frozen prior to chemotherapy treatment for cancer which had rendered her infertile.

JULY 2004

1. The Cassini space probe successfully entered into a four-year orbit of Saturn. 12. Six young red kites were freed in Tyneside as part of the £1 million Northern Kites project, led by the RSPB, to bring rare birds of prey into an urban environment. 19. Following encouraging results from an initial clinical trial in Australia, a vaccine to treat melanoma was to be tested in Britain after the US Cancer Research Institute awarded a grant of $600,000 (£320,000) for trials to be carried out in Australia, New Zealand and Britain. 21. At the International Conference on General Relativity and Gravitation held in Dublin Professor Stephen Hawking presented new calculations that suggest black holes are able to cast out their contents. Figures released by the Department of Health showed that abortions in England and Wales increased by 3.2 per cent in 2003 compared to 2002 figures; there were 181,600 terminations of which the majority (87 per cent) were carried out before 13 weeks. 27. Figures released by the Health Protection Agency showed that cases of chlamydia rose by nine per cent between 2002 and 2003 while syphilis showed a 28 per cent increase, overall sexually transmitted infections rose by four per cent.

AUGUST 2004

11. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) granted a one-year licence to a team of scientists at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne to enable them to clone human embryos for medical research into the use of embryonic stem cells for the treatment of disease. 19. A team of scientists from the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew and the Earthwatch Institute in Oxford published the findings of their 10-year project to catalogue and classify plant species in the forests of Cameroon. The scientists said the study had identified as many as 150 new species of which 50 had been independently scrutinised. The Government announced that an inquiry would be conducted by the Office for National Statistics in conjunction with the confidential inquiry into maternal and child health to establish why the number of stillbirths had risen for two years running after decades of decline. 26. The Lancet reported that doctors at a hospital in Germany had successfully created a new jaw bone for a man – during a unique procedure. A titanium mesh was constructed from a mould of the patient's jaw and filled with bone minerals, protein and patient bone marrow which was then implanted under the patient's shoulder blade and left to grow for seven weeks.

SPORT

SEPTEMBER 2003

4. The International Skating Union (ISU) introduced a new scoring system at the annual Nebelhorn International in Oberstdorf, Germany; the new system used anonymous judging and each element of a skater's programme was scored against a base rate of difficulty. 6. In football, England secured a 2–1 victory over Macedonia in the Euro 2004 qualifying tie, with Wayne Rooney becoming the youngest player, at 17 years and 317 days, to score a goal for England during a senior match. In tennis, Justine Henin-Hardenne reached the final of the US Open after defeating Jennifer Capriati, 4–6, 7–5, 7–6, in a gruelling three-hour match after which Henin-Hardenne was placed on a drip to recover. 8. In cricket, England had a

In Afghanistan, Canada handed over control of the NATO force to Europe's five-nation defence force, Eurocorps, for a sixth month period. It was the Eurocorps first deployment outside Europe.

THE MIDDLE EAST

SEPTEMBER 2003

1. Iraq's Governing Council named the 25 ministers of the new cabinet that would form an interim administration. 3. Polish forces took command of a multinational coalition division in Iraq, becoming the only nation apart from the US and Britain to assume control of a sector of the country. 6. Palestinian Prime Minister, Mahmoud Abbas, resigned from his position. One of the reasons he gave was the apparent lack of Israeli willingness to adhere to the 'roadmap to peace process'. 8. Ahmed Qureia became Prime Minister of Palestine, having earlier demanded guarantees of American and European support in negotiations with Israel. 9. Two Palestinian suicide attacks took place within five hours of each other. The first bomb killed at least seven Israeli soldiers and wounded dozens more at a crowded bus stop near Tel Aviv and the second took place in a café in the German Colony neighbourhood, killing at least six more people. 10. A suicide bomber killed himself and an Iraqi child and wounded more than 50 people in a car-bomb attack in the northern Kurdish city of Arbil. Israel launched an airstrike against the home of a leading Hamas member in response to the double suicide bombings of the day before. 20. A leading Iranian cleric called for his country to consider withdrawing from the nuclear non-proliferation treaty which raised fresh fears that Iran would ignore an international deadline to curb its nuclear ambitions. 29. Jordan announced that it would train 30,000 Iraqi police and troops in the first such pledge of aid from an Arab country in support of the American-led reconstruction effort in Iraq.

OCTOBER 2003

1. The Israeli cabinet announced that it had decided to go ahead with the building of a security fence around Jewish settlements in the West Bank. The fence was designed to keep Palestinian suicide bombers out of Jewish areas. 4. A female suicide bomber detonated a bomb in a crowded restaurant in the Israeli city of Haifa, killing at least 19 people and wounding more than 40. 5. Israel attacked what was believed to be a terrorist training camp for Islamic Jihad in Syria in response to the suicide bombing in Israel of the previous day. 6. The Palestinian terrorist group Hamas vowed to take revenge against Israel for the militant attack in Syria against the group. 9. Israel stated that it would call up 800 reserve soldiers in readiness for increased operations in the West Bank and Gaza Strip following the suicide bombing that killed 19 people on 4 November. 10. Seven Palestinians were killed when Israeli tanks entered the Rafah refugee camp in southern Gaza. Some 10,000 Shia Muslim demonstrators congregated on the streets of Baghdad in protest against the US after a night of violence that left two Americans and two Iraqis dead. The lawyer and democracy activist Shirin Ebadi was named as the first Iranian and Muslim woman winner of the £800,000 Nobel Peace Prize. # ARCHAEOLOGY

EARLY HOMINIDS IN BRITAIN

The discovery of c. 500,000-year-old hominid remains in a gravel quarry at Boxgrove near Chichester in Sussex in 1993 transformed views on when Britain was first inhabited by hominids by pushing the date backwards to a period before the great Anglian Glaciation of c. 450,000 BC. Now new research is pushing the date back much further: to a period before the two preceding glaciations (the so-called 'Cromerian Complex'), that is, to c. 700,000 BC.

This is one aspect of a major five-year project, Ancient Human Occupation of Britain (AHOB), set up in 2002 with a million-pound grant from the Leverhulme Trust, and involving the British Museum, the Natural History Museum and five universities. Key questions being tackled by AHOB include: 'Were there humans in Britain before Boxgrove? Was human occupation continuous, or were there periods of abandonment and recolonisation? How did early humans exploit the landscape, and what was the driving force for big changes in the Stone Age toolkit?' Answers are rapidly emerging. The oldest site, with remains possibly dating back 700,000 years, is Happisburgh in East Anglia, but other sites are more recent, with one of c. 600,000 BC, and another of c. 550,000 BC. The early human occupation of Britain was not likely to be continuous. In fact, even as late as c. 180,000–60,000 BC, during the Ipswichian Interglacial, there appears to have been another major abandonment.

Other work is revealing the way our forebears exploited their environment, a pattern that changed over time, no doubt in line with available resources. The chemical composition of human bones from Gough's and Sun Hole caves, for instance – datable to the Upper Palaeolithic (c. 35,000–8,000 BC) – had revealed people who were predominately meat-eaters, providing a new answer to the old question: 'Were early humans hunters, foragers or scavengers?'

As for changes in the toolkit, where previously it was thought that migrant groups introduced new techniques and implements, evidence now suggests that, in some cases at least, these developed in different places at the same time. An example would be the Levallois tradition of the Lower-Middle Palaeolithic transition (c. 300,000–180,000 BC), which involved preparing the core from which flakes were struck so that a wider range of specific tools could be produced. Africa and Europe seem to have developed this innovation in parallel. This provides a new answer to the old argument between 'diffusionists' (who see new ideas spreading out from an advanced centre) and 'evolutionists' (who see human societies in similar conditions coming up with the same solutions to the problems of development independently).

THE THORNBOROUGH HENGES

Neolithic archaeology faces a crisis in North Yorkshire. This revolves around the famous Thornborough Henges. These monuments are unique. There are three of them, almost identical in size and layout, and they are set in a row, extending across 1.7 km of landscape. Each is comprised of massive banks and ditches (the original uprights were made of wood and have not survived), and has a diameter of about 240 m. Only four British henges are larger – all in Wiltshire and Dorset. Hardly surprising, then, that the Thornborough Henges have been dubbed the 'Stonehenge of the North'.

Much of the appreciation of the henges, and their remarkable place in British prehistory, comes in the wake of a proposal by Tarmac Northern Ltd to extend quarrying into two new extraction sites within the 'archaeology zone' dominated by the three Thornborough Henges. This would destroy 111 acres of prehistoric archaeology. Already, test excavations have revealed evidence of ritual activity continuing around the henges over some 3,000 years. This includes human burials and three probable processional ways, two defined by banks and ditches (cursuses), one by a double-pit alignment. If the destruction of the henges' environs goes ahead, important information about the meaning of the henges will be lost; as at Stonehenge, the relationship between the ceremonial monuments and the sacred landscape in which they lie is essential to their interpretation. Heritage Action, The Friends of Thornborough and other local groups are campaigning to stop the quarrying.

BURIALS OF THE BEAKER ELITE

The 'Beaker' folk of the Early Bronze Age – named after their distinctive, decorated, red-coloured 'beakers', probably used for drinking mead – have featured heavily in recent discoveries. The 'Amesbury Archer' (excavated in 2002) was buried near Stonehenge in the late third millennium BC accompanied by five Beaker vessels, golden hair ornaments, three copper knives, a quiver full of arrows, and two stone wrist-guards to protect his left arm from the whiplash of the bowstring. Chemical analysis of his tooth enamel showed he came from the area around modern Switzerland. Was he part of a new metal-working elite that had arrived from the Continent? Was this evidence for an embryonic ruling class with the power to raise a great monument like Stonehenge? Then, from another site nearby, came the seven 'Boscombe Bowmen' (excavated 2003) – three adult males, a teenage male and three children in one normal-sized grave. Buried with them were eight Beaker vessels, five flint arrowheads, a boar's tusk, and an unusual bone toggle. Of the same date as the Amesbury Archer, the Boscombe Bowmen add to our impression that a new group had arrived or evolved in the Wessex region around the time Stonehenge was built.

New scientific results have quashed the idea that the Boscombe Bowmen also came from across the Channel; rather, chemical analysis of their teeth this time indicates they came from Wales. This is a stunning discovery, since the bluestones at Stonehenge – believed to have been rearranged at least four times between c. 2,400 and 2,000 BC – came from the Preseli Hills in Pembrokeshire, south-west Wales. Did the Boscombe Bowmen arrive with the stones? Are the three men among the builders of Stonehenge?

There was news of yet another new Beaker-age discovery, this time at Gayhurst in Northamptonshire near the M1 motorway. Bones from perhaps 600 cattle were buried in one of seven Beaker barrows excavated at the site between 1997 and 2002 by Northamptonshire Archaeology. Though the other six barrows had been ploughed flat in medieval times, the largest – 34 m in diameter – still survived as a low earthwork. The excavators found two ditches around the outside and a massive grave-pit in the middle – 3.5 m long and 1.45 m deep – which contained five successive burials. Piled over the barrow of the primary burial – an adult man in an oak lined chamber, buried in an extended position – were the cattle bones. Was this evidence of a huge funerary feast? The other four burials were placed above the roof of the burial chamber – after the feasting, and after the burial chamber had collapsed. Then the barrow seems to have been enlarged, and the second ditch was dug outside. Finally, two more cremations were made, dated between 2,100 and 1,900 BC. It seems the feasting was over, for there were no more cattle bones in the second ditch. A preliminary study of some of the cattle bones shows there was a preference for joints with high meat-yields; there are disproportionate quantities of upper-limb and pelvic bones. Was the meat of 600 animals all consumed in a single feast? Or was the feasting spread over many years? Either way, the first occupant of this Beaker barrow, the man in the oak-lined chamber, may have been another of the Early Bronze Age elite.

CHARIOTS OF THE WARLORDS, GOLD OF THE GODS

An Iron Age chariot-burial containing three surprises has been found by Oxford Archaeology at Ferrybridge in West Yorkshire, where the A1(M) motorway crosses the River Wharfe. Though the wooden parts had long since rotted, the iron tyres on the wheels remained. Several chariot fittings were also recovered, including the five bronze terret rings fixed to the wooden yoke to gather the reins.

The first surprise was that the chariot itself was intact and complete. Of the 20 Iron Age chariot-burials known, in most the vehicle had been dismantled; in only two or three other examples was this not the case. The second surprise was in the ditch surrounding the grave. There, archaeologists found bones from at least 250 cattle, mainly animals aged two to three years – the prime age for slaughtering meat. There were also a few pig bones, and single bones from a horse and sheep. Presumably these are the remains of funerary feasting, for which there is very little evidence elsewhere in the Iron Age. Thirdly, the Ferrybridge chariot-burial is in the wrong place. Though chariots were widely used in Late Iron Age Britain – they are recorded by classical writers like Caesar and Tacitus, and stray finds of chariot fittings are not uncommon – known chariot-burials have, until recently, been confined to East Yorkshire. Three were excavated on the prominent hill above the village of Wetwang Slack in 1984, and then another in the same place in 2001. But we now have one from Newbridge near Edinburgh (excavated in 2001), and another from Ferrybridge in West Yorkshire.

Chariots were costly and prestigious battle-carts for warrior elite. Burial with a chariot was an assertive display of rank and role. A practice once believed confined to a small area may in fact have been widespread in the centuries before the Roman Conquest. The funeral of a great British king – celebrated in Celtic style shortly after the Roman Conquest at the Folly Lane site just outside Verulamium (Roman St Albans) – included the burning of a chariot, along with many other rich offerings, as if this were an essential part of the traditional send-off.

Other new discoveries come from Sedgeford in north-west Norfolk, the area with the richest Iron Age hoarding in Britain. The neighbouring parish of Snettisham is famous for its fabulous hoards of gold, electrum, silver and bronze torcs (neck-rings), buried in 12 small pits. The Sedgeford team had set out to investigate an Anglo-Saxon village, but they suddenly found themselves digging gold – Iron Age gold. First they found a hoard of gold coins hidden inside an animal bone. They were Gallo-Belgic E gold staters, dated c. 60–50 BC, and at least 20 of them had been placed inside the shaft of a cow's front right humerus, while another 19 were found dispersed nearby. The bone and coins had been placed in a small pit, and round about was evidence for rituals involving pot smashing and horse sacrifice, as well as huge boundary ditches, apparently demarcating a sacred area at the base of a slope, close to a river, a natural spring and a possible area of marshland.

That was in the summer of 2003. The following Easter, the same team, working in another part of the parish, found the missing terminal from a broken gold torc that had been in the British Museum for 40 years. This extraordinary chance discovery has alerted archaeologists to the possibility of other Celtic ritual sites in the parish. A sacred landscape much wider in extent than the immediate vicinity of the famous Snettisham hoards is emerging to view. The latest news from the site (summer 2004) is that one of the boundary ditches near the coin hoard contained a small group of fineware pottery – a mixture of Late Iron Age and Early Roman vessels – probably dating to the mid 1st century AD, that is, to the time of the Icenian client-kingdom and the Boudiccan Revolt.

ROMANO-BRITISH TOWNS

Two towns have dominated recent work on Roman Britain: Canterbury and London. The Whitefriars Project in Canterbury, dubbed 'the Big Dig', which started in 1999 and finished in 2004, was a massive rescue dig to explore a large slice of the south-eastern part of the town between the ancient walls and the central zone, amounting to an astonishing 6 per cent of the old city. The exploration was spurred on by a rolling programme of demolition, earth-moving, pile-driving, and new building by the developers of a new shopping centre. So how much of the city's history has been changed by new discoveries?

Firstly, no real evidence was found to support the idea of Canterbury as an oppidum (a major political centre with perimeter defences) in the late Iron Age. Material of this date has only been found in a small central area where a Roman temple precinct later developed; there was very little Iron Age evidence at Whitefriars. Perhaps, then, Canterbury originally developed around a religious sanctuary beside a ford over the River Stour.

Secondly, the Whitefriars site seems to have straddled two urban zones in the Early Roman period, a more developed inner one close to the centrally-placed public buildings, and an outer one which remained largely open ground. Romano-British towns were not, perhaps, as built-up as we might have thought: urbanism was a rather fragile flower in ancient Britain. Thirdly, fuel has been added to the debate about 'the decline of the towns'. Whitefriars has evidence both for dilapidation and abandonment, and for new building and continuing commercial activity. But which is the dominant trend? A grand town-house was certainly refurbished, with new rooms added and floors re-laid, in the fourth century. But later, from the fifth-century evidence, we seem to have an apocalyptic vision of 'the end of civilisation': seven bodies dumped unceremoniously in a ditch beside a track running across an area of wasteground.

London continues to be of prime interest to Romanists for two reasons: the frenetic pace of redevelopment in the City and Southwark, where the Roman remains lie; and the high water-table, which means layers of waterlogged archaeology just beneath the surface, with rich hauls of preserved timber structures and wooden artefacts. In the space of a few months in 2001, for instance, London produced evidence of three, possibly four, bucket-chains for raising water from giant wells – discoveries that are unique in the Roman Empire, with both iron links and the wooden box-buckets preserved. A short while later, there was the spectacular discovery of an elaborate Roman bath-house beneath the American-themed 'Babe Ruth' diner in Shadwell in the East End. Was this evidence for a Late Roman port east of London, perhaps replacing the old port along the City waterfront after a defensive wall was built along the riverbank?

The bucket-chains from two sites in the City had revealed how Roman London was supplied with water. The Shadwell bath-house had pinpointed a hitherto unsuspected extramural settlement to the east. The Tabard Square site in Southwark has now yielded something equally remarkable: a monumental Roman inscription from the 2nd century – the oldest one known to mention London, or more accurately, Londiniensium, which means 'of the Londoners'. Excavation of the site by the PCA archaeological unit has now finished. Like Canterbury Whitefriars, it was a massive operation, the largest single dig in London's history, covering 1.25 ha. As well as the inscription, it also yielded another headline-grabbing discovery: an unopened pot of moisturising cream, into which the finger-marks of the last (Roman) user were deeply gouged. We can now report something of the context for these unusual finds.

The earliest settlement was of clay and timber buildings, probably shops, dating to the 1st century AD, but this was wiped away around AD 72. The character of the site then completely changed. Two small square buildings (11 m × 11 m), very probably Romano-Celtic temples, were built. About 50 m south ran a ditch, interpreted as a ritual boundary, owing to the numerous unusual small finds discovered therein: exquisite tiny brooches, seal boxes, and coins. Between temples and ditch was a high-status structure – interpreted as a pilgrims' inn – which appears to have been in the form of a winged corridor villa, 25 m long, 10 m wide, with a possible flight of steps to the first floor.

Tabard Square seems, then, to have been a ritual site. Except for the Mithras temple excavated in the 1950s and an inscription that refers to an Isis temple, there is very little evidence for religious activity in Roman London north of the river. Perhaps there was a division of space: administration and commerce concentrated in the 'Central Business District' to the north; religion and recreation on the South Bank.

TREASURES OF A CHRISTIAN KING?

In February 2004, the Museum of London Archaeology Service (MoLAS) made public the discovery of an Anglo-Saxon royal burial in Prittlewell, south-east Essex, that was fit to compare with Sutton Hoo. The body had completely rotted away, but the wooden burial chamber had been preserved by sand seeping through cracks to fill the air space, leaving artefacts still hanging on walls just where they had been placed at a funeral 1,400 years before.

Two gold-foil crosses indicate that the king – if he was indeed a king – may have been a Christian convert, but he was also equipped with everything he might need to resume a life of feasting and heroic display in a pagan underworld. Most of the 60 or so grave-goods in the burial chamber evoke that world of smoky halls, mead-swilling warriors and rich gift-exchange that we know mainly from Beowulf. Among the more exotic items were: a gold buckle; a flagon and bowl imported from the Byzantine Empire; a hanging bowl decorated with metallic strips and medallions; and two cauldrons, one small, the other huge, measuring 75 cm across. There were also two pairs of coloured glass vessels, eight wooden drinking cups with gilded mounts, and the remains of a large casket that may originally have contained textiles. An unusual item was the frame of a folding stool, perhaps from Asia Minor or Italy, while traces of gold braid and the presence of two Merovingian gold coins testify further to the rank of the grave's occupant. There was also a sword and a shield.

The dig had begun in October 2003 as part of a proposed road improvement on the site of a known Anglo-Saxon cemetery. Many of the objects uncovered were so delicate or ephemeral they had to be lifted by MoLAS conservators in a block with the soil surrounding them, to be 'excavated' later in the conservation laboratories of the Museum of London. By summer 2004, another fascinating object had emerged: a silver spoon, apparently placed with a few other items inside a wooden box. The spoon has an elongated handle, and etched upon its ovoid bowl is a Roman inscription. Only the letters FAB, and possibly RONAM, are readable. The letters may refer to a name, but the full meaning will probably never be known. Another noteworthy find was a lyre. When discovered, the lyre, which is of Sutton Hoo type, was just a dark patch on the ground. Nevertheless, the outline was complete – the first time we have ever seen this in Britain, since even at Sutton Hoo only the top half had survived.

The 'Prince of Prittlewell' was afforded one of the richest Anglo-Saxon burials known. The excavation of his grave is probably the most spectacular archaeological discovery of the year in Britain. But who was he? Preliminary study suggests an early 7th century date, broadly contemporary with Sutton Hoo. This provisional date, and the two gold-foil crosses found in the chamber, fit with the first two Christian kings of the East Saxons. One was King Saeberht, who was converted by St Mellitus, the third Archbishop of Canterbury, in AD 604. He was a contemporary of Raedwald, King of East Anglia, the man thought most likely to have been the occupant of the sumptuous Mound 1 ship-burial at Sutton Hoo. Because Saeberht's sons and heirs abandoned the faith, the second royal possibility is King Sigebert, who reigned half a century later, converting in AD 653. Analysis of some of the finds, especially the two Merovingian coins, may in due course allow us to narrow down the date one way or the other.

WHARRAM PERCY: THE SKELETONS

Medieval archaeology has traditionally focused on manors, villages and parish churches. The classic medieval dig was the 40-year project based at the deserted medieval village of Wharram Percy in Yorkshire. Though the project ended in 1990, the work of English Heritage specialist Simon Mays on the 687 skeletons from the cemetery at Wharram has only just reached completion. There is now a raft of new evidence about child nutrition, the role of women, and the town/country divide in medieval England.

The churchyard at Wharram was in use from c. AD 950 to 1850, but the village itself was deserted by the early 16th century, so the great majority of the burials were of medieval peasants. Of the total, 15 per cent of the skeletons were of infants. This sizeable sample of babies made possible an investigation of infant nutrition. The technique used was nitrogen stable isotope analysis. Nitrogen compounds are found in high quantities in breast milk and become incorporated in the growing bones of a baby. Bone growth in the Wharram skeletons matches those of modern populations up to the age of about one year. In the second year, Wharram children begin to fall behind, and by 10 years they average a full 20 cm shorter than today's children. Clearly, 'breast was best', and this was known to grandmothers and midwives in medieval Wharram Percy.

Two other findings are interesting to note, though predictable. Women's lives were hard. Child-bearing and suckling must have dominated adult life, for otherwise, given the high mortality, the population could barely have sustained itself. Osteoporosis – loss of bone density in old age, especially in women, leading to brittleness and an increased risk of fractures, especially of hip and spine – is both a modern problem, and, it turns out, a medieval one; in the latter case, probably due in large part to repeated pregnancy and prolonged lactation by undernourished mothers. At other times, they were expected to work hard at domestic chores or out in the fields. Bones grow to support muscular strength, but there is no difference in this respect between men and women at Wharram. Female osteoarthritis, on the other hand, is concentrated in legs and back, and this, along with the frequency of 'squinting facets', indicates distinctive, gender-based activity like grinding and weaving.

Finally, there is some support for the idea of the rural idyll: comparisons with skeletons from urban cemeteries in nearby York shows that the people of medieval Wharram were generally healthier, less disease-ridden, and less likely to suffer violence. On the other hand, their immunities to infection were lower: York skeletons have a higher proportion of healed lesions; in other words, York people were more likely to recover from injury and infection than their country cousins.

METAL-DETECTORS: GOOD OR BAD?

Are we for or against metal-detectors? The issue has divided archaeologists for a generation. Some, like the late Tony Gregory in Norfolk and Kevin Leahy in Lincolnshire, pioneered good relations with local metal-detectorists in the 1970s and piloted successful recording systems. Their model has formed the basis of two major recent initiatives: a new Treasure Act (introduced in 1997) whose main purpose is to encourage finders to report all discoveries by offering a guaranteed reward; and the Portable Antiquities Scheme (launched in 1997), a network of county-based Finds Liaison Officers (FLOs) whose job it is to record finds and find-spots. There have been three developments over the last year.

First, the Treasure Act has been modified so that prehistoric base-metal – not just precious-metal – objects qualify as 'treasure' as long as there are at least two from the same spot. Thus, for instance, a hoard of Bronze Age axes would now count. Second, the Portable Antiquities Scheme has finally become fully operational, its network of FLOs now covering the whole country. Third, the BBC TV series Hidden Treasure, which featured a succession of spectacular metal-detected treasure finds, caused a storm of protest from archaeologists incensed that it emphasised commercial – rather than archaeological – values. The message, it was claimed, was 'buy yourself a metal-detector and get rich quick'. The series probably strengthened the ill-informed fear that some archaeologists allegedly have; that all metal-detectorists are irresponsible treasure-hunters. Nonetheless, a significant number of archaeologists now agree that 'responsible' metal-detecting should be supported, and that the new Treasure Act and the Portable Antiquities Scheme are powerful tools for ensuring that the data generated are properly recorded. Some would go further and argue that metal-detectorists are 'salvage archaeologists' rescuing threatened information about the past from the destructive processes in the plough-soil, and that plots of metal-detected finds are an exciting and fast-expanding resource for both researchers and heritage managers.

WHO OWNS OUR DEAD?

Archaeologists value human remains from all periods. In some countries, like Australia and the USA, there is fierce debate about the ancient remains of indigenous people. But in Britain, the strongest debate turns on how archaeologists deal with more recent remains. This is particularly true of World War I and II fatalities. However, government policy on this issue has not been consistent. Thus, in the 1960s and 1970s, virtually every accessible Battle of Britain site was picked over – by amateurs and experts alike – all with very little control, bar a 'Note of Guidance' issued by the Ministry of Defence (MoD) in the 1960s. Indeed, in 1973, the MoD stated that it had abandoned all claim to crashed planes from the world wars, and that rights to surviving wrecks fell to the landowners. But by the late 1970s, they reversed this position, issuing excavation guidelines in which they claimed title to all British and German wrecks.

Control has since become increasingly tight, and by 1986, the Protection of Military Remains Act was brought into force. It meant licences had to be sought before investigations were undertaken. Though this might appear to be a positive move, tighter control has meant, inevitably, that much less work has been undertaken on battlefield sites. Such work can, however, serve an important humanitarian role. Consider the case of Sgt Pilot 'Eddie' Egan, lost during the Battle of Britain – it was only after careful sifting of a plane crash site in a Kentish wood that archaeologists found a brass plate with the serial number of Egan's plane, proving this was his aircraft. Consequently, the Commonwealth War Graves Commission provided a grave with a headstone bearing Egan's name. The peace of mind and condolence this afforded his family cannot be underestimated.

Now, in 2004, the issue is again being debated in the Department of Culture, Media and Sport's Care of Historic Remains paper. Among other issues, the governmental report considers current laws relating to human remains kept in British museums, and claims for their repatriation. The document, jointly published with the Welsh Assembly, is based on the recommendations of the Working Group on Human Remains in a report published in November 2003. Four main points are under discussion. First, the report considers whether current laws relating to the holding of human remains by British museums are sufficient. At present, museums are prevented from returning human remains: the report recommends that they should be given the discretion to do so. Secondly, should museums holding human remains be subject to some form of code of practice or regulation? There is currently no licensing authority with the power to secure high standards of care for human remains held in museum collections – again, the report urges changes. Thirdly, do we need a ‘Human Remains Advisory Panel’ to mediate claims for repatriation? Fourthly, the report considers how museums should handle and deal with claims for restitution of human remains. As part of the solution, it recommends that there should be better information available to the claimant and researchers about the human remains kept in museum collections. Whichever way policy moves, we can be sure that the issues – far from black and white – will continue to be hotly debated.

ARCHITECTURE

OFFICE TOWER, 30 ST. MARY AXE, LONDON

Architect: Foster and Partners

With the completion of this radical new 40-storey tower for the Swiss Re insurance company, Norman Foster has irrevocably changed the London skyline, providing an instantly recognisable icon that has given the world of architecture a stunning exemplar for office design that opens new horizons environmentally, spatially, socially and structurally.

Its obvious point of departure from the conventional office towers that populate the City of London is its three-dimensional cigar-shaped form. Circular on plan throughout, the building rises from its paved plaza at a gently outward leaning angle to belly out smoothly around its mid-point before tapering elegantly to a conical top. It is totally glazed, and a powerful spiralling striped effect is derived from contrasting bands of glass which wind up and round the building's bulbous form. It has earned the popular soubriquet 'the Gherkin', and indeed the outer 'skin' is the most characteristic and inventive aspect of a building which in many other ways follows conventional office patterns.

Structural load-bearing elements are confined to the circular central core of lifts, stairs, duct shafts and lavatories, and the outer skin, leaving unobstructed interior floor spaces. These are not left as circular discs of space but are cut into with triangular voids to leave, on typical floors, six equal-sized areas of open plan office laid out on a 1.5 metre planning grid, for office tenants to fit out as required. The voids run up the facade of the building and are linked together either over two floors or six, to form tall narrow atria. Each successive floor plate, with its voids and 'spokes' of office space, rotates about the last by 5 degrees, so that the office floors, and their accompanying atrium spaces, rotate in a continuing upward spiral configuration that gives the exterior of the building its distinctive candy stripe appearance.

This creates an alternate overhanging, overlapping arrangement for the balcony edges of the individual office floor plates, and imbues the winding atrium spaces with movement and drama, heightened by the enormity of the views available through the glazed facade out over the city. The opportunity for penetration of daylight into the heart of the building is maximised, enabling reliance on artificial lighting to be reduced and thus aid economies in energy consumption.

The spiralling atria are part of a comprehensive programme of environmental measures aimed at making this building approximately 50 per cent more energy efficient than a conventional office of comparable quality. They were originally intended to provide a series of 'gardens in the sky', though this ambition is substantially unrealised in the finished building, but they play an important role in the reduction of air-conditioning and energy loads by assisting the introduction of natural ventilation at all levels of the building. This function is aided by the aerodynamic shape of the building, which encourages air to flow around it, rather than providing the resistance offered by a flat elevation. This minimises the impact of wind loads on the structure and cladding, and reduces the disturbing effects at ground level of deflected air movement. Wind tunnel tests indicate that conditions at the base of the tower affecting pedestrian comfort and safety are much improved over traditional forms.

The movement of air across the face of the building creates pressure differentials between different points on the surface. This acts as a driver for cross-ventilation between the lower two-storey atria and reinforces the natural stack effect that comes into play in the taller six-storey atria, to the extent that the designers envisage that the building could be naturally ventilated for at least 40 per cent of the year. Ventilation is achieved through the operation of motorised opening windows in the glazing to the spiralling light-wells, the lights being controlled by a series of perimeter weather stations in conjunction with internal sensors. The opening windows will also double up to provide natural smoke extraction in the event of fire, thus avoiding the need for mechanical smoke venting systems.

The external skin fully integrates the structure with the cladding, with the main structural diagrid frame occupying the zone between the double-glazed external envelope and, over the extent of the office areas, a secondary single-glazed inner screen. The substantial cavity is internally ventilated, drawing air out from the offices, and acts as a buffer zone, reducing the impact of solar gain in order to reduce the air-conditioning load. Solar control is also assisted by the introduction of blinds within the cavity. The light-wells by contrast have only the external skin, and utilise tinted solar glass with a high performance coating to control solar gain, hence the different colour when seen from the outside, compared with the office areas which utilise untinted clear glass.

The primary structure within this composite skin is a diagrid of simple straight circular steel sections linked to hexagonal welded steel nodes at alternate storey levels. The nodes are generated from three intersecting steel plates, two to the crossing diagonal columns and one to the horizontal perimeter floor beams, welded together at angles that vary according to the variable geometry derived from the tapering cylindrical form. The resulting structure derives great strength and rigidity from its three dimensional interlocking grid, with its inherent ability to transmit loads smoothly around the entire facade. The completed steel frame is hidden behind a substantial cladding of fire resistant boards, whose white finish reads through the glazed skin and emphasises the twisting diamond pattern of the structure.

From the 34th storey upwards, as the form tapers to its apex, the glazing reverts entirely to the darker grey colour of the spiralling light-wells, and the presence of three storeys of mechanical plant space is signalled by a double ring of metal guide rails for the mobile cleaning gantry. At level 38 there is a suite of private dining rooms, at level 39 a restaurant, and at the topmost level a spectacular bar. This is formed as a mezzanine level with its curving balcony set back from the facade to permit the full drama of the glazed conical roof to be enjoyed from both the restaurant and bar. Here the main structural frame terminates, leaving as a final cap only the slender diagonal glazing bars and transoms of the external glazing system meeting in a dramatic central oculus, while patrons enjoy an unrivalled 360 degree panoramic view over the City.

At the foot of the building the faceted glazed cladding is cut away to reveal the main entrance with its banks of clear glass revolving doors set back at an angle behind the huge exposed columns of the diagrid frame, with their faceted white cladding. These imposing struts rise directly from the ground plane at the point of intersection, the base of the V, as though the building were sitting on its knuckles, and form a rather daunting grille where one might have wished for a more welcoming portal. By its very nature the circular tapering form of the building releases a considerable amount of the site area for furnishing as a landscaped plaza, and also maximises the amount of sunlight penetrating down to the ground between the surrounding buildings.

From the immediate viewpoint of the plaza and surrounding streets, however, the soaring height and relatively slender proportions of the tower, evident in long range views, are not perceived. As the upper storeys gradually recede from view behind its middle section, the building seems much more bulbous and overpowering when seen from below. There is much more to say about this innovative design than can be summarised here. Its apparent grace and simplicity is, in part, a direct result of the application of very sophisticated parametric modelling techniques. Such techniques were originally developed by the automobile and aerospace industries for plotting, manipulating and rationalising complex curved surfaces and forms but have been further developed to enable precise dimensional and locational data to be transferred electronically directly into the manufacturing process. This is a huge step forward in office design and aims to utilise technology in an environmentally productive and energy efficient manner, while rising above the purely mechanical to produce an inspiring and creative piece of architecture for the 21st century.

MAGGIE'S CENTRE, NINEWELLS HOSPITAL, DUNDEE, SCOTLAND

Architect: Gehry and Partners

Executive Architect: James E. Stephen Architects

This small but instantly recognisable building, opened at the end of September 2003, is the latest in a nationwide series of support centres for cancer sufferers, and the third to open in Scotland. Conceived and inspired by Maggie Keswick Jencks, who died of cancer in 1995, the centres are intended to supplement the work and facilities of the hospitals to which they are attached, by providing opportunities for support, counselling and care for patients and their families in a manner and an environment not typically provided by the NHS.

Ninewells Hospital is located to the west of Dundee, set on high ground with views to the south over the Firth of Tay, and the architect has fully exploited this setting in the location of the centre. A short walk from the hospital's oncology unit, the building is approached through a grove of trees and sits on top of a steep bank overlooking the hospital approach road, enjoying views directly out over the estuary.

The brief for the building sought to provide both an environment in which a sense of community and support can be developed, and a range of spaces catering directly for patients' and carers' needs, whether it be a place to sit and relax, a space for remedial therapy and relaxation classes, or a small private room for counselling. Frank Gehry's design has all the imprints of the stylistic approach typical of his larger and more famous creations. Though modest in scale, its shape is characteristically complex and striking. It features a solid white rendered elliptical tower contrasting with and acting as a calm focus and point of anchorage for the quirky and irregularly folded planes of the surrounding roof, wrapping around the tower and extending beyond the walls of the centre in a series of exaggerated overhangs. With the exception of the tower, all the accommodation is at ground level. Planned around an open plan entrance lobby, reception and office area, the adjacent relaxation room and the dining/kitchen area are easily visible and read as part of an integrated sequence of spaces unified by the overriding and stunning 'roofscape' of timber framing exposed on the underside of the undulating folded roof planes. Therapy and retreat rooms, together with back-up storage and lavatory facilities, complete the accommodation.

The plan form is as organic as the section is geometric, with external and internal walls adopting varying degrees of curvature. This culminates in the tight concave and convex forms of the look-out tower projecting forwards on the south-west elevation adjacent to a projecting external seating area, which is suggestive of the spreading wings of a bird about to depart its perch. Internally the flooring throughout is of solid beech, while the staircase and internal joinery are made from fine-grained Douglas fir, so the warmth and texture of natural wood finishes are a predominant feature of the interior.

The roof structure, however, remains the single exceptional tour de force of the design, and a tribute to the craftsmanship of its fabricators, accounting for nearly half the cost of the building. The overall shape of the roof, and its relationship with the supporting walls, was developed with the aid of sophisticated computer programmes and 3D modelling techniques. It is formed from a series of intersecting and irregularly folded planes, like the pleats of a badly ironed skirt, rising and falling over the space below so that the timber structure is required to curve both on plan and in section. The primary ridge and valley beams are constructed from laminated veneer lumber, with treated softwood purlins spanning between them at varying centres and angles depending on the requirements of the geometry, all expressed internally beneath a double skin deck of plywood, which acts as the ceiling finish. The main beams are supported on a series of steel hollow section posts set within the external wall cavities.

The roof is covered with stainless steel shingles, 1,800 × 600 × 0.5 mm thick, which have been given an 'angel-hair' or brushed finish in order to cut down surface reflections and give the roof a silky sheen. At the perimeter the stainless steel roofing continues past the timber edge beam and terminates in a simple drip, sometimes as much as three metres beyond the face of the building. There are no gutters, at the express wish of the designer, and rainwater therefore cascades freely off the roof valleys to be collected in ground drains concealed beneath circles of pebbles. The lack of such visually intrusive features as gutters, brackets and down-pipes helps to establish a real sense of the elemental to the composition as a whole.

At £1.3 million for 255 sq. metres of accommodation, this is an expensive building and its cost was met by private donations. While practical and functional, it is also uplifting and inspirational, and its high public profile will help to focus greater attention on the needs of the people it serves and the desperately needed work on future developments being taken on by the inheritors of Maggie Jencks' ambitious legacy. The building received a commendation in the 2004 Royal Fine Art Commission Trust's Building of the Year Awards as a building 'of the highest social significance'.

THE BULLRING SHOPPING CENTRE AND SELFRIDGES DEPARTMENT STORE, BIRMINGHAM

Concept Architect (Bullring): Benoy

Executive Architect (Bullring): Chapman Taylor

Architect (Selfridges): Future Systems

The opening of the Bullring Shopping Centre on 4 September 2003 represents the culmination of over a decade of planning and design work. The Bullring Centre, comprising 110,000 m<sup>2</sup> of retail space for shops, cafés and restaurants, new housing and 3,000 car parking spaces, ranks as the largest inner-city regeneration project carried out in Europe in recent years, and promotes unimpeded pedestrian access through a series of interconnecting internal malls, streets and squares.

Where the site was previously cut off from the city centre by the inner ring road a new open square has been established, with the roadway downgraded and buried within a tunnel. This has enabled a new north-south pedestrian axis to be created providing a link between the end of the High Street at the top end of the site and the newly formed paved plaza around the gothic spire and pinnacles of St Martin's Church at the lower end. There is a substantial 19 metre drop down the site, but this has been handled as a broad continuous slope opening out towards the lower end into sweeping terraces framing a restored church.

The huge bulk of the development is split into two halves either side of this paved concourse, each half anchored to one of the major department stores. These are located at opposing ends of a wide two-level cross-mall that passes underneath the north-south axis at the lower level and at the upper level provides access direct to the paved concourse through tall glazed screens. The internal circulation is completed by two further multi-level malls which return from the node points at each end of the cross-mall back up to the entrances either side of the new open space at the end of High Street. The overall configuration is of a triangular layout of multi-level covered malls bisected by the north-south slope of the street.

Each of the resulting V-shaped mall spaces is roofed by a ceiling of sheer glass that is almost flat and passes clear over the lines of the internal facades fronting the malls. Each of these 'sky planes' is supported from above by a series of major triangulated steel trusses passing above the glass plane, which in turn support a system of secondary struts and bracing cables picking up the four point 'spider' fixings located at the junction of each set of panes. The glass roof is part of a deliberate design strategy aimed at passing off the malls as quasi external streets, and the elevations over the shop fronts are broken up into different architectural treatments as if to suggest individual building blocks. However, their detailing and the materials used do not really reflect the practicality required of proper external elevations and the malls consequently come across as rather 'odd ball' internal spaces, slightly aggressive in feel and lacking the finesse and elegance to be expected of a well designed interior.

A certain lack of elegance and proportion might equally apply to a judgement of the external architectural treatment of the mammoth development, whose huge height and volume in relation to the surrounding streets is neither effectively disguised nor dramatically exploited by the modelling and fenestration of the facade. However, these particular criticisms cannot be levelled at Selfridges, one of the two major anchor stores, which occupies the corner of the eastern block.

Compared with the somewhat banal post-modern language of the surrounding elevations, Selfridges is by contrast breathtakingly bizarre and unconventional. It is essentially a windowless box, in itself a perfectly rational solution to the problem of accommodating an entirely inward looking environment such as a department store. But here it is anything but a 'box', its form instead softened and massaged into the most exotically curvilinear three dimensional 'blob'-like form that oozes away from its rather perfunctory vertical junction with the rest of the Bullring Centre.

The amorphous quality of the building is further emphasised by its snake-like 'skin' or outer covering, which comprises some 15,000 natural anodised aluminium discs, 600 mm in diameter with a slightly convex face, standing just proud of a rendered weathering surface that is painted a deep shade of blue. The discs are set out equidistantly in horizontal rows, slightly interlocking, and following the undulating angles of the sub-skin, thus generating a constantly changing and varied sequence of reflections that lend a disarmingly light and diaphanous quality to such a huge and otherwise largely blank volume. In keeping with the lack of formality in its shape, the store can be entered from a relatively large number of points, and at varying levels, both internally from the malls, and externally via free-form terraces and a cable suspended bridge link to the adjacent multi-storey car park, in the form of a curved glazed tube. External entrances are effected through the projecting lozenge-shaped glazed window elements that break through the facade. These overlap the rows of aluminium discs and their shape is accentuated by having the outer edges of the glazed surface treated with a pattern that helps to obscure the perimeter weatherproofing detailing, while helping them to read as the 'eyes' of some weird creature. The unique shape of the building has inevitably given rise to all manner of epithets, such as 'amoeba', 'alien cocoon', 'fish', 'snake', 'bloid' and 'predator'. Viewed from the curved frontages of the terraces overlooking St Martin's Church, the relationship of the shapes of the upper entrance 'eye' and the protruding 'beak' of the lower terrace as it wraps around a second mouth-shaped glazed entrance is uncannily suggestive of a whale. Internally, the free-form aesthetic continues. Apart from the floors and the escalators, there are few flat surfaces, straight lines and right-angled corners on the retail floors. Each floor has been designed individually and designers include Eldridge Smerin, Stanton Williams, Cibic and Partners with Lees Associates and Future Systems. Surfaces and shapes are curved and softened, particularly around the central voids, with their moulded and drooping bulkheads and curvy balustrades, and with the rounded soffits of the escalators criss-crossing the atrium spaces. This is not a building that serves easy comparison with other examples of its type, as it is such an unconventional and one-off design response to the usual constraints of the retail world: tight cost control, clear visibility, efficient pedestrian flow, and an unmistakable image to support the brand. But it cannot be argued that the commissioning chief executive at the time the building was conceived, Vittorio Radice, and the architect behind the design, Jan Kaplicky, have not achieved their ambition to create a building that would be instantly recognisable without signage. Birmingham now boasts the ultimate retail icon, a seductive and shimmering, if ultimately alien, presence in its newly configured and extended city centre.

GRADUATE CENTRE, LONDON METROPOLITAN UNIVERSITY, HOLLOWAY ROAD, LONDON

Architect: Studio Libeskind

The London Metropolitan University is the latest incarnation of an educational establishment that has been known previously as the Northern Polytechnic Institution, the Polytechnic of North London and the University of North London.

This lack of a consistent identity is reflected in the fabric of the campus, with its somewhat disorganised collection of buildings, which date from the Victorian era up to the last decade. The Graduate Centre is intended to imprint a greater sense of identity and quality on the campus and is part of a developing programme of new buildings and infrastructure being designed by well known architects.

The result of an architectural competition held in 2001, the £3.5 million centre caters for the University's 5,000 graduate students. The accommodation includes a large reception area entered via a small plaza off the street, two 50-seat lecture rooms, a multi-purpose gathering area and a 100-seat lecture theatre. All the spaces are accessible from a wide corridor running along the back of the building where it makes a direct abutment to the existing structure. The centre occupies a long narrow space in front of the existing University building and fronts directly onto Holloway Road, a typically busy, noisy, traffic-dominated north London street. The form of the building responds to its immediate urban context in an aggressive and uncompromising manner, expressed as a series of tumbling, interlocking geometric volumes that pay scant regard to the three dimensional norms of vertical and horizontal planes.

As a result of the precision of its modelling and its metallic finishes it has a crystalline or rock-like quality, though of a markedly random nature, as no two surfaces or lines seem to follow any other or adhere to any common organisational scheme. Conceived as three intersecting volumes, the building rises to a peak on its short north elevation, set at right angles to the road, its trapezoidal north- and west-facing elevations being slashed by a wildly asymmetric diagonally aligned window that wraps around the angled corner and illuminates both upper and lower foyer spaces. The two secondary elements, expressing the volumes of the lecture rooms at each floor level, continue the theme of irregular geometry, emerging from the dominant volume in a series of canted and splayed surfaces wrapping around the lower southern side, with irregularly shaped windows cut into the surfaces at seemingly random locations.

The building is clad with a rain-screen of stainless steel panels arranged in a regular diagonal grid, which encloses all the exposed elevations including the sloping roof planes. The triangular panels are embossed with a dimple pattern, and are all the same size and shape, except where the grid is arbitrarily terminated at one of the angled building corners and the panels are simply cut to shape as necessary. None of the diagonal grids correlate from one surface to the next across the building edges, so the gridding seems an entirely decorative statement rather than demonstrating any structural or internal logic. Even the window edges fail to observe any symmetry or alignment with the lines of the regular triangular panels. The disturbing 'leaning tower' geometry, and the wilful use of strange angles, is reflected no less powerfully in the interior, where there are no right-angled corners and no vertical walls, and where the effect of the apparently randomly placed and angular windows is all the more idiosyncratic.

The fact that there are few vertical walls in the building did nothing to simplify construction methods, which utilise cast in-situ concrete techniques as well as drywall construction, but inevitably the spaces generated are unique and memorable, if at times somewhat disturbing. The structure required exceptional temporary support works during construction, as the sloping planes and interconnecting elements only function as a structurally coherent design when the whole building is complete. Typical of the bizarre nature of the interiors is the main staircase, which is angular on plan, tapering to become narrower at its foot, and is set between concrete walls angled off the vertical, with each side wall set at a different angle.

Other spaces display an equally anarchic approach, with sloping and angled walls, sloping ceiling planes and canted irregular windows plunging past the floor or poking down from above. The internal finishes are simple and robust, the concrete walls being finished with a consistent translucent paint, and the ceilings displaying a series of randomly criss-crossing narrow bands in which are housed all the necessary services elements and down-lighters. It is a building in which the complexity of the spatial experience takes precedence over complexity of material, detail, texture or colour, and the building is remarkably coherent as a result, if a little ascetic.

The architect's pronouncements on the matter of symbolism and the initial creative impulse appear to place considerable emphasis on the Orion constellation and other features of the northern sky, but this seems fanciful and is not in the least bit evident from a study of the building as an object. Nevertheless it does stand as a remarkably effective and powerful symbol for the new campus, despite its relatively small size, its angular jagged geometry giving it an eye-catching presence and creating a point of reference in the generally confused and polyglot north London environment in which it sits. Hopefully the still-to-be-completed companion developments will help to play their part in tying together the currently disparate components of the University campus into a more coherent whole.

WALES MILLENNIUM CENTRE, CARDIFF

Architect: Percy Thomas Architects

The new Wales Millennium Centre lies to the south of the city and occupies a prominent and roughly triangular site overlooking Cardiff Bay, close by the site of the new National Assembly for Wales, currently under construction, and the recently infilled and landscaped Oval Basin, a former dock.

At the heart of the new building is a 1,900-seat auditorium that follows the traditional horseshoe plan shape for opera houses. This is designed to be acoustically appropriate for both operatic and amplified forms of music, thus enabling a whole range of performance events to be catered for.

Further accommodation includes large stage areas and two large rehearsal rooms, two smaller studio spaces and a wing for Urdd Gobaith Cymru, a Welsh youth movement, together with the usual ranges of backstage offices and support facilities. There are extensive public foyer and gallery areas with bars, some shops and a large public dining area.

The volume of the opera house, with its fly tower and adjoining secondary stages, is expressed in simple terms on the outside as a huge curved metal clad volume with a single over-arching curved roof plane, the sleek helmet-like shape surrounded and supported by a series of rugged, stepped and banded natural slate walls. The main approach to the Centre is on the axis of the auditorium, beneath the great sweeping overhang of the metal clad roof. Here the fronted facade is canted forward at a pronounced angle over a slightly concave soffit sloping down to the line of entrance doors.

The canted facade is inset with dramatic inscriptions, whose 2 metre-high letters are actually openings through the metal rain-screen, forming deep-set windows that illuminate the upper gallery levels as they sweep around the rear of the auditorium. The glazing to these huge letters is not itself cut to the shapes of the individual letters, but is formed from larger, double-glazed units that are masked out by the inner and outer skins of the wall construction, and mirrored in the cut-outs in the overriding metal rain-screen. The striking effect of the lettering is heightened by the use of tinted glass in colours ranging from blue to copper, casting coloured shafts of light over the interior surfaces.

The skin of the metal roof enclosure is constructed using an aluminium standing seam roof system. This is flexible enough to take the long gentle curves required to form the three-dimensional shapes and it also acts as the principal waterproofing element. A series of clips has been devised to provide the additional support required for further metal sections fixed at right angles to the standing seams, to which the sheet steel cladding panels are fixed. These are made from stainless steel with an embossed dimpled pattern and a light bronze coloured coating designed to resist the corrosive effects of the prevailing marine environment of Cardiff Bay. Designed to act only as a rain-screen, the panels are mounted so as to leave a clear gap between adjoining sheets, and each full-sized panel is secured by 32 fixings that remain visible and add a further fine grain to the sleek sheen of the panels.

The crisp lines and smooth surfaces of the bulbous enclosure to the auditorium stand in total contrast to the rugged natural appearance of the supporting fabric, which features a most unusual application of that most 'Welsh' of materials – slate. A series of stepped and curved stone walls wraps around the complex tying the building elements and the site together. To the south of the auditorium, three stepped bays define the public foyer and gallery spaces, with a fourth bay to the north of the auditorium, from whence the wall turns the corner and develops into a curved facade enclosing a substantial goods delivery and service yard. The return faces of the successive projecting bays are glazed to admit light to the interiors, and a further narrow horizontal window has been introduced at mid-height to break up the masses of stonework.

Far from being finely worked stonework, however, the elevations resemble more of a naturally fissured cliff face, or a very neatly constructed drystone wall, the material in question having been sourced from the off-cuts from a number of quarries in north Wales.

The supporting walls are constructed in reinforced concrete, each of the major bandings of material being built up in a traditional load-bearing manner from a projecting concrete toe, to the face of which is fixed a stainless steel shelf angle. The stones are prepared by being either sawn to a smooth finish or pillared (i.e. split or 'cleaved' at right angles to the usual cleavage plane) to create a rougher but regular face. Stones of many different sizes have been used, varying from a few centimetres to half a metre in length and in varying thicknesses, laid in random courses with the naturally riven face projecting downwards and the prepared face projecting outwards, for better weathering qualities. The walls are built in bands of contrasting colours, suggesting the variations to be found in natural rock strata, with some bands exposed and others recessed slightly, to form an unusually massive cavity wall construction. Recessed horizontal slivers of blue glass bricks have been inserted in the bands of slate to give an impression of the surprisingly intense colours that can be seen in some of the deeply stratified cliffs that characterise the Welsh coastline.

The sides of the auditorium facing the service yard maintain the horizontal stratified theme with deep bands of horizontal Norwegian spruce boarding, retaining its un-planed 'waney' edges to give a slightly rustic character, and long narrow strips of windows lighting the backstage offices and ancillary accommodation. The treatment of internal materials frequently picks up the prevailing theme of horizontal strata, as in the curving balustrades to the main public balconies which are clad in horizontal hardwood planking with a wide range of colour and texture, and also in the cladding to the auditorium walls, which utilises random cut glass gypsum tiles laid in narrow horizontal courses, reminiscent of the slate and timber finishes elsewhere, and pigmented in a strong red and orange hue. These are laid in random lengths and angled to achieve the desired acoustic performance by controlling the extent of resonance and reverberation.

ART

On 26 May 2004 an estimated £60 million worth of art was destroyed in a warehouse fire in east London, damaging the reputation of art shipping company Momart (which had responsibility for the works in the 10,000 sq ft storage facility) and causing great loss to the modern art world. But it was the Young British Artists' most devoted patron, Charles Saatchi, who grabbed the headlines, after key pieces from his collection perished in the blaze, including Tracey Emin's Everyone I have ever slept with from 1963 to 1995 and the Chapman Brothers' magnum opus, the toy soldier diorama, Hell. Despite losing over 100 works, Saatchi was not the only victim. Art dealer Leslie Waddington revealed that 150 works from his stockpile had gone up in smoke, and artists including Damien Hirst and Gillian Ayres lost considerable amounts of their own work. Sadly, a collection of pictures by Patrick Heron, who died in 1999 aged 79, was also doomed. The fact that Saatchi and the art world in general expressed devastation at the loss of so much modern art sparked heated debate between advocates of contemporary art and its naysaying opponents, who reacted with mirth on realising that 50 years of British art had been reduced to glowing embers.

It seemed at one stage that the general public's uneasiness with modern art may have been exacerbated by 10 Downing Street, despite the preponderance of 20th-century British art that is said to hang in its corridors. Cherie Blair reportedly vetoed an official portrait of her husband because she thought the work of Nicola Hicks, the artist chosen for the commission, was 'too scary'.

Widespread ignorance of art was revealed in a public poll conducted in October 2003 by the Encyclopaedia Britannica. It found that 7 per cent of people surveyed believed that Claude Monet's famous Water Lilies was painted by TV presenter Rolf Harris and that nearly half of those surveyed could not identify Leonardo Da Vinci as the creator of the Mona Lisa.

ART AND CELEBRITY

When it comes to celebrity endorsements of culture, pop star Sting and actor Mel Gibson may not spring to mind as the most devoted patrons of the arts. However, in July 2004, the pair pledged financial support to art preservation organisation, the Friends of Florence, to help restore 22 Michelangelo paintings and clean the revered sculpture David.

A famous name came to the Royal Academy's rescue in September 2003 when composer and theatre producer, Andrew Lloyd Webber, exhibited his extensive collection of Pre-Raphaelite and Victorian paintings in public for the first time following the cancellation of the Royal Academy's planned Egyptian art show. The exhibition attracted large crowds eager to experience Lord Webber's taste in art.

It has been suggested, however, that the Royal Academy put too much emphasis on famous names in 2003. Style really did supersede substance in an autumn show dedicated to the fashion guru Giorgio Armani to launch the Academy's new Burlington Gardens venue, formerly the premises of the Museum of Mankind. Despite exhibition director Norman Rosenthal's assurance that the show was not about commercial success but about 'the spirit of our times', the 400 Armani outfits on display succeeded in bringing in Hollywood's A-list to the opening parties.

By far the most bizarre art story of the year involved a celebrity collector, the actress Elizabeth Taylor, who launched legal proceedings against the descendants of a Jewish woman in May 2004 following a dispute concerning a work by Van Gogh. Taylor was at the height of her career in 1963 when her father paid £92,000 for the oil painting, View of the Asylum and Chapel at Saint-Remy. However, the great-grandchildren of Margarete Mauthner, who owned the painting in the 1930s, claimed it was looted by the Nazis and demanded its return or a share of the proceeds.

Tracey Emin made the headlines again in March 2004 when a north London school decided to sell a quilt that she had created with eight-year-old students as part of an art project. Emin demanded that the blanket be returned to her and threatened to refuse to authenticate the work as hers if Ecclesbourne primary school continued with its efforts to raise £35,000 from the sale. Another quilt appliquéd by Emin appeared in a theatre production of Jean Cocteau's play Les Parents Terribles, for which the artist was employed as set designer.

Although the Momart inferno created the biggest news of the art year, important world events also informed the works of a handful of artists. In October 2003, a group of Mancunian artists built an operational miniature version of the US internment camp at Guantanamo Bay, complete with mock prisoners, gates, guards and an interrogation centre. In the same month a new gallery, Hauser & Wirth, opened in central London with an exhibition by famed Los Angeles performer Paul McCarthy. His video featured actors frolicking while dressed in oversized rubber masks mimicking the Queen Mother, George W. Bush and Osama Bin Laden. The other big commercial gallery opening of the year was that of US dealer Larry Gagosian, whose Britannia Street venue became one of the largest in London and a significant addition to the up-and-coming King's Cross area.

THEFTS AND CAPERS

The biggest heist in recent memory took place in August 2003 when two thieves posing as tourists stole the Leonardo Da Vinci painting known as Madonna of the Yarnwinder from the Duke of Buccleuch's Drumlanrig Castle in Scotland. The £60 million picture had been subject to some suspicion in regard to its originality but experts agreed that the majority of the work had been painted by the 16th-century Italian master. Madonna of the Yarnwinder was one of very few such masterpieces to be privately owned and the Duke of Buccleuch's loss highlighted the potential security risks faced by all such art-owning estates.

In October 2003, street artist Banksy managed to sneak one of his works onto a wall at Tate Britain without anyone noticing. The picture, an oil painting covered in police incident tape, was only discovered when the glue used to hang the work gave way and it crashed to the floor.

AUCTION UPS AND DOWNS

The year 2004 was a good one for Sotheby's, in particular the evening of 5 May at its New York sales room, when a Picasso achieved the highest ever price for a work of art at $93 million (£56 million). The 1905 painting from Picasso's 'rose period' called Garçon à la Pipe was sold to an anonymous private buyer, thought most likely to be one of the Lauder brothers (heirs to the cosmetic fortune), the Las Vegas casino entrepreneur Steve Wynn or Microsoft's Bill Gates. Sotheby's good fortune continued in June 2004 when it enjoyed sales of Impressionist and Modern art totalling £61.47 million, the highest monthly total recorded in London in 15 years.

Despite Sotheby's successes, Christie's did not lose its traditionally dominant market position, and a record for post-war American painting was set a few days after the Picasso shocker when a Jackson Pollock sold in New York for $11.65 million (nearly £7 million). This was a welcome boost for Christie's which had attributed a drop in sales in the first half of 2003 (£589 million compared with £682 million in the same period in 2002) to the SARS epidemic and the war in Iraq. However, Christie's had no-one to blame but itself for two cases involving two works of art allegedly looted by Nazis from Jewish families in Germany and Austria. Despite a spirit of agreement within the international art fraternity that goods stolen in such circumstances should be handed back to heirs of the original owners, Christie's made no attempts to return the two paintings.

More embarrassment was heaped on Christie's when Taylor Thompson, the daughter of newspaper magnate Lord Thomson of Fleet, sued the auction house over a pair of urns bought a decade before, latterly believed to be fakes. The Louis XV gilt and bronze vases were bought for £1.9 million in 1994 but experts later declared them to be reproductions and so only worth £30,000. The court eventually ruled that the urns were more than likely to be real but that Christie's should have made it clear that there was a possibility they were copies.

MUSEUMS AND NEW SPACES

The Hayward Gallery, built in the late 1960s in the brutalist style of the surrounding concrete South Bank complex, received a facelift in 2003 with a new glass frontage, a café and a curved viewing pavilion. Designed by American artist Dan Graham, the work was entitled Waterloo Sunset after the famous song.

The Barbican was also given a makeover to celebrate its 20th anniversary and the gallery finally opened in April 2004 after a £1 million redevelopment that created an additional 140m<sup>2</sup> of display area. A new programme was also launched which mixed photography by Tina Modotti and Edward Weston with fine art by Helen Chadwick.

A grand old Warwickshire mansion, Compton Verney, became an exhibition venue in 2004 under the guidance of owner Sir Peter Moores, philanthropist and heir to the football pools millions. His eclectic collection includes some fine examples of 16th-century German art and antique Chinese bronzes as well as a smattering of modern art. The inaugural exhibition was installed by film director Peter Greenaway.

In the year under review, just three years after opening at a cost of £21 million in 2000, the New Art Gallery Walsall applied for further grants from the Arts Council. Visitor numbers fell from 250,000 in 2000 to just 110,000 in 2003 which was blamed on the failure to appoint a director for the first two years, followed by the closure of its spectacular top-floor restaurant.

Donations to US museums have always been incentivised with attractive tax breaks for private donors, so Sir Nicholas Goodison's recommendations to the Government in January 2004 concerning the possible introduction of similar measures in the UK were welcomed especially by museums whose grants have been consistently cut or frozen. 'We must find ways of encouraging more gifts from private owners and donors. In the United States private giving to public collections, with some encouragement from tax relief, is part of the country's culture. I want more people in the UK to discover the pleasure of giving in this way,' said Sir Nicholas.

In July 2004, it was announced that the Victoria and Albert Museum had failed to secure the £15 million lottery funding needed to build the Daniel Libeskind-designed extension, nicknamed the Spiral, putting the £80 million eight-year-old project into jeopardy. The V&A did, however, find anonymous funding for renovations to its central gardens, proving perhaps that it was the conservatism of the principal trustees, not a lack of funds, that thwarted the museum's most ambitious expansion plans.

On a similar theme, the National Gallery warned the Government that a £2.5 million grant reduction could result in galleries being closed to the public. In November 2003, the gallery's chairman had protested that the reduced funds also impacted on the institution's ability to prevent works of art such as Raphael's Madonna of the Pinks from being sold to overseas buyers.

The Tate's own funding crisis prompted Nicholas Serota to consider, for the first time, selling surplus works from the collection. This practice is heavily frowned upon in museum circles but was deemed necessary to bolster the Tate's limited funds for new acquisitions. An example of the museum's dwindling resources was witnessed in May 2004, when a major work by Francis Bacon, Study for Velazquez, was deemed too expensive, at £9.5 million, for the Tate to consider raising money to keep it in the country.

Also deemed too expensive was the entrance fee to Charles Saatchi's County Hall gallery on London's South Bank which, at £8.50, is second only to the Guggenheim Museum in New York in the list of the world's most expensive art attractions. Saatchi's gallery had hit the headlines once again in October 2003 following a dispute with County Hall landlord, Mac Okamoto, in which Okamoto ordered the closure of two of the gallery's rooms that were not in Saatchi's original lease.

FINDS AND ACQUISITIONS

In December 2003, an astronomer and self-styled art detective came up with the most spurious claim of the year by connecting the eruption of the volcano Krakatoa in 1883 with the blood red sky of Edvard Munch's The Scream. Donald Olson claimed he had pinpointed the exact spot where the painting was conceived by charting the stratospheric echo of the volcanic explosion and comparing it with reports that northern Europe experienced odd twilight glows.

Back on terra firma, the lengthy struggle to keep Raphael's Madonna of the Pinks in the UK finally ended in February 2004 when the Duke of Northumberland, then Britain's 108th richest man, sold the picture to the National Gallery for £35 million, a sum raised jointly by the Heritage Lottery Fund and the British public. The row over the huge amount of public money spent on the old masterpiece reached fever pitch when Tate director Sir Nicholas Serota exclaimed, 'we care too much for the past and not enough for the present and near-present.' The painting promptly went on a tour of galleries from Cardiff to Manchester and Durham but was scheduled to return to London for the National's Raphael exhibition in October 2004.

In January 2004, the Tate acquired an archive collection from the studio of Francis Bacon, one of the 20th-century's most important painters, thanks to the generous gift of Barry Joule, a friend of the artist. The Barry Joule Collection of material from Bacon's Reece Mews studio comprises over 1,200 items including many photographs and documents, as yet unstudied. Joule, a Canadian, became Bacon's neighbour and close friend in 1978.

SHOWS AND FAIRS

Annual visitor figures for art exhibitions once again revealed that London trails way behind other cultural cities such as New York, Paris and St Petersburg. London's highest visitor figures were achieved by the Victoria and Albert Museum's Art Deco display, which ranked 30th in the list of the world's most attended shows. More disturbing news was that touring shows are more popular abroad than in the UK. Max Beckmann's 2003 retrospective, for example, received an average of 1,042 visitors per day at the Tate Modern but 2,567 at the Pompidou in Paris.

On a more positive note, the Hayward Gallery was host to one of the biggest blockbusters of the year under review. Saved!, which was held from 23 October to 18 January 2004, was the centenary exhibition of the National Art Collections Fund (NACF) and among the 400 works were masterpieces such as Velazquez's The Rokeby Venus from the National Gallery in London. It was estimated that, throughout the 20th century, the NACF raised around £40 million in grants to buy works that would now command considerably higher prices. As part of its year-long celebrations, the NACF also helped to restore the Rodin's imposing sculpture The Burghers of Calais which stands in front of the Houses of Parliament.

Not only was Bill Viola's exhibition The Passions the first major showing of video art at the National Gallery (22 October–4 January 2004), surprisingly it was its first retrospective given to a contemporary artist. Cynics might have seen the exhibition as a ploy for a stuffy museum to get on the cutting-edge bandwagon but Viola's slow-moving quasi-religious figures glided across sleek plasma screens with grace reminiscent of a painting by an Old Master.

One of the greatest Old Masters, El Greco, received his first full retrospective in Britain at the National Gallery in 2004. First mounted by the Metropolitan Museum in New York, London's staging of the exhibition (12 February–23 May 2004) surveyed El Greco's early career as a painter of religious icons in Crete, his training in Italy and his mature career as painter to the court of Phillip II of Spain in Toledo.

While Spain celebrated the centenary of Salvador Dali in 2004, Scotland celebrated the 100th anniversary of the death of American artist James Whistler, albeit based on the slightly disingenuous link that he was widely collected by Scottish institutions and galleries. The famous painting of Whistler's mother was displayed following extensive restoration and cleaning.

Early 2004 saw the first annual Frieze Art Fair which was staged in a giant marquee in Regent's Park and immediately proved a commercial and critical success. Over 120 galleries came from as far afield as Brazil and the USA to exhibit and sell the best in cutting-edge art. Hot on its heels was a new photography fair, Photo London, which was held at the Royal Academy's Burlington Gardens in May 2004. More than 40 specialist dealers exhibited a broad range of work from 19th-century vintage and gelatin prints to contemporary works by artists such as Andreas Gursky and Cindy Sherman. Another photographic first was the Brighton Photo Biennial, which took place in October 2003.

PRIZES, COMMISSIONS AND SPONSORSHIP

For the duration of its run, October 2003–March 2004, the Tate Modern's annual £250,000 Unilever Turbine Hall commission attracted 750,000 visitors. Commonly likened to an artificial sun, The Weather Project by Icelandic–Danish artist Olafur Eliasson was constructed from 200 yellow lights shining through an artificial mist in the Tate's cavernous entrance hall. Bruce Norman was the next artist to be invited to fill the space and, as an innovator of video art, he intended to be the first artist to use sound rather than sculpture or light.

The Turner Prize glow may have dimmed in recent years but the exuberant transvestism of potter Grayson Perry brought a new lease of life to the 2003 award. Perry and his alter ego Claire, who wore a frilly dress custom-made for the occasion, pipped the Chapman Brothers to the £20,000 post with Perry's selection of traditionally shaped ceramics covered with figures, patterns and text that depict thought-provoking social themes. Shortlisted for the 2004 prize were video artists Jeremy Deller and Kutlug Ataman as well as sculptors Yinka Shonibare and Langlands and Bell.

A competition to fill the vacant fourth plinth in Trafalgar Square resulted in six unusual proposals that included two anti-war protests, two pieces that paid homage to the innumerable pigeons that populate the area, and a pair of Meccano skyscrapers. In 2005, Marc Quinn's marble statue of his physically disabled friend will be displayed on the plinth followed by Thomas Schütte's humorous Hotel for the Birds in 2006.

In December 2003, the annual Beck's Futures Prize for young artists working in Britain was awarded to a Dutch artist living in London, Saskia Olde-Wolbers. Her fantastical video narrative beat competitors including Turkish-born Haluk Akakce and Brazilian sculptor Tonico Lemos Aua for the top prize of £24,000.

A number of new art prizes have emerged in recent times. A young graduate of the Royal Academy Schools, Christian Ward, won the first £20,000 Lexmark Europe-wide painting prize and Manchester's inaugural attempt to found a rival to the Turner Prize was sponsored by the Comme Ca gallery, who awarded £10,000 to Liverpoolian video artist Paul Rooney. Most ambitious of all the new awards was the Artes Mundi Prize, with a shortlist of 11 international artists vying for a £40,000 cheque, one of the world's biggest individual prizes. The first winner of the biennial prize was the Chinese artist Xu Bing who made an installation using dust from the rubble of the World Trade Centre twin towers in New York.

COMINGS . . .

It was announced in December 2003 that Sir Christopher Frayling was to become the new chairman of Arts Council England. Passionate about design, architecture and film,

Frayling's diplomatic skills and extensive experience in the arts world made him the ideal successor to businessman Gerry Robinson. Culture Secretary, Tessa Jowell, was 'delighted that Sir Christopher has agreed to take on this key role in Arts Council England. He radiates a love for the arts and his skill at sharing that enthusiasm makes him the ideal choice for the job.'

Two major resignations were announced in July 2004, with Phillip Dodd stepping down after seven years as director of the Institute of Contemporary Arts and Susan Ferleger Brades announcing her resignation as director of the Hayward Gallery.

... AND GOINGS

London-born editor and photographer John Coplans died in August 2003 at the age of 83. Having discovered his true artistic course at the ripe age of 60, Coplans looked to the US for inspiration and moved to the west coast before settling in New York in 1971, co-founding and then taking up the editorship of Artforum magazine. After the pressures of publishing took their toll, Coplans withdrew into a melancholic style of self-portraiture in which he photographed his ageing, naked body in graphic detail.

Terry Frost, one of the remaining artists of the post-war St Ives generation passed away in September 2003. His abstract, colourful works were derived from his surroundings in Cornwall but he only received serious attention late in his career, with a retrospective at the Royal Academy in 2000 and a knighthood in 1998. At around the same time British artist Patrick Procktor died at the age of 67. A contemporary of David Hockney and Bridget Riley, Procktor never achieved the fame of his fellow painters and, by the time a fire destroyed the contents of his house in 1999, his reputation had all but waned.

The last surviving member of the original St Ives Group, Wilhelmina Barns-Graham died at the age of 91 in January 2004. She had been a relatively marginalised abstract painter until the Tate Gallery's 1985 St Ives show that renewed her confidence and resulted in many commercial shows and the award of a CBE in 2001.

Losses to the international art world included the death of Mario Merz, one of the original group of 1960s 'Arte Povera' artists from Italy. Merz used earth, glass, clay, wax and other everyday materials but developed a trademark in sculptural igloos and often used neon in his work.

In January 2004 the photography community mourned the loss of Helmut Newton, the German-born fashion photographer and portraitist, famed for his erotically charged black and white full-length nudes which depicted women as both objects of desire and dominatrices. Before he was killed in a car crash in Los Angeles at the age of 84, the '35mm Marquis de Sade', as he was jokingly known, was finalising plans to open his own photography foundation in Berlin.

BROADCASTING

TELEVISION

It is not unusual for the BBC to be attacked from all sides of the political spectrum, especially during times of national crisis, but the extraordinary series of events leading up to the resignation of the corporation's chairman and director-general in January 2004 were unprecedented. Without doubt the crisis was the gravest in the BBC's history. The root of the problem was a report broadcast the previous May by the defence correspondent of Radio 4's Today programme, Andrew Gilligan. His report claimed the government had deliberately inserted exaggerated claims, knowing them to be untrue, into an intelligence dossier in order to justify the invasion of Iraq. The trigger for the crisis at Broadcasting House was the findings of a report by Lord Hutton, commissioned by the Prime Minister following the assumed suicide of Gilligan's source for his story, government weapons scientist Dr David Kelly. Despite Hutton's harsh words, the BBC took comfort in the evidence of opinion polls conducted following the publication of his report which suggested that more people trusted the BBC than Tony Blair and his ministers. This was fortunate for the beleaguered national broadcaster because the process of government-led scrutiny, leading to the renewal of the BBC's Royal Charter in 2006, had begun in December.

If public trust in the Corporation's journalism looked robust, research unveiled in the spring by the new communication's regulator, Ofcom, suggested that viewers of all the main television channels thought that programme controllers should try harder in providing genuinely entertaining programmes. Audiences reckoned there was too much copycat programming screened at peak viewing periods, too little innovation and too little protection for children before the 9 p.m. watershed. People were also beginning to tire of the glut of reality shows, however, a lot of reality TV continued to attract big audiences during 2003–4. In the summer Channel 4's Big Brother, which the previous year looked like it was past its prime, staged a comeback thanks to a dose of those old TV staples – sex and violence. Elsewhere, reality shows like I'm A Celebrity ... Get Me Out of Here! and Hell's Kitchen gave ITV some much-needed success.

The big broadcasting technology story of the year was the sustained success of the digital terrestrial Freeview service (in around four million homes by the summer). Overall, the spread of digital TV continued to grow, if not quite as fast as the government wanted it to; the target of switching off the analogue signal by 2010 began to look increasingly unlikely and 2012 emerged as a more likely date. Experts believed that Freeview's success had begun to undermine the growth of BSkyB's subscriber numbers as the company came under new management in the form of Rupert Murdoch's son, James.

LAST EXIT FOR DAVIES AND DYKE

Excluding any successful future move to privatise the BBC, the closing days of January 2004 will go down in history as the broadcaster's most bleak period. On 28 January Lord Hutton announced his coruscating verdict on the corporation's journalism and management style. He claimed both were 'defective' after examining the methods used by Gilligan to obtain the 'evidence' for his infamous Today report on 29 May, and how the teams, led by BBC director-general Greg Dyke and chairman Gavyn Davies, dealt with the complaints from Blair's then director of communications Alistair Campbell. The BBC's previous director-general, John Birt, agreed with Hutton. Speaking in the House of Lords, he declared: 'The root of this crisis was a slipshod piece of journalism.' Within hours of Hutton delivering his report, Davies resigned. With Davies gone, the board of governors refused to back Dyke and he quit the following day. 'It's remarkable how he (Hutton) has given the benefit of judgement to virtually everyone in the government and to no-one at the BBC,' fumed Dyke. Gilligan was next out of the revolving door, and months later the BBC's director of news at the time of the 'sexed up' dossier affair, Richard Sambrook, was moved sideways.

In the weeks following Hutton's withering verdict on the BBC, the Corporation, led initially by former World Service chief, Mark Byford, began quietly to distance itself from the law lord's findings. Fleet Street is traditionally hostile to the BBC, but much of the national press regarded Hutton's report as a 'whitewash'. Some newspaper commentators regarded the conclusion of the Butler inquiry – set up in February after widespread public concern over the veracity of pre-war intelligence that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction – as a partial vindication of Gilligan's original Today report.

Whatever the final verdict on this complex and long-running battle between Downing Street and Broadcasting House, one surprise development was the appointment of veteran TV executive and entertainment impresario Michael Grade as the BBC's new chairman. Like Dyke, Grade was regarded as a charismatic maverick in broadcasting circles and he, perhaps inevitably, rapidly appointed Mark Thompson as the new director-general. Thompson, an Oxford-educated Catholic, had spent the bulk of his career at the BBC prior to doing a two-year stint running Channel 4. He was the kind of journalistic heavyweight (he had edited both Panorama and The Nine O'Clock News) and strategic thinker needed to get the Corporation back on course.

Immediately the new BBC regime announced a sweeping set of changes, including moves to 'bullet proof' journalism, the implementation of a new complaints procedure, and a series of reviews designed to make the Corporation look more like a public service broadcaster and less like the entrepreneurial company that had begun to emerge under Dyke. These changes were aimed at securing the renewal of the charter in 2006 on favourable terms – in other words, a commitment to the long-term future of the licence fee, despite the onward march of pay-TV. The fact that the Government had given the chairman's job to a TV professional like Grade (who 20 years earlier ran the Corporation's flagship station, BBC1) was regarded by many as an attempt to improve relations between the Government and Broadcasting House. Grade moved quickly to show critics that under his leadership, the BBC's governors would be a thoroughly independent body holding the BBC's executive to account, rather than maintaining the somewhat cosy relationship evident under Davies and Dyke.

The BBC's annual report, published in July, reflected this new, more rigorous approach to running the organisation and the governors said the Corporation must 'extend the range and quality of its radio and television services'. The focus must be on 'broadcasting more high-impact, memorable programmes, particularly arts and current affairs.' BBC1 received lukewarm praise from the governors who announced an independent review of the channel following falling approval ratings.

REALITY COOKS UP A STORM

While all the main channels struggled to maintain their popularity as digital channels continued to proliferate, the easiest way to make an impact on audiences was to schedule more and more editions of existing hits (at times during the year ITV1's peak time schedule was virtually gridlocked by episodes of Coronation Street) or to plug into the vogue for reality TV. Even ITV's former director of television, David Liddiment, thought that ITV was guilty of soap overkill. Writing in The Guardian, he opined: 'A handful of big hitting shows have become absolutely vital to the terrestrial broadcasters who are desperately fighting to hold audiences as competition intensifies. But how much further can they be squeezed before the law of diminishing returns kicks in?'

As for the ever-expanding reality TV juggernaut, Channel 4 reaped the biggest harvest as shows like Wife Swap, Supremacy, and Faking It kept viewers coming back for more. In the summer the fifth series of Big Brother gave the station another big reality hit. For the first time in a British Big Brother two of the contestants, Michelle and Stuart, consummated their relationship as the cameras watched. There was no explicit sex as the couple 'performed' in private under 'a love shack' built beneath the dining room table, however, voyeurs were kept satisfied when a drunken brawl broke out one night in the house. Inevitably, ratings surged (the so-called 'sex' episode attracted more than six million viewers) but the show's producer, Endemol, and Channel 4 insisted 'the welfare and safety of the housemates is always our overriding concern.' Some commentators disagreed complaining that the producers were only concerned with revenue streams from advertising, text messaging and telephone voting.

Also on Channel 4 a new TV star emerged in the form of combative celebrity chef Gordon Ramsay, presenting Ramsay's Kitchen Nightmares. His liberal use of four-letter words was not to everyone's taste, but as more than five and a half million people tuned in to witness the confrontational cook proffer his advice to some of Britain's failing eateries and inept kitchen professionals, there was no doubt that the small screen had discovered a much needed, new larger-than-life personality; newspaper reports suggested that Channel 4 was determined to sign Ramsay to an exclusive contract.

Over on ITV1, Ramsay re-emerged, this time with a cast of middling celebrities who he attempted to drill into ace practitioners of the culinary arts in Hell's Kitchen. The show failed to repeat the success of the second series of I'm A Celebrity... Get Me Out Of Here! but as more than eight million tuned in, ITV's hunch that Ramsay could work for a mainstream audience paid off. Shown in February 2004, I'm A Celebrity... Get Me Out Of Here! was easily the year's biggest reality TV hit. The secret? Deft presentation by Ant and Dec alongside a cast of celebrities, notably ex-Sex Pistol Johnny Lydon and model Jordan, ensured saturation coverage in the tabloids. Almost 15 million viewers watched the show's finale. By which time Lydon had stormed off the set, his walk out prompted, reportedly, by a craving for chocolate. I'm A Celebrity... Get Me Out Of Here! took a significant slice of audience share prompting the Financial Times to note that such high viewing figures are not supposed to occur 'in the age of multi-channel TV and viewer fragmentation.'

If only television drama (soaps excluded) or situation comedy were still capable of creating audiences this big. Even the appeal of ITV1's long-running gentle moorland drama, Heartbeat, was starting to fade. In the winter of 2003 Heartbeat's average audience was 12.8 million; a year later it had fallen to 11.1 million. Still, another lynchpin of ITV1's schedule, A Touch Of Frost, pulled in 12.9 million. ITV1 triumphed too with Prime Suspect 6, as Detective Superintendent Jane Tennison, portrayed to perfection by Helen Mirren, returned for the first time in seven years. Other well-received new ITV1 drama included a new vehicle for Tom Conti in the psychological thriller, Donovan, and writer Mike Bullen's follow-up to Cold Feet, Life Begins, starring Caroline Quentin. In spite of its glitzy cast – Helena Bonham Carter played Anne Boleyn – ITV1's much-anticipated attempt at re-telling the story of Henry VIII drew mixed notices. Most critics agreed that the main problem was the much-married monarch's (played by a typically energetic Ray Winstone) perplexing Cockney accent.

CHAUCER'S LESSON IN TV DRAMA

Few British actresses can be as depended upon as the highly versatile Julie Walters to bring some genuine magic to the small screen, but even by her own high standards, Walters' performance as The Wife of Bath (scripted by Sally Wainwright, creator of At Home With the Braithwaites) in BBC1's contemporary re-working of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales was a tour de force. Overall, reviewers hailed this series, in which this classic of English literature was updated for the 21st century, as one of the year's high spots; Billie Piper, critics agreed, was a revelation in The Miller's Tale. Another high-profile literary-inspired drama, based on Anthony Trollope's He Knew He Was Right, and adapted by the much-feted Andrew Davies also succeeded for the BBC. But having Davies' name on the credits of ITV1's Boudica, starring Alex Kingston as the warrior queen, failed to save it from a critical panning. TV drama never wanders far from the subject of crime and true to form the BBC provided audiences with one of the year's most rewarding new dramas in The Long Firm, starring Mark Strong as charismatic gang leader Harry Starks. Derek Jacobi also impressed in this unexpected summer treat from BBC2, set in the sixties and its immediate aftermath.

For contemporary drama, Paul Abbott's semi-autobiographical Shameless, the story of modern dysfunctional family life on a Manchester housing estate, was, according to some critics, the outstanding series of 2003–4. Channel 4's ability to back high quality small screen drama was also evident in Granada's The Deal, a one-off single drama directed by Stephen Frears dissecting the 20-year relationship between Tony Blair and Gordon Brown. Shown on the eve of the Labour Party conference, the New Statesman observed: 'As a record of the richly deserved death of Old Labour, The Deal was about as good, and probably as close, as television has yet got.' David Morrissey's performance as the future chancellor was highly acclaimed, not least by former Brown PR man, Charlie Whelan, who writing in The Guardian said: 'He was so good there were times when I forget I was watching an actor and really thought Gordon Brown was on the telly.'

The year witnessed the death of one of British television's greatest playwrights, Jack Rosenthal. He had begun his career as a Coronation Street scriptwriter before creating some of television's most human and enduring dramas such as Spend, Spend, Spend, Bar Mitzvah Boy and Eskimo Day. In the summer the BBC's digital channel, BBC4, devoted a short season to Rosenthal's work to commemorate his achievement. That almost half the country was unable to enjoy these repeats because they lacked the necessary digital equipment prompted a letter to The Times from a Mrs Deb Atkinson. She wanted to know why the Corporation was not broadcasting programmes of this quality on its terrestrial services, rather than what she insisted was the usual mix of lifestyle and makeover shows. 'We watched the programmes with our three children in their twenties,' observed Mrs Atkinson. 'Having barely had the opportunity to watch a play made for television they didn't really know what to expect, but after seeing Eskimo Day, The Evacuees and Bar Mitzvah Boy they were completely won over. If young people never get the chance to watch programmes like these, how are they going to know if they would enjoy them?' Hopefully, BBC2's new controller Roly Keating, who replaced the American-bound Jane Root in the spring, will encourage the return of single drama to BBC2.

Overall, comedy too struggled to match former glories, especially situation comedy, acknowledged as the most challenging of all small screen genres to get right. On Channel 4, the hugely popular Friends came to the end of its run, but two of its home grown programmes, the youth-friendly and deeply irreverent Bo Selecta and 'lads comedy' Peep Show starring David Mitchell and Robert Webb made an impact. The Office returned for its final bow as a Christmas special on BBC1 watched by seven million. This was thrown into perspective by the huge turnout – 16.4 million – for Del Boy and Rodney's traditional seasonal Only Fools and Horses appearance on the same channel.

Aware that Britain's black population remained an elusive audience for the Corporation, BBC1 attempted to redress the situation by screening its first-ever black situation comedy, The Crouches. Unfortunately, the show flopped. New Nation's editor Michael Eboda said the programme was 'about as funny as being carjacked' and 'as patronising as a politician with a large minority'. Maybe it didn't help that a white writer, Glaswegian Ian Pattison, creator of Rab C Nesbit, wrote the show.

Infinitely more successful was Little Britain, created by and starring David Walliams and Matt Lucas, one of the year's cult comedy successes and firmly in the tradition of Monty Python; Little Britain transferred from BBC3 to BBC2. Two other subversive new BBC3 comedies made waves: Nighty, Night, a vehicle for Catherine Tate (who was also given her own show on BBC2) and the animation, Monkey Dust. Some audiences, however, considered their subject matter (terminal cancer, for example) too tough for comedy. Perhaps acknowledging that mass appeal situation comedy was a dying craft, BBC2 devoted a series to find Britain's best sitcom of all time; there was a certain inevitability about the winner, Only Fools and Horses. ITV1's recent record in comedy has been dismal, but a short series of animations created by Bristol's famed Aardman studios, Creature Comforts, suggested that its instincts for original comedy could still prevail.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO SATURDAY NIGHT?

For the big terrestrial channels, Saturday night TV remained by and large a black hole, as Channel 4 made quite clear in July when it devoted an entire programme to the subject, Who Killed Saturday Night TV? Yet there were some notable successes. Veteran Bruce Forsyth returned to host Strictly Come Dancing giving BBC1 a surprise hit and Pop Idol continued to score for ITV1; the final of the second series was seen by almost 11 million viewers as more than ten million of them voted for the winning wannabe, Michelle McManus. One of the lynchpins of BBC1's Saturday night line-up, chat show king Michael Parkinson, announced in the spring that he was leaving after signing a contract with ITV. He was annoyed that Match of The Day's return would have dislodged him from his usual 10 p.m. BBC1 slot. Parkinson's ITV1 show will debut in the autumn.

The year may have lacked a big new original entertainment hit, but one of the period's most interesting developments was the success of programmes that mixed different programme genres. It was hard to tell if Channel 4's Operatunity was an arts or a reality show. Undeniably it was successful TV as it offered members of the public the chance to sing a principal role with English National Opera and created two new divas, one a blind mother of two, the other a supermarket checkout operator. In ratings terms, the most successful of these hybrid shows was BBC1's Pompeii – The Last Day which blended science, drama, history and computer imagery to offer a gripping, if fictionalised account of what happened when Vesuvius erupted on that fateful day in August AD 79. Ten million viewers watched this original take on ancient history.

Two outstanding drama documentaries of 2003–4 were BBC2's The Genius Of Mozart, providing further evidence that the Corporation was once again taking its responsibilities to the arts seriously, and Dunkirk featuring actors recreating the great maritime evacuation of May 1940. A more traditional documentary that attracted praise was Channel 4's 10-parter The First World War, based on Huw Strachan's book, which put the conflict into a global context, rather than a European one. Another seminal 20th century event, the assassination of President Kennedy, was the subject of BBC2's The Kennedy Assassination: Beyond Conspiracy, a forensic examination of the evidence surrounding the shooting that finally vanquished the various conspiracy theories. The programme won the Broadcasting Press Guild's prize for best single documentary. A BBC expose of racism in Britain's police force, The Secret Policeman, was another of the year's important documentaries, in which reporter Mark Daly went undercover with Manchester police. 'What I found,' he reported, 'was a police service trying very hard – and failing – to put its house in order.'

RADIO

As digital technology continued to develop there were signs of even more radical shifts in how people consume radio in the period under review. 'The radio landscape is changing fundamentally,' noted the BBC in its annual report. 'There are strong new national digital stations. People are listening in new ways – via television, the internet or mobile phones. Some young music-lovers are turning from radio to downloading music online.'

Thirteen million people said they had listened to radio via the internet, according to the BBC. Furthermore, with the Corporation's radio output available online via its Radio Player service, allowing listeners the chance to replay any programme during the week following their original transmission, no longer did listeners need to be slaves to the programme schedules. The most popular programme for replay was one of BBC Radio's longest running shows – the veteran soap opera, The Archers.

Take-up of digital sets was encouraging. By the end of May, 600,000 digital radios had been sold in the UK and Virgin Radio gave hundreds of sets away in a Christmas competition. With prices poised to break the £50 barrier, growth was certain to accelerate in the near future. Dozens of digital stations were now available, but generally the number of regular listeners tuning into any one station remained low. The BBC's digital offerings were no exception and they had the benefit of being promoted on the Corporation's other services; in fact research suggested that some of the commercial networks, such as Kiss, Kerrang and Smash Hits, were doing better than the BBC's digital stations. Yet despite the growing competition, as far as analogue listening went, the BBC remained in pole position. Figures released in the summer of 2004 indicated that the BBC had actually strengthened its position in 2003–4 with a 53.1 per cent share of the market – up from 52.6 per cent the previous year.

WOGAN HITS 65

The ratings showed a surge in audience levels for Radio 2 (which remained Britain's most popular station) and Radio 4 in the year under review. Radio 2 added another 500,000 listeners in the March–June quarter. This gave the network its biggest ever audience; 13.4 million people tuned in every week. This was encouraging news for the service's new controller, Lesley Duncan, who had started work in January. Veteran presenter Terry Wogan added 250,000 new listeners to his breakfast show. Now 65, and with his contract due for renewal in 2005, there was speculation that he might be considering hanging up his headphones for good. However, Duncan, speaking to journalists in the spring, declined to be drawn on Wogan's future at the station. Remembering Jimmy Young's messy exit from Radio 2, Wogan was cryptic when he told The Observer: 'Will I have the guts to retire? What you have to avoid is leaving with bad taste, hanging on too long. But what is too long?' His radio listeners were loyal but TV viewers are more unforgiving and in the winter Channel 5 axed his mid-morning show, co-hosted with Gaby Roslin. Wogan was beaten to presenter of the year at the Sony awards in May by two unknowns – at least outside their Manchester transmission area – JK and Joel, presenters on local station, Key 103.

Another Radio 2 stalwart, Johnnie Walker, saw audiences for his show climb to a new high as more than five million people listened. Walker had returned to the network following treatment for cancer. His 40 years of service to British radio were recognised at the Sonys with a Gold Award. Jonathan Ross's Saturday morning show gained in popularity too. He had in excess of 3.5 million regular listeners, but not all of them were admirers. Gillian Reynolds, the Daily Telegraph's veteran radio writer, was revolted by his show – her main complaint was Ross's obsession with body parts and the frequent sexual innuendo. 'If Jonathan Ross were on commercial radio, would his employer be as tolerant as the BBC?' she asked rhetorically. 'Does a man with so many awards (in May he added another Sony to his cache) really have to display quite so much angst about his penis?'

Jeremy Vine, a far less controversial broadcaster than Ross, continued to win plaudits for his new afternoon show; in July the BBC's governors expressed their admiration for Vine. They also applauded Radio 2's decision to extend its weekly arts show, from 90 minutes to two hours, and re-launched it as The Green Room. Meanwhile, the network's new controller indicated that she wanted to hear more seventies music on the station – Steve Harley's Sounds of The Seventies was singled out for praise – and more musical soundtracks, especially following the success of Radio 2's broadcasts of Ball Over Broadway, starring Michael Ball, and Sunset Boulevard featuring Ball and Petula Clark.

During 2003–4 the BBC's problems at Radio 1 showed few signs of being resolved. The broadcaster's weekly audience had fallen to 9.7 million from 10 million. But there was some encouraging news from the latest listening figures which indicated that the network's new breakfast show host, Chris Moyles, was attracting a substantial number of new loyal listeners; Moyles had replaced Sara Cox in January. Part of the problem for the network was that Radio 1's target audience of 15 to 24 year olds faced so many choices in their music listening, and their musical tastes were so varied, that it was harder than ever for the station to strike the right note. The BBC acknowledged that, following audience research, 'some aspects of Radio 1 were off-putting, for instance, its 'relentlessly single' image despite the fact that half of 25 to 30 year olds have children. Listeners wanted the station to be more relaxed and less intense about the music it played – and they also wanted older music.' Nevertheless, the BBC added, there was much that audiences liked. Evolutionary, not revolutionary changes were required. The station's critics were more outspoken. Asked by The Guardian in the spring for their opinion on Radio 1, a group of under-25s delivered a withering verdict. DJ Jo Whiley was described as the 'apex of awfulness' by 22-year-old Gary Ryan from Manchester. He added: 'Radio 1 wants credibility and listeners, but they'll find neither while clinging to the pub bores and backing presenters that don't interpret music in a fun, diverting way.'

HUMPHRYS IN A HUFF

Despite the waves created by the Hutton report, Radio 4 continued to shine as a station providing matchless news and current affairs coverage; for the second year running the network was voted station of the year at the Sony awards. During 2003–4 listening levels dipped slightly (commentators thought this was because the Iraq war was officially over), but by the summer Radio 4 had recovered; 9.5 million listeners were tuning in each week. Its most popular programme remained the Today show, where the row over the 'sexed up' dossier had begun. In the run-up to the publication of Lord Hutton's report in January, speculation centred on whether its combative presenter, John Humphrys, would leave the programme. But in December it emerged that he had signed a new three-year contract. It had certainly been an eventful year for the presenter. In the autumn of 2003 he had clashed with his editor when part of a pre-recorded interview with the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, was cut from the programme in which the presenter asked the cleric if he thought the war in Iraq was 'immoral'. After a 12-second pause, Dr Williams replied that he would find 'it very hard to give unqualified support to the rightness of that decision'. Unbeknown to Humphrys the archbishop had complained to Today's editor, Kevin Marsh, about the question, who had agreed to cut it from the interview. When Humphrys found out, he was furious and reportedly threatened to resign. 'I behaved in a most unprofessional manner, yes,' he told The Times. 'Well you shouldn't lose your temper, should you?'

During the Christmas period a number of guest celebrity editors, including Stephen Hawking and Radiohead singer Thom Yorke, accepted an invitation to edit the programme. Marsh said: 'Judging from the letters and emails I got, everybody thinks they can edit Today. Well, here's the chance for five of our better known listeners to prove it.' In the wake of Hutton's criticism of the BBC's journalism, there were suggestions that Today – and indeed the rest of the BBC's news machine – would adopt a more conservative approach to its reporting and avoid breaking exclusive stories. The new BBC chairman, Michael Grade, denied this would happen. Indeed Today took on extra staff to strengthen its investigative journalism. However, in an effort to reaffirm the BBC's commitment to impartial reporting Humphrys and several of his colleagues, including John Simpson and Andrew Marr, were forced to stop writing their regular newspaper columns. Prompted by the row over its Iraq coverage and the negotiations with the Government regarding the charter, Radio 4 sought to bring greater authority to its flagship news and current affairs programmes. In an effort to make the weekday afternoon programme, PM, as authoritative as Today and The World At One, presenter Eddie Mair was transferred from Sunday morning's Broadcasting House to host PM. His successor at Broadcasting House was Fi Glover, late of Radio 5 Live.

In March Radio 4's most distinguished broadcaster, Alistair Cooke, announced that due to failing health he would reluctantly be delivering his final Letter From America. In 58 years he had recorded 2,869 letters for the BBC. Signing off for the last time, Cooke told his listeners: 'I have had much enjoyment in doing these talks and hope that some of it has passed over to the listeners, to all of whom I now say thank you for your loyalty and goodbye.' Less than a month later Cooke, 95, was dead. Tony Blair led the tributes describing him as 'one of the greatest broadcasters of all time, and we shall feel his loss very, very heavily indeed'. Radio 4's controller, Helen Boaden, said she had no plans to replace Cooke. 'My instinct is that Alistair was unique.' Boaden herself was one of the first to benefit from the arrival of a new director-general at Broadcasting House. In the summer she was made the BBC's first female director of news. Applications were invited for a new Radio 4 controller.

ALL WRIGHT FOR RADIO 3

Radio 3 continued to plough an eclectic furrow. Some, including lobby group the Friends of Radio 3, accused the network of dumbing down. They were outraged when in the spring the annual BBC Statements of Programme Policy, which the previous year had pledged to put 'classical music at the heart of the schedule', was replaced by a less precise promise to a 'broad spectrum' of listening pleasures including jazz and world music. The network's controller, Roger Wright, interviewed by The Financial Times in July, was unrepentant. 'The fact is we're doing nothing that Radio 3 hasn't done before,' he said. 'We're not changing the format, or the priorities.' Wright pointed out that around 85 per cent of the schedule remained devoted to classical music. The Broadcasting Press Guild tended to agree. In Tune presenter Sean Rafferty was awarded the guild's prize for radio presenter of the year. This recognition of Radio 3's success was nothing, however, compared with Radio 5 Live's. It won seven honours at the Sony awards, including one for Jeremy Bowen's report of the capture of Saddam Hussein, plus an accolade to Ian Robertson for his coverage of England's victory in the Rugby World Cup.

It was a good year for Kelvin MacKenzie, chairman and chief executive of the Wireless Group, owner of TalkSport and 16 local stations, as the company reported its first full-year operating profit. The national sports station triumphed against his arch-enemy, the BBC, clinching the rights to England's cricket tour in the West Indies.

MacKenzie's battle with radio audience share analyst, RAJAR, was widely reported. If he wins his court case (he is claiming £66 million in damages because he claims RAJAR consistently underestimates TalkSport's popularity) the implications for the British radio industry would be enormous. One of the potential beneficiaries might be Virgin Radio, whose performance was consistent, if not spectacular during 2003–4. To persuade more people to tune in, Virgin announced in May that it had signed Madness singer Suggs to present a new Friday night show. 'This is going to be a great show – only Virgin Radio would be brave or stupid enough to let me loose on the airwaves to play whatever I fancy to the nation,' he told reporters.

In London, Britain's most competitive radio market, Capital 95.8FM continued to struggle as its audience dropped to the lowest level in its 30-year history. It was disappointing news for the station's new breakfast presenter, Johnny Vaughan, who replaced Chris Tarrant in April. Tarrant was a hard act to follow and Vaughan's show attracted almost 200,000 fewer listeners over a three month period than his predecessor. Capital remained London's most popular station, but only by a whisker, and it may not be long before a rival overtakes it. But it was not all bad news for Capital despite increasing rivalry from Heart and Classic FM – its sister station, the new music network Xfm, broadcasting nationally on digital frequencies, reported record growth.

BUSINESS AND FINANCE

After the long build-up to the war in Iraq, the end of 2003 and much of 2004, were dominated by fears surrounding the UK economy. The Bank of England implemented four quarter point interest rate rises between November 2003 and June 2004 in a bid to control property price rises and curb consumer spending. Initially, the rate rises did little to dampen high street sales, with the Confederation of British Industry (CBI) announcing that confidence among retailers was at its highest level in two years.

In contrast, oil prices reached US$40 a barrel amid fears that disruption to oil supply caused by the war in Iraq would increase oil companies' costs and threaten to restrict economic growth. It was also feared that rises in the price of oil would fuel inflation.

At the end of 2003, economists warned of worsening balance of trade figures. The UK's trade in oil was steadily moving from comfortable surplus to deficit, and slow economic growth in China and the USA was expected to hamper UK export growth in key markets. Meanwhile, the UK's appetite for imports remained voracious. In the short term, the trade figures were predicted to have only a modest downward effect on the pound and a negligible impact on both the stock market and interest rate expectations.

In the USA, the US Federal Reserve increased interest rates by a quarter point in July 2004, the first rate rise in four years, amid growing concern over inflationary pressures in the US economy.

The strengthening of the pound against the US dollar failed to dent a tentative recovery in UK manufacturing. Analysis by the CBI found demand and output picking up despite the gains in sterling. The strong pound failed to have a noticeable impact on export orders, although competition from cheaper imports put pressure on domestic prices.

In London, the FTSE 100 stock market index made strong gains in 2003 before setting into a 'consolidation' phase in the first half of 2004. The index peaked at just under 7,000 in late 1999, at the height of the dot-com bubble. It fell to a low of 3,250 in March 2003, then began a slow climb back, peaking at 4,575 in early 2004. Shares proved resilient in the face of a raft of negative factors. The FTSE 100 index ended the first half of 2004 down just 0.3 per cent on its closing level at the end of December 2003. Forecasters expected the market to show a more sustained rise in the second half of the year.

HIRING AND FIRING

Improving economic prospects fuelled an employment surge in the financial services sector, in particular within fund management companies, general insurers and building societies. The 'big four' accounting firms, which had made a number of redundancies and reduced graduate intake in preceding years, set about recruiting hundreds of accountants to cope with the buoyant economy and additional industry regulation. Strong business growth was forecast to continue into the latter months of 2004.

City firms were sent reeling by a wave of legal actions brought by former employees alleging sexism and unfair dismissal. Stephanie Villalba took Merrill Lynch to an industrial tribunal seeking record damages of £7.5 million and, in an exercise calculated to cause maximum embarrassment, Villalba portrayed Merrill Lynch as intensely hostile to women.

Elizabeth Weston, a former lawyer with Merrill Lynch, subsequently brought a claim against the firm for sex discrimination. She alleged that a senior lawyer had made 'lewd and disgusting' comments to her at a Christmas party and accepted a pay out estimated at £1 million. Merrill Lynch is no stranger to such scenarios. Since the late 1990s the company has paid out millions of dollars in compensation, including the settlement of a class action in the US in which 1,000 female brokers claimed the firm had a culture of bias against women.

MOVERS AND SHAKERS

UK boardrooms continued to feel the aftershocks of the corporate governance reforms of 2003, notably Sir Derek Higgs's review on board composition. The review championed the role of the senior non-executive director as a point of contact for investors, and sought to end boardroom cliques with the recommendation that a chief executive should not become chairman of the same company.

The reforms coincided with a number of boardroom reshuffles and departures. Sir Christopher Hogg, non-executive chairman of Reuters and GlaxoSmithKline (GSK), stepped down from both positions in 2004, complaining that Higgs's recommendation that no-one should hold two FTSE 100 chairmanships had made his position much more difficult. Sir Christopher had worked hard to improve relations with GSK investors after a damaging row in 2003 over a £22 million severance package for GSK's chief executive, J. P. Garnier. He was replaced at GSK by Sir Christopher Gent, formerly of Vodafone, and by Niall FitzGerald at Reuters, who stepped down as chairman of Unilever after eight years.

In another reshuffle, Martin Broughton, chairman of British American Tobacco, became non-executive chairman of British Airways, replacing Lord Marshall of Knightsbridge.

Big institutional investors continued to make their presence felt throughout 2003-4. In the wake of the GSK pay row, investors intervened in the proposed boardroom line-up following the merger of Carlton Communications, led by Michael Green, and Granada, fronted by Charles Allen. The plan was for Green to take the chairmanship, with Allen as chief executive but fund managers led by Anthony Bolton of Fidelity threatened to veto the arrangement, which they considered to be 'too cosy'. Faced with this backlash, Green stood aside to make way for Sir Peter Burt, former chief executive of Bank of Scotland. Bolton was henceforth known as 'the quiet assassin' for his influence in blocking Green's progress.

STORE WARS

Further hostilities erupted within J Sainsbury, the supermarket group, with shareholders angered by a long run of poor performance. Sainsbury's had been struggling to keep its head above water as Tesco and Waitrose increased in popularity and Safeway, which was bought by the William Morrison group after a protracted bidding campaign, launched a price war. Shares in Sainsbury's fell sharply as the company warned of lower profits for the latter months of 2003. Sir Peter Davis resigned as Sainsbury's chairman in July 2004 after the board reneged on an agreement to award him a £2.4 million bonus due to poor performance. He was replaced as chairman by Philip Hampton, a veteran of BT, Lloyds TSB and British Gas.

A boardroom shake-up at Marks & Spencer (M&S) paved the way for one of the biggest City showdowns in years. Luc Vandeveldt stood down as chairman in May 2004, citing personal business commitments. His departure provided the cue for Philip Green, the owner of Bhs, to unveil his intention to bid for M&S.

M&S responded by appointing Stuart Rose, formerly with fashion group Arcadia, to replace former McKinsey consultant Roger Holmes as chief executive, and Paul Myners as interim chairman. The shake-up also saw the departure of Vittorio Radice, director of clothing, who had been poached from Selfridges in 2002 amid great fanfare.

Green's initial £8.7 billion offer was rebuffed by the M&S board, which said it undervalued the company. He returned with a £9 billion offer, but M&S refused to budge. It was better, M&S directors said, to allow Rose time to put reforms in place stating that M&S was profitable, but had lost direction. Dirty tactics ensued, with details leaked of share transactions made by Rose in the days before Green unveiled his bid. There were allegations that similar purchases were made by Michael Spencer, chief executive of brokerage firm ICAP, after he had lunch with Rose but both men denied wrongdoing and said they were the victims of a smear campaign. The Financial Services Authority launched an investigation into dealings in M&S shares and associated derivatives, including contracts for differences (CFDs) which are sometimes used in takeovers to quietly build up stakes. Rose was cleared of insider dealing in July 2004.

The battle abruptly fizzled out in mid-July 2004, when shareholders at M&S's annual general meeting made it clear that they were willing to give Rose time to prove himself. Green withdrew, threatening to take his revenge by luring M&S customers to his stores with better products.

SERIOUS FRAUD

One of the most high-profile fraud trials of recent years ended with guilty verdicts and long prison sentences for those charged. Carl Cushnie, lauded by Tony Blair as one of the UK's leading black entrepreneurs, was jailed for six years for defrauding investors who had handed over millions of pounds to Versailles, a trade finance company. Fred Clough, the former Versailles finance director, was also jailed for six years. Clough pleaded guilty ahead of the trial and gave evidence against his former colleague, who maintained his innocence throughout. Versailles was one of the stock market's high-fliers of the late 1990s, worth £630 million at its peak, but it emerged that bankers, accountants and the stock exchange had been misled as to its true value. The company appeared to be earning millions from trade finance fees when in fact Clough was writing cheques to himself. Versailles' accounts for 1999 showed turnover of £232 million, whereas actual turnover was less than £37 million. Clough was later ordered to repay £14 million in stolen funds or else have three years added to his jail sentence.

The Versailles case was a landmark victory for the Serious Fraud Office, which has had a patchy record of winning big cases. Its overall conviction rate fell to just 51 per cent in 2003-4 and of 39 defendants, 10 pleaded guilty, 10 were convicted and 19 were acquitted.

Another high-profile case saw an action for fraud brought against Joyti De-Laurey, a former personal assistant to senior bankers at Goldman Sachs. She was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for stealing £4.5 million from her employers. De-Laurey claimed the money was a reward given in recognition of her ultra-efficient organisation of the private and professional lives of Jennifer Moss, her husband Ron Beller and another executive, Scott Mead.

De-Laurey, who at one stage claimed to have cancer and wrote letters to God asking for help in getting 'what's mine', was arrested just weeks before she was due to start a new life in Cyprus where she had bought a £750,000 seafront villa. She had already spent nearly £400,000 on jewellery, and considerable sums on clothes, holidays and flying lessons. She was found to have forged signatures on cheques and other documents.

PENSIONS CHAOS

Underfunded pension funds continued to pose difficulties for companies in 2004. The scale of the problem was highlighted when Permira, a private equity firm, scheduled a £940 million takeover bid for WH Smith, the struggling high street retailer. Talks broke down after the trustees to the WH Smith pension fund insisted that Permira inject additional cash to plug the fund's £250 million pension deficit.

The bid coincided with a row over the new Pensions Bill, which was feared could force directors, shareholders and private equity firms to plug pension fund gaps in the companies they own or manage. Advisers warned that the Bill could deter potential bidders from WH Smith.

Stock market gains and increased pension contributions by companies saw the UK pension funds deficit narrow to £100 billion at the end of 2003 down from £160 billion in June 2003, according to the CBI. It estimated, however, that companies would still have to make additional contributions averaging £6 billion a year over the next three years. Pension deficits have ballooned under the new accounting standard FRS 17, which forces companies to account for pension assets and liabilities on the balance sheet.

The mis-selling of pensions and endowments continued to vex the Financial Services Authority and a further scandal surrounded split capital investment trusts, also known as split caps. The FSA spent two years investigating claims that split cap trust fund managers colluded in buying one another's shares, exposing investors to losses when stock markets collapsed. It demanded that the 21 firms involved in selling split caps should pay £350 million in compensation to the 50,000 investors who lost out. The firms were given until May 2004 to sign up to a compensation deal. In the event, they offered just £120 million for investors, leaving the FSA no choice but to force the miscreants into a collective settlement.

Sir Howard Davies, who had been chairman of the FSA since its inception in 2000, stepped down in 2003 to join the London School of Economics. Callum McCarthy succeeded him as chairman and John Tiner was appointed chief executive.

BCCI VERSUS BANK OF ENGLAND

Legal history was made in January 2004 when the liquidators of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI) took the Bank of England to court seeking damages of £850 million. The BCCI was shut down by banking regulators in 1991 after it was found to be harbouring fraudulent activity. The BCCI was domiciled in Luxembourg but conducted most of its business in London, and the bank's liquidators argued that the Bank of England had shirked its responsibility to regulate and prevent instability in the financial industry. The Bank of England cannot be sued for negligence, since this would open it to a flood of claims so instead, the liquidators accused it of 'misfeasance in public office', alleging that 22 Bank of England officials had conspired to ignore the danger signs at the BCCI. Misfeasance is an ancient tort covering the actions of public officials.

The case looks set to run well into 2005. Gordon Pollock, QC, the lead barrister for the liquidators, outlined the case in an opening speech that lasted five months, reputedly the longest opening address in English legal history. Opening the case for the Bank of England, Nicholas Stadlen, QC, described the claim as 'fundamentally implausible', pointing out that only one case of misfeasance had succeeded in 300 years. He told the court: 'public officers who commit this tort, it seems, are rather like a number 31 bus. You wait 300 years for one to come along and then there are 22 of them all at once.'

Former Bank of England governors are expected to be called to give evidence in early 2005. Mervyn King, who succeeded Sir Edward George as Bank of England governor in 2003, voiced his frustration at the enormous legal fees in the BCCI case, which totalled more than £100 million after several years' preparation.

PROPERTY MARKET WARNING

Mervyn King saw his profile rise dramatically in June 2004 when he issued a stark warning about the overheated UK residential property market. He cautioned that property prices were 'now at levels which are well above what most people would regard as sustainable in the longer term.'

King said that first-time buyers and those seeking to move should think carefully, adding that 'anyone entering or moving within the housing market should consider carefully the possible future paths of both house prices and interest rates. After the hectic pace of price rises over the past year, it is clear that the chances of a fall in house prices are greater than they were.'

Surveys released through the summer of 2004 pointed to a cooling in the housing market, as buyers backed off and sellers began dropping prices to more realistic levels. Annual house price inflation hit 19.5 per cent in May 2004, according to the Nationwide Building Society. Accountancy firm PricewaterhouseCoopers forecast that prices could fall by 10 to 15 per cent over the next four to five years, wiping thousands of pounds off the price of an average property. It found that house prices were 20 to 40 per cent above their long-term averages relative to incomes and rents, although part of this apparent overvaluation could be explained by lower interest rates and housing supply constraints.

Figures released in July 2004 showed that the gulf between house prices in the north and south of Britain had shrunk to its lowest level in five years. Average house prices in the south were only 1.74 times higher than those in northern areas compared with a peak of 2.19 times higher in 2002. In the year ending June 2004, house prices in the north, the north-west and Wales had all risen by more than 30 per cent, while London prices had increased by less than 12 per cent.

HIGH COSTS AND JACKPOTS

Signs of confidence returned to the commercial property market in London. In May 2004, landlords in the West End increased rents for office suites for the first time in three years. The move raised hopes that the slump across the capital's commercial real estate market was over. Demand for office space was driven by hedge funds and private equity firms. A survey published in early 2004 found confidence returning in commercial property across the UK. The Midlands saw the greatest demand, followed by London and the south-east.

In the year under review the London skyline was transformed by the Swiss Re building in the City, dubbed the 'erotic gherkin', the first in a wave of new skyscrapers planned for the capital. Property entrepreneur Gerald Ronson was granted planning permission for the 730 ft Heron Tower in the City, while another developer, Irvine Sellar, got the go-ahead to erect a 1,000 ft building nicknamed the 'shard of glass' next to London Bridge station.

London was named the world's second most expensive city after Tokyo in a survey released in the summer of 2004 by Mercer, the consulting group, putting the capital ahead of Moscow and Geneva. Mercer based its rankings on the comparative cost of more than 200 items including housing, food, clothing, household goods and entertainment.

American casino operators targeted the UK ahead of the deregulation of the gaming industry, expected in 2005. In June 2003, Harrah's Entertainment announced a £550 million joint venture with Gala, the bingo and casino operator, to develop eight huge US-style casinos while MGM Mirage, the US gaming giant, signed an agreement with Earls Court and Olympia to turn the Olympia Two exhibition hall into a £150 million resort-style gaming complex.

Sol Kerzner, the tycoon behind South Africa's Sun City development, announced plans to turn the Millennium Dome in London's docklands into a giant casino and hotel complex. Deregulation brings with it the prospect of Las Vegas-style slot machines paying unlimited jackpots, however, the Government looks set to restrict these to the new 'mega' casinos, angering smaller existing operators.

Dame Shirley Porter, former leader of Westminster City Council, paid £12.3 million to settle the long-running 'homes for votes' case surrounding council flats sold off to prospective Conservative voters in the 1980s. Dame Shirley had been ordered to repay £42 million, the amount (swelled considerably by interest) that the council was deemed to have lost out by having homes sold on the cheap. She maintained that her housing policy was lawful, but finally settled the case in July 2004.

Laura Tyson, dean of the London Business School, led a taskforce investigating diversity in UK boardrooms. The Tyson Report built on the work of Derek Higgs, whose review concluded that boards were dominated by ageing white males and found that only seven per cent of non-executive directors were non-British nationals, six per cent were women and one per cent were from Britain's ethnic minorities. Tyson called for greater transparency in the recruitment process and training of non-executive directors.

TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS

America was treated to a series of high-profile court cases, in the year under review. In March 2004, lifestyle guru Martha Stewart was convicted of obstructing justice and lying to investigators about the sale of shares in ImClone, a biotechnology company run by her friend, Sam Waksal. Waksal was sentenced to seven years in prison for perjury in June 2003. Stewart requested a retrial, claiming that one of the jurors had failed to disclose that he had a criminal record. This was denied and in July 2004 she was fined and sentenced to five months imprisonment to be followed by five months house arrest.

In May 2004, Frank Quattrone, a former banker with Credit Suisse First Boston (CSFB), was found guilty of obstructing justice. He had urged subordinates to destroy incriminating computer files before officials from the Securities and Exchange Commission, which was investigating CSFB's conduct during the dotcom boom, converged on CSFB's offices. Quattrone insisted that he was following company policy in destroying old paperwork.

John Rigas, the 79-year-old founder of Adelphia Communications, went on trial with his sons accused of defrauding the company of $3 billion. They were charged with the unauthorised borrowing of $2.3 billion of company money to spend on stock purchases and a string of luxury properties. Rigas was convicted, along with one of his sons, in July 2004.

Dennis Kozlowski, the former chief executive of US conglomerate Tyco, went on trial in April 2004 on charges of looting the company of more than $600 million. The trial collapsed after a member of the jury received a threatening letter and a new trial date was set for January 2005.

STOCK MARKET SUCCESS

The Year 2004 brought a renewed wave of UK companies floating on the stock market. They included Centaur Communications, publisher of Marketing Week, and M&C Saatchi, the advertising agency created by Maurice and Charles Saatchi following a split from their previous agency, Saatchi & Saatchi.

Sir Richard Branson returned to the UK stock market with the £800 million flotation of Virgin Mobile, his mobile telecommunications arm. The flotation price was reduced to make it more appealing to City investors. Branson's Virgin Group was listed in London in the mid-1980s but was privatised again after the shares did not perform as well as expected. Branson has, however, enjoyed considerable stock market success overseas. He made nearly £130 million floating Virgin Blue, his budget Australian airline, in December 2003.

NOT A BARREL OF LAUGHS

Deregulation of the UK's telephone directory enquiries services in late 2003 triggered aggressive advertising from a rash of new entrants to the market. An American operator, InfoNXX, ran a high-profile campaign featuring two 1970s-style athletes. David Bedford, an athlete famous in the 1970s, threatened legal action because he felt that the moustachioed runners featured in the advertisements were exploiting his image.

Matt Barrett, chief executive of Barclays, courted controversy in October 2003 when he told MPs that long-term borrowing on credit cards was 'too expensive' and that he would advise his children to avoid running up credit card debts. Barclays has more than nine million credit card customers in the UK and made profits of £450 million from its credit card business in 2002. MPs described Barrett's comments as an embarrassing gaffe.

Mikhail Khodorkovsky, head of Russian oil group Yukos, was arrested in October 2003 and charged with tax evasion and fraud. Yukos subsequently abandoned a merger with Sibneft, controlled by Roman Abramovich, the owner of Chelsea Football Club.

Shell, the Anglo-Dutch oil company, was rocked by a massive scandal which led to the ousting of Sir Philip Watts as chairman. Early in 2004, the company admitted to a large shortfall in its oil and gas reserves. It emerged that reserves had been overbooked by 20 per cent, or about 3.9 billion barrels. The disclosure also led to the resignation of Walter van de Vijver, chief executive of Shell's exploration and production business and Judy Boynton, chief financial officer.

In May 2004, Cazenove, the blue-blooded stockbroking firm, announced its intention to float on the stock market. No date was set, although Cazenove said plans were 'progressing', and the firm soon received several offers from rivals eager to acquire it. A float remained the preferred option, but the firm spent much of 2004 evaluating approaches from competitors.

Lord Black of Crossharbour, the Canadian media tycoon, lost control of the Daily Telegraph after a bitter seven-month battle. The newspaper was purchased in June 2004 by the reclusive Barclay brothers, who pipped rivals including venture capital firms and the Daily Mail, with a bid worth £665 million. Black's problems began in late 2003 when he was accused of receiving millions of dollars in unauthorised payments from Canadian media company, Hollinger. He denied wrongdoing.

AIRLINE UPS AND DOWNS

The airline industry began to emerge from the worst recession in its history in the year under review. Confidence continued to return after the trauma of the September 11 attacks in 2001, although 2003 brought the uncertainty of war in Iraq and the outbreak of SARS in China. Passenger traffic hit a low in May 2003 before slowly starting to recover and high oil prices continued to pose a threat to the industry.

In the UK, the low-cost airline sector suffered a series of setbacks. Easyjet saw £235 million wiped off its share price in May 2004, a fall of 20 per cent, after admitting that bookings had been hit by aggressive discounting by competitors. Full-service airlines like British Airways reduced fares to Europe in a bid to challenge no-frills operators.

Barbara Cassani, former head of low-cost airline Go, stepped down as chairman of the team fronting London's bid to host the Olympic Games in 2012. She was replaced by former athlete, Lord Coe.

CONSERVATION AND HERITAGE

THE NATURAL ENVIRONMENT

THE END OF ENGLAND'S INDEPENDENT WILDLIFE SERVICE

English Nature, the Government's wildlife watchdog, is to be merged with other countryside agencies to form a 'super-quango'. The Government's proposals follow Lord Haskin's review of Britain's countryside agencies, published on 11 November 2003, which criticised the present system as over-regulated, unco-ordinated and inefficient. The key recommendation is to create a single body responsible for nature conservation, amenity and regional development by abolishing the Countryside Agency and fusing English Nature with the Department for Food, Environment and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) Rural Delivery Service. This, it is hoped, will reduce bureaucracy and ensure that funding reaches those who need it. At the same time, Haskins argued, DEFRA's role should be restricted to broad policy issues, while the implementation of policy should be devolved to regional development agencies, with more involvement from local authorities.

There is anxiety that such a move could compromise English Nature's role as an independent wildlife watchdog. Haskins praised its work and considered 'there is a good case for using English Nature as the body on which to build the new agency', however, there is a perceived risk that nature conservation might become swamped in the work of an integrated super-agency that would also be responsible for landscape, natural resources, access and recreation. Some have argued that this has happened in Scotland and Wales, where devolved and integrated countryside bodies were set up in 1992.

On 22 July, DEFRA Minister, Margaret Beckett, presented the Government's rural strategy to Parliament, announcing her acceptance of the central recommendation of Lord Haskin's Report. English Nature is to merge with DEFRA's Regional Development Service and parts of the Countryside Agency to form a single body charged with 'the integrated management of our natural heritage'. At the same time, the multifarious funding schemes for countryside development and conservation are to be 'ruthlessly streamlined'. Nature conservation will form part of the Government's wider policy for sustainable land management. The Government plans to introduce legislation to establish the new body in 2005.

CONDITION OF SITES OF SPECIAL SCIENTIFIC INTEREST

Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) are areas of protected wildlife habitat or geological formations. Only a minority are publicly owned or managed for nature conservation goals. The rest are private land or commons used for agriculture, forestry or recreation, with various constraints on 'activities likely to damage the special interest'. Under an international agreement on biodiversity, the Government has committed itself to ensuring that 95 per cent of all SSSIs should be in 'favourable condition' by the year 2010. 'Favourable' is defined as 'the special habitat and species features being in a healthy state and being conserved for the future by appropriate management'.

In England, SSSIs are the responsibility of English Nature. In support of the Government's aims, English Nature has been monitoring the condition of all SSSIs in England. The results, published in 2003, make sober reading. Some 42 per cent of SSSIs, covering 400,000 hectares, are judged to be in unfavourable condition, with 16 per cent classed as 'unfavourable and declining'. The worst-hit SSSIs are rivers and streams (69 per cent), which are suffering from declining water quality exacerbated by drought and abstraction, and upland grasslands (60 per cent), which have been over-grazed by sheep. The best preserved sites are woodlands and the shore, especially rocky shores, shingle and sand-dunes, but even there up to a third of sites are in unfavourable condition.

Sites in currently 'unfavourable but improving' condition include many peat bogs, where the peat-cutting rights have been bought out and restoration work begun. Lowland heaths are also benefiting from scrub clearance and low-level grazing as part of a lottery-funded conservation plan. English Nature is optimistic that the Government's ambitious target is achievable. It proposes to work out a plan for restoring every SSSI to favourable condition, but admits that most of the necessary measures are outside its control. Only 'a combination of legislation, funding and policy can embed suitable and sustainable site management into the way we manage the countryside', says English Nature.

RETURN OF THE GREAT BUSTARD

With adult males reaching 20kg in weight, the Great Bustard is the world's heaviest flying bird. It was a resident British bird until the mid-nineteenth century, when it died out through a combination of shooting and agricultural changes. It is now threatened worldwide, with the largest remaining numbers in parts of Spain, Hungary and the former USSR. It is thought that the reintroduction of the species to Britain would not only boost the world population but would restore a spectacular breeding bird to its former glory and help create a wider public interest in bird-life. To this end, a project to establish a small breeding population in the wild has been initiated by the Great Bustard Consortium and academics at Stirling University.

With its combination of crop fields and natural grassland, high biodiversity and comparative remoteness, Salisbury Plain is considered an ideal habitat for Great Bustards. As part of the project, forty chicks collected from nests in the Saratov area of Russia will be held in a pen at Netheravon on the edge of Salisbury Plain and released over the next five to ten years. Genetic testing at Stirling University has shown that Russian Great Bustards are more closely related to the extinct British population, whereas the Spanish birds, though geographically nearer, are less genetically alike.

Great trouble has been taken to ensure that the birds develop a healthy fear of mankind. Anyone entering the bustard pen must wear a 'dehumanisation suit' and the chicks are to be fed with a glove puppet. Before release, the birds will undergo what is being called 'predator awareness training', with the help of a tame fox. The public will be able to watch the birds from a hide. Great bustards take five years to reach maturity, however, it is hoped that a small breeding population will be established in the wild by 2010.

SUDDEN OAK DEATH

A fungal disease related to potato blight has spread to Britain via garden centres and now threatens native trees. 'Sudden oak death' originated on the Pacific coast of North America where the disease earned its name by devastating the native black oaks and tan oaks. It is caused by the fungus, Phytophthora ramorum, unknown to science before 1995, and characteristic symptom is weeping lesions on the trunk, which quickly cause the death of the tree. The fungus spreads by spores carried in moist air or rainwater. The risk that it might spread to Britain led to an emergency ban on oak timber imports from the affected parts of America in 2002. However, a different strain of the same disease is already well-established on viburnums and rhododendrons in garden centres, and it has spread to gardens and other locations across Britain. In November 2003, it was detected on an oak for the first time, a planted American red oak, Quercus falcata. The following month it was found on four non-native holm oaks in Cornwall, as well as on a beech, a turkey oak and a horse chestnut.

There were fears that the disease could spread onto our native pedunculate and sessile oaks, and perhaps devastate parks and woods across Britain in a similar manner to Dutch elm disease in the 1970s. Fortunately, this has not yet happened. A Forestry Commission inspection pronounced our woods disease-free, and there is evidence to suggest that native oaks are resistant to the disease. Beech seems to be a more vulnerable species.

Fungal diseases, particularly those affecting trees, are increasing. For example, a mildew that whitens the leaves of horse chestnut and Norway maple trees has spread across England in the past few years. In some river valleys, alders and crack willows are succumbing to fungal diseases which attack both roots and branches. In gardens, azaleas and pelargoniums are vulnerable to fungi which have recently appeared from Japan and South Africa. Daisies now often exhibit the tell-tale white markings of a rust disease originating from Australia. Whether, in some cases, the spread is assisted by the changing climate, especially much milder winters, is uncertain.

NEW FOREST TO BE MADE A NATIONAL PARK

The Rural Affairs Minister, Alun Michael, has accepted the findings of a seven-month public inquiry, which closed in April 2003, and will designate the New Forest a National Park. It will become the first formal National Park to be designated in England for fifty years, and also the smallest, at 571 square kilometers (220 square miles) and with a population of 38,000. The minister agreed with the inspector's recommendation that some 38 square miles should be shaved off the boundary proposed by the Countryside Agency to exclude the towns of Ringwood and Lymington, and the Avon Valley. The Park will, however, include Fawley power station. There will be a further round of consultations before the Designation Order is made.

Responsibility for managing the New Forest as a recreation asset will pass from the Forestry Commission to a new National Park Authority. It will have to balance the needs of conservation and tourism with those of local communities, including the forest's commoners, who have time-honoured rights to graze cattle and ponies and allow pigs to forage for acorn and beech mast. The Authority will be expected to curb creeping suburban development, provide better incentives for environmentally-friendly land management and deal with the many pressures on the Forest and its wild inhabitants.

To the surprise of many, the Government turned down plans for a large container port at Dibden Bay, on the outskirts of the Forest, after a long-running public inquiry. Evidence submitted by English Nature that the port would worsen long-term coastal erosion in Southampton Water was taken into consideration, as was the value of the site for feeding shorebirds and other wildlife. The site for the new container port is now likely to be in East Anglia.

NEW NAMES FOR FUNGI

Being too small or obscure to be known by anyone except specialists, many organisms are known only by a technical Latin name. In the case of the larger fungi, including most mushrooms, toadstools and bracket fungi, the absence of an accepted English name may be due to our traditional suspicion of 'poisonous toadstools'. In many European countries, these species are known by common names in the same way as wild flowers.

In a bid to popularise fungi and make them more accessible, new names have been devised for nearly all the fungi which can be recognised without a microscope. This undertaking was sponsored by English Nature and Plantlife with the blessing of the British Mycological Society. A report including the new names was published in September 2003. The author, Elizabeth Holden, a professional mycologist based in Scotland, gave each species a name based on a specific character of the fungus, including shape, colour, texture or smell. Like Latin names, each consists of a group name and a species name. For example, the waxcap Hygrocybe ovina, which characteristically turns red when bruised, is now the Blushing Waxcap. A pleasantly-scented, trumpet-shaped species, Clitocybe fragrans, has been dubbed the Fragrant Funnel. Most existing names, like Fly Agaric and Horse Mushroom were retained. However, the Jew's Ear fungus has been renamed the Jelly Ear. It is hoped that the new names will become familiar with usage and by being adopted by field guides and other identification manuals. However, not everyone likes the new names. There is considerable opposition by a mycological 'old guard' which believes that anyone capable of spelling tyrannosaurus or rhododendron should have little trouble learning scientific names.

BUGLIFE

A new conservation charity dedicated to preserving the invertebrate world was launched in May 2004. Named Buglife, it will act as an umbrella body representing Britain's numerous specialist societies concerned with insects and other invertebrates, and encourage their conservation by contributing expertise and campaigning to save important sites for bugs. In short, it is to be for insects what the RSPB is for birds and Plantlife for wild plants. At the launch, Sir Robert May, President of the Royal Society, pointed out that half of Britain's 20,000 invertebrates are believed to be declining, and 230 species are probably extinct. Television presenter, Nick Baker, claimed 'we let so many of them disappear because they lack obvious charisma, fluff and wet, watery eyes'. Buglife's mission is to convince people of bugs' hidden charms and to that end it has helped launch the first nationwide survey of bumble-bees.

Buglife has pointed out that brownfield sites – industrial wasteground in cities – tend to be more important for insects than farmed countryside. It has chalked up an early success in saving one such site, formerly occupied by oil storage tanks, on Canvey Island, Essex, from development. The site, believed to boast more rare insects than any comparable area in the UK, is to be preserved. The fate of a peat bog at Auchennies Moss in Dumfries, destined to become a landfill site, but which is also the only Scottish home of the Bog Bush-cricket and Sorrel Pygmy moth, is uncertain.

A FUTURE FOR HORSESHOE BATS

The greater horseshoe bat is the largest and rarest of Britain's fifteen resident species of bat. It is believed to have declined by as much as 99 per cent over the past century, probably because of agricultural changes that have reduced numbers of large insects, especially cockchafers and dung beetles, which are its prey. Like other bats, it has also suffered from toxic chemicals used in timber treatments and agriculture. The bat is, however, easy to survey because the bats roost together in a small number of colonies in caves, mines and old buildings so it can be determined with some confidence that there are 5,700 adult greater horseshoe bats left, scattered among 14 colonies, all in south-west England and south Wales.

Against the odds, the Greater Horseshoe Bat Project, started in 1998, has claimed a success in raising bat numbers in the largest colony, in south Devon. Some of the bats were fitted with tiny radio transmitters which enabled researchers to find out exactly where the animals were hunting – entirely, it turned out, within four kilometers of their roosting site. Within that area, and working with English Nature and other bodies, the project has been instrumental in persuading farmers to use bat-friendly methods such as retaining hedges and field headlands, and, by scaling down the use of harmful chemicals like ivermectin, used to worm cattle, in giving the dung beetles a helping hand. One organic farmer made the headlines by selling 'bat-friendly milk'. The project aims to ensure that the 'ambitious' recovery target of a 25 per cent increase in Greater Horseshoe bats by the year 2010 will be met. Bat-friendly farming benefits other wildlife too, including hares, farmland birds and insects like grasshoppers and bumble-bees.

WILD FLOWERS FOR THE COUNTIES

Conservation bodies, led by Plantlife, have been eager to promote interest in field botany by inviting the public to choose a wild flower to represent their home county. The vote, originally timed to coincide with the Queen's Golden Jubilee, was carried over to a second year after too many counties opted for the same flower – the bluebell. The bluebell was therefore removed from the running and promoted to our 'national flower'. The final results were announced in June 2004.

The choices were often surprising. The popularity of flowers like cowslip and thrift were confirmed when several counties voted for them. Yorkshire adopted the harebell instead of the expected white rose, while voters in Greater London, with memories of postwar bomb sites in mind, opted for the rosebay willowherb. Sussex, less surprisingly, chose the blue round-headed rampion, known locally as the Pride of Sussex. The large number of rare, relatively obscure flowers chosen suggests that in some places the majority of votes came from knowledgeable botanists. But it also indicates the difficulty of finding flowers that represent one county more than another. Durham, for example, may have chosen spring gentian precisely because it doesn't grow anywhere outside the county. It is hoped that local authorities and other bodies will adopt and use the chosen flower as a symbol (for example, on car number plates), in the same way as the federal states of Canada, Australia and the United States have done.

GM CROPS SENT PACKING

The results of four years of intensive testing of genetically modified (GM) crops were announced in October 2003. Scientists monitored 273 field trials and sampled a million plants in addition to well over a million insects in what is claimed to be the most extensive field trial of GM crops. Its purpose was to investigate whether GM crops yielded environmental benefits, such as greater numbers of weeds and insects, compared with conventional crops.

The results showed that GM herbicide-resistant oilseed rape and sugar-beet were significantly less 'nature-friendly' than conventional crops, with fewer weeds, including less fat-hen, an important species for farm birds. Although it was not investigated, both rape and sugar-beet have wild counterparts which raise the possibility of interbreeding and genetic contamination, possibly resulting in aggressive 'super-weeds'. With GM maize, by contrast, there was more room for wildlife than conventional maize. The Government's advisory committee on releases to the environment concluded that GM maize would not have adverse environmental effects. However, any hope that this would give a green light for GM maize was cast into doubt by the Government's coincidental ban on atrazine, the main maize herbicide, on health and safety grounds.

With public opposition to GM crops as strong as ever, the GM industry has made up its own mind. Monsanto has already shelved its plans to launch GM wheat on the world market after resistance from American cereal farmers. In the UK, Bayer CropScience has given up attempts to grow GM wheat in Britain and the biggest biotechnology company working in Britain, Syngenta, announced it was transferring its GM project from Britain to the United States. For the moment at least, the future of GM crops in Britain seems bleak.

FRESHWATER CRAYFISH

The survival of the only native species of crayfish, one of Britain's largest invertebrates, is increasingly threatened through competition with imported species of crayfish which have escaped into ponds, rivers and reservoirs. Throughout much of England it has been replaced by the larger Signal crayfish, an American species. This species was farmed for food with the help of grants from the then Ministry of Agriculture, and, being able to move about on land as well as water, in addition to an ability to climb low walls and tunneling under wire netting, it inevitably escaped into the wild. Unfortunately the Signal Crayfish carries a fungal disease to which it seems immune, but which is fatal to native crayfish. The spores of the disease are also carried and spread on boots and fishing gear. 'mass mortalities' of native crayfish were a feature of many lowland rivers in the 1980s and early 90s. The American species also suffers from porcelain disease caused by a protozoan parasite.

The native crayfish is still widespread in the Midlands and northern England. However, only 12 river catchments are still free of the invaders, and, at the present rate of decline, the species will be extinct thirty years from now. Since 1996, crayfish farming has been belatedly licenced, and 'no-go areas' set up in areas where the native species still occurs. However this is somewhat academic since the industry, never very profitable in the UK, has declined from over 90 registered farms to just 5. The main hope for the native crayfish resides in the creation of 'crayfish arks' in isolated waters and catchments.

THE BUILT ENVIRONMENT

The Review of Heritage Protection (latterly renamed the Historic Environment Review), published in July 2003, aimed to reform the statutory protection of historic buildings and sites. It proposed, inter alia:

- That existing regime of protection (listing, scheduling and registration) should be combined to form a single list of historic sites and buildings.
- That the authority to list structures and sites should be removed from the Secretary of State and given to English Heritage (with a right of appeal and the formulation of strategic policy left to the former).
- That all proposals for the addition of sites and structures to the lists should be open to public consultation, something currently only embarked upon in respect of post-war structures.
- The preparation of a comprehensive instruction pack for owners of protected structures, including a possible requirement to maintain a 'log book' of repairs and alterations.
- That locally listed buildings should be given statutory protection. At present this sub-regime of listing is not fully effective.
- The preparation of 'Statements of Significance' relating to all listed sites and structures which outline the exact nature of protection (something that is only current practice for scheduling, the registration of gardens and for more recent listings).

The Review came to no firm conclusions on the possible reform of the existing system of grading listed sites and structures (Grade I, II* and II). There were, however, concurrent technical explorations of the possible introduction of a single consent that would add heritage controls to the need to seek planning permission. The resultant report to Government came down broadly in favour of this proposal. A re-examination of Planning Policy Guidance 15 and 16, which defines the Government policy relating to the protection of the historic environment, was started but delayed indefinitely.

The Government's response to the Review has so far been interim. However, the suggestion that there should be a single regime for listing apparently found favour among the 500 or so people that responded, and pilot projects have commenced in 15 areas where at present there are multiple regimes of protection. One such example is Holkham Hall in Norfolk where the main house is listed Grade I alongside myriad curtilage structures, listed garden buildings, buried and scheduled archaeological remains and a registered historic landscape.

ABOLITION OF CROWN EXEMPTION

Spring 2004 saw the passing into legislation of the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Act. While this was a broad attempt to reform the overall planning process, it abolished Crown Exemption from the panoply of heritage controls. However, more conservation driven is the Dealing in Cultural Objects (Offences) Act which came into force on 31 December 2003. This has been instrumental in the fight against the sale and export of stolen works of art or souvenirs chipped from ancient sites. The Government also announced that it was exploring the possibility of setting up a national database of stolen and unlawfully removed cultural objects.

Now that the Crown has lost its exemption from heritage controls, the only institutions that do not need to apply for building consent, conservation area consent or scheduled monument consent are places of worship belonging to the Church of England, the Church in Wales, the Baptist Union, the Roman Catholic Church, the United Reformed Church and the Methodist Church. However, this exemption is regarded as so exceptional that the arguments for and against are rehearsed on a regular basis in a formal review. The Welsh Assembly has decided to conduct the process through an individual reviewer, Peter Howell, but in England the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) concluded that English Heritage should conduct the reviews in the future. The DCMS premised its report on the basis that the arguments in favour of the so-called Ecclesiastical Exemption could be accepted in principle. The suggestion was that future maintenance of the Exemption would be dependent upon the acceptance of 'a high level management agreement' where the broker on the State side would be English Heritage. In the meantime, the Church of England decided to reform its own procedures for dealing with redundant churches. The most obvious aspect of the reform was the proposed abolition, once legislation allowed, of the Advisory Board for Redundant Churches which has hitherto been the principal source of advice to the Commissioners on how to deal with churches that have fallen out of use. The General Synod approved the abolition in February 2004.

SAVE OUR CHURCHES

It has been widely recognised throughout the conversation movement that a serious plight faces historic churches in the short and medium terms. This view has been endorsed on several occasions by Dr Simon Thurley, Chief Executive of English Heritage. By way of assistance, the Government announced that from 1 April 2004, repairs to listed places of worship would be free from VAT. For the two years prior to that date, congregations had to find 5 per cent and before that, the full 17.5 per cent to meet the cost of repairs. Despite no longer being subject to VAT, listed churches continue to pass into redundancy, a problem which is exacerbated by budget constraints within the Churches Conservation Trust. The Grade I medieval church at Wintringham in Yorkshire, for example, was vested with the CCT but the Trust declared that its current funding would have limited effect. However, The Friends of Friendless Churches, the equivalent of the CCT in Wales, announced in the course of the year that it would assist the Grade I listed art nouveau church at Brithdir in Gwynedd designed in 1895–98 by Henry Wilson, following the formal confirmation of redundancy.

GROWTH OF LISTINGS

Currently, until any review proposals are introduced, the principal means of control is through listing. In England alone there are 470,000 listings and the total continues to expand by several thousand each year. Some of the newcomers in the 12 months under review reflect the breadth of vision given to the definition of 'architectural and historic interest'. These include: the late 18th-century pest house at Townland's Hospital in Henley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire which is attached to the workhouse where Samuel Taylor Coleridge spent a miserable week in 1794; the barrage balloon workshop of 1938 at Pucklechurch in Gloucestershire; the 'Regional Seat of Government' at Cambridge built in the early 1950s to house staff who might survive an atomic bomb blast; the Barton Aerodrome at Eccles in Greater Manchester, 'the earliest municipal airport passenger terminal building in Britain' of 1930; Twiggs Barn, in Stevenage, Hertfordshire which retains high up in its rafters the coffin intended to house the earthly remains of the wealthy 18th-century Hertfordshire grocer, Henry Twigg, driven to this extreme by a paranoid fear of grave robbing; the Byker Estate in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, one of the North's most spectacular post-war housing estates designed by Ralph Erskine in the 1970s; 12–14 Broad Street, Wokingham, Berkshire which looks like a modest 19th-century property from the outside but in fact conceals much of the timberwork of a late medieval townhouse; the new Bodleian Library, Broad Street, Oxford of 1935 by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott; the cabman's shelter in Rosslyn Hill in Hampstead, designed in 1935 by Elizabeth Scott, architect of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon; the Crematorium Chapel at Whitley Bay in Tyne & Wear which, having previously been unlisted, now finds itself with Grade II* status because of the extraordinary rich plaster decoration by the master of that medium, George Bankart of 1913; the Owl House at Home Farm, Morton-on-the-Hill, Norfolk, a two-storey structure from 1830; and 35 Regent Parade, Harrogate, Yorkshire, the childhood home of W. P. Frith, the famous Victorian painter and the scene of a performance by the world famous violinist Paganini in 1833.

There are also various shadow lists. One was recently updated by CAMRA, the Campaign for Real Ale, which issued a national inventory of pub interiors of outstanding historic interest (covering some 248) and conducted a similar assessment of outstanding pub interiors and exteriors in London. It is hoped that regional inventories will eventually cover the whole country.

Inclusion on the statutory lists does not preclude a subsequent application to demolish or alter. In the full 12 months of 2003, 114 listed buildings in England and 14 in Wales were the subject of applications to demolish. The presumption is against grant of consent and the majority were refused, including the extraordinary proposal to demolish (or move) the Grade 1 listed church of St Lawrence and All Saints at Eastwood in Essex to allow the expansion of Southend Airport. Other controversial schemes also met with planning refusal: the proposed clearance of 350 Victorian houses in the East Lancashire town of Nelson; the projected redevelopment of a site known as 'The Eye of York' in the centre of the city overlooking Clifford's Tower; and the proposal for a 100-seat restaurant within the bailey of Cardiff Castle.

GRANTS AND REPAIRS

Other major cases in the year involved the reoccupation and extension of Toddington Manor in Gloucestershire, one of the great early Gothic revival houses; the proposed closure of a number of major churches within Brighton; the ejection of the pews from Wesley's New Rooms at Bristol; the demolition of much of Smithfield Market in the section facing Farringdon Road on the City of London/Islington borders; and the conservation of Apethorpe Hall, Northamptonshire. So concerned was English Heritage by the poor condition in which this major building had been kept since 1983 that it seconded a member of staff to shadow the case full time and initiate compulsory purchase proceedings through the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. Another case that caused a furore, and hit the national press, was the demolition without consent of the 1936 villa at Virginia Water known as Greenside. A Public Inquiry into the application to demolish was due to be held in November 2004.

Each of the State agencies in Britain – English Heritage, Historic Scotland, Cadw and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland – are empowered to offer grants towards the repair of historic structures. In the course of the year under review, English Heritage announced £2 million worth of grants towards the nation's cathedrals and relaunched its programme of assistance for war memorials to the tune of £60,000 a year. Other funding included: £879,000 for Godolphin House, near Helston in Cornwall, owned by the National Trust, and £500,000 for the three huge concrete 'listening ears' built in the 1920s at Greatstone on the Kent Coast. Even so, the generosity of English Heritage continued to be overwhelmed by the proceeds of the National Lottery. The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) has continued to allocate £300 million a year to conservation driven projects despite a slight blip in ticket sales and the Government's requirement that London's Olympic bid should be paid for in part by the Lottery.

A sum as large as £300 million will enable large-scale projects to be funded. For example: St Martin in the Fields in Trafalgar Square received £13.377m for repairs and to open up the undercroft to a further array of new activities, the London Transport Museum in Covent Garden received £9.47m; The Royal Observatory, Greenwich received £7.14m (Stage One Pass) to include the opening up of the extraordinary Victorian Altazimuth Pavilion; the Kibble Palace in Glasgow, one of the world's finest glasshouse structures received £3.49m (Stage One Pass); Wentworth Castle in Barnsley, South Yorkshire, now the home of the Northern College for Residential Adult Education, received £10.357m to finance urgent repairs; the Brading Roman Villa on the Isle of Wight received £2.13m to construct a new cover for its 4th-century mosaics; St George's, Bloomsbury received £2.37m (Stage One Pass); Kew Palace received £1.5m; Hardwick Park in County Durham received £4.05m (Stage One Pass) to retrieve landscape and 18th-century buildings from dilapidation; Fulham Palace received £3.3m (Stage One Pass) to begin the long term rescue of this former palace of the Bishops of London; Hylands Park in Chelmsford received £3.05m to conserve the 570-acre parkland designed by Humphry Repton in the 1820s that surrounds a house which had been the subject of an application to demolish in the 1980s; Braintree District Museum received £1.908m to permit the purchase of the Warner Archive of over 80,000 hand-woven fabrics and designs made between 1821 and 1971; Wollaton Hall in Nottingham received £4.5m (Stage One Pass) to repair and enhance one of Robert Smythson's great houses of the 1580s, now a Museum of Natural History; The Woodhall Colliery at Ashington, Northumberland received £10m to conserve the coalfield's buildings and re-house the County Records Office; The Victoria County History received £3.598m (Stage One Pass) for a five-year project allowing the production of 17 local history volumes covering ten English counties; Leeds City Museum received £19m to re-house the museum within the Grade II* listed Leeds Institute in the Millennium Square built 1865–68; Torre Abbey in Torquay, Devon received £4.9m to repair and reinvigorate one of the area's oldest buildings and its principal museum; Cowdray Park in Midhurst, Sussex received £2.9 million to conserve the ruins of the great house gutted by fire in 1793; The Museum of Bristol received £10.277m (Stage One Pass) to create a museum of that name on the site of the present Industrial Museum; Ashton Court in Bristol received £4.35m to rescue a 1783 Humphry Repton landscape; and Cobham Park in Kent received £4.98m.

Very rarely the HLF withdraws grants. Probably the year's most dramatic decision was to rescind an earlier promise to grant aid for the repair of Brighton's West Pier, one of only two piers with Grade I listing. Following a grant request of £15m at Stage Two, without any further commitment that there would not be demands for additional funds, Trustees felt they had to pull the plug. English Heritage publicly opposed the decision but there seemed an inevitability to it given that three fires and the ravages of weather had virtually destroyed all of the pier's superstructure, leaving only a few of the legs and the framing for the flat decking.

Fortunately, this is an unusual occurrence and most grants lead to the completion of the project concerned. Other HLF-funded campaigns in the year under review include: the refurbishment and construction of the new south porch at the Albert Hall; the opening of Dilston Castle and Chapel near Corbridge in Northumberland; Sker House, Glamorgan, one of the country's most spectacular buildings in the 16th-century which would face almost certain collapse without HLF intervention; Manchester Art Gallery (total HLF grant £18.8m) which now has a brand new extension by Michael Hopkins; the fountain at Witley Court, Worcestershire, the centrepiece of the gardens by W. A. Nesfield, now operational with 120 separate jets following a grant of £727,000; Sheffield Botanical Gardens (HLF grant £5.8m) with greenhouses dating from 1837 now reopened with their original linking blocks; 78/80 Derngate in Northampton, interior by Charles Rennie Mackintosh, now open as a museum and study centre; Temple Newsam House near Leeds which reopened in the first half of 2003 with four further rooms to be reopened in 2004 after a major scheme of consolidation which involved the reinstatement of the 18th-century ground levels; The Jerwood Centre, next to the birthplace of William Wordsworth, in the Lake District was designed by Napper Architects to provide a centre for conservation and research with a space for poetry reading; and the Kings Library at the British Museum reopened in December 2003, justifying once again the description by the Museum's Historian Joe Mordaunt-Crook as 'one of the noblest rooms in London'.

Even so, there seems to be a growing trend for smaller, more fragile, museums to close their doors despite the existence of HLF grants. Local campaigns fought off cuts which would have closed museums for at least one day a week in Kingston-upon-Thames and Worthing, but Daventry Museum in Northamptonshire closed its doors completely in March 2004, whilst a similar threat hangs over the Folk Museum at Gloucester. Esoteric interests faced a further blow with the projected closure of the British Dovecote Society. The organisation known as 'Heritage Information', a clearing house for information on crafts, skills and other services for historic buildings repair, mentioned in the Review for 2004, failed to reach the critical mass of subscribers and is now de facto defunct. The quarrying of hydraulic lime, an essential ingredient in the repair of historic buildings, was also dealt a blow with the decision, following a public inquiry, to deny planning permission for the extension of the quarry at Appledoor in Somerset. This site had been described as 'the only supply of hydraulic building lime in the United Kingdom' and this blow means that virtually the only source of lime is from France. The decision was taken despite the endorsement of the extension by English Heritage, the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings (SPAB) and the UK Building Limes Forum.

SWINGS AND ROUNDABOUTS

If these were the roundabouts, there were many swings. Among them was Restoration, a BBC2 programme aired during 2003 and 2004. Viewers were invited to vote by telephone to save buildings and sites of their choice from continued dereliction and the threat of demolition. There were 30 to choose from in 2003 and 21 in 2004. Despite criticism that the choice was unrepresentative (there being no Church of England place of worship), the series was regarded as a great success by conservation professionals and BBC executives with some 4.5 million people tuning in to the last episode of 2003. The winner was the Victoria Baths in Manchester. An international network for traditional building was launched through the Prince's Foundation of the Prince of Wales at the same time as the National Heritage Training Group set itself the task of increasing the small number of people practising skills in traditional building conservation crafts. This is currently estimated to be a mere 40,000 worldwide.

A longstanding threat was averted with the relocation of Sir Christopher Wren's Temple Bar in the City of London following its expulsion in 1878 to the Hertfordshire wilds of Theobald's Park. Completion was scheduled for November 2004 and the new site is situated next to St Paul's Cathedral. English Heritage chose to offer absolute protection to the precious archaeological remains in Boxgrove Quarry, the site of the 1993 discovery of Boxgrove Man, by buying it for £100,000.

The conservation of country houses was dealt a tremendous blow with the sudden bankruptcy of the Country Houses Association (CHA). Founded in 1955 under as the Mutual Householders Association, the CHA, at the time of its demise owned eight substantial houses all of supreme importance, including Great Maytham Hall in Kent by Lutyens, Albury Park in Surrey and Aynhoe Park in Northamptonshire. By the time of writing six of the eight properties had been sold as going concerns. For the vast majority of historic buildings that have fallen into disuse, sensitive conversion remains the best solution. The year under review saw the biggest step forward yet in the campaign to save one of the greatest of all the Northern textile mills – Manningham Mills located in Bradford. The site has now been purchased by Tom Bloxham, founder of the company known as Urban Splash, which intends to convert the million square feet with the help of at least £6m of public money.

DANCE

A number of notable anniversaries were marked by the dance world in 2003–4. Dance Umbrella, the annual festival of contemporary dance, celebrated its 25th birthday in autumn 2003. In 2004 the centenaries of the births of two of the greatest choreographers of the 20th century, Sir Frederick Ashton and George Balanchine, were marked by classical companies all over the world, and the 75th anniversary of the death of the Russian impresario Serge Diaghilev inspired many tributes to his vision and artistic legacy.

Dance Umbrella was founded in 1978 by the former Royal Ballet dancer, Val Bourne, who is still its artistic director today. After its modest first season it gradually grew into a wide-ranging and impressive platform from which leading contemporary choreographers from overseas have been introduced to the UK and on which British choreographers have learnt and developed their craft. The anniversary was marked by a gala at Sadler's Wells Theatre on 28 September 2003 featuring work by British and American luminaries including Siobhan Davies, Matthew Bourne, Wayne McGregor, Trisha Brown, Bill T. Jones and Mark Morris. The season itself presented new work by choreographers including Michael Clark (Oh My Goddess, including a long solo for Clark himself set to songs by P. J. Harvey), Charles Linehan (the quartet Disintegration Loops) and Stephen Petronio (The Island of Misfit Toys), and was graced once more by the presence of the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, which gave a special week of Anniversary Events at the Turbine Hall at the Tate Modern. Ballet Frankfurt gave its last UK performances under the direction of William Forsyth, and Anna Teresa De Keersmaeker returned with her introspective work Small Hands (out of the lie of no). Jonathan Burrows and the composer Matteo Fargion presented their intriguing Both Sitting Duet, neatly described by a Belgian journalist after its première there in 2002 as 'an unspectacular spectacle'. A special anniversary programme featuring Siobhan Davies, Akram Khan, Sara Rudner, David Gordon and Valda Setterfield, Richard Alston Dance Company and others was given for two nights at the Queen Elizabeth Hall in October 2003 under the title Silver Celebration. In June 2004, Val Bourne was awarded a CBE for services to dance.

NEW WORKS

Other contemporary dance events of note during the year included Wayne McGregor's moving new work AtaXia for his Random Dance Company, which premiered at Sadler's Wells in June 2004 and was inspired by MacGregor's recent research into the interaction of the brain and the body. Michael Gordon's score, Trance, was played by Icebreaker and the work was designed by Lucy Carter. George Piper Dances continued to present strongly danced contemporary works interspersed with video diaries of their lives on the road, and featured in a Channel 4 series, The Rough Guide to Choreography, as well as touring to the USA for the first time. Lea Anderson's Cholmondeleys and Featherstonehaughs undertook a tour to celebrate the 20th anniversary of their formation in 1984. Richard Alston created two new works for his company during the season: Overdrive, an intricate and energetic work to a score by Terry Riley, and Shimmer, a quieter piece with unusually theatrical costumes (i.e. unusual for an Alston work) by the fashion designer Julien Macdonald. Alston also introduced a work by another choreographer, Martin Lawrance, into his company's repertoire for the first time when Grey Allegro was premiered in October 2003.

Nigel Hinds, chairman of Shobana Jeyasingh Dance Company and a member of the board of Dance Umbrella, was appointed director of The Place and will work with the rest of the Executive Team responsible for running the venue: Richard Alston (artistic director), John Ashford (theatre director) and Veronica Lewis (director, London Contemporary Dance School). The Place Prize for Dance, worth £25,000, was launched in January 2004 and will be awarded in the autumn. Another important centre for contemporary dance, the new Laban building at Creekside, south London, was awarded the 2003 Stirling Prize for architecture as the building which had made the greatest contribution to British architecture in the preceding year. Late in 2003, Laban and Trinity College of Music (now based in Greenwich) announced that they would merge by August 2004 to form a dedicated conservatoire for music and dance, the first of its kind in the UK.

Rambert Dance Company, Britain's largest contemporary dance company, continued its extensive programme of touring in the UK and also visited China, Hungary and Italy during the year. Mark Baldwin, installed as director in late 2002, commissioned works by Javier de Frutos, Fin Walker and Ian Spink for the 2003–4 season. The most ambitious and interesting of the new works was Spink's A Tragedy of Fashion, conceived as a centenary tribute to Ashton, whose first ballet, created in 1926, bore the same title but the choreography of which has been almost completely lost. Spink uses the original scenario concerning a suicidal couturier but expands and adapts it to fit a much larger work full of references to ideas and images that influenced Ashton and which abounds with in-jokes and entertaining puns. De Frutos's new work, Elsa Canasta, deliberately confounds the romantic music of Cole Porter by juxtaposing it with overtly sexy, crudely physical choreography, while Walker's Reflection is a repetitive work for two groups of five dancers to music by Ben Park.

RELAUNCH OF SCOTTISH BALLET

Scottish Ballet, in its first season under new director Ashley Page, is now perched somewhat uncomfortably on the fence between contemporary dance and classical ballet. Page presented works by leading contemporary choreographers Richard Alston, Siobhan Davies and Stephen Petronio as well as several of his own works and Balanchine's The Four Temperaments. He also mounted a new production of The Nutcracker, with the scenario updated to Weimar Germany and the beauty and poetry of the score largely ignored in the desire to be anti-traditional. It is not yet clear whether the company's dancers can rise to the technical challenges required of them in such a diverse repertoire, or whether Scottish audiences will continue to receive them with the enthusiasm and interest generated by this first season.

The Royal Ballet, in Monica Mason's first full season as director, elected to mark Balanchine's centenary and the 75th anniversary of Diaghilev's death in 2003–4, and Sir Frederick Ashton's centenary in 2004–5 (although it did take part in Ashton celebrations in California and New York in July 2004). Balanchine was born Georgiy Melitonovich Balanchivadze in St Petersburg in 1904 and joined Diaghilev's Ballets Russes in 1924 as a dancer. Diaghilev appointed him his chief choreographer in 1925, and after Diaghilev's death Balanchine stayed in Europe until he was invited to the USA by Lincoln Kirstein in 1934 to found the School of American Ballet. The New York City Ballet, officially founded in 1948, became the vehicle for the expression and development of Balanchine's radical style of neoclassicism until his death in 1983. (From 1958 he was ably assisted by the choreographer and ballet master John Taras, who died on 2 April 2004). Balanchine's work was represented in the Royal Ballet's repertoire during the year by performances of Agon, The Prodigal Son, Symphony in C and, perhaps his most significant masterpiece, The Four Temperaments, created to Hindemith's music in 1946 but still vibrant and exciting nearly 60 years later.

Diaghilev, who died in Venice in 1929, was instrumental in promoting the talents and careers of numerous other dancers, choreographers, musicians and artists, and through his Ballets Russes he ensured that ballet was presented and judged as a serious, expressive art form rather than as a merely decorative spectacle. The Royal Ballet mounted four works in tribute to him during the season: Ashton's Daphnis and Chloë, to the Ravel score commissioned by Diaghilev in 1912; L'Après-midi d'un faune, the first work choreographed by Vaslav Nijinsky, Diaghilev's star dancer, and here using the choreographer's own notation from 1915; Le Spectre de la rose, created by Mikhail Fokine for Diaghilev's company in 1911; and Les Noces, the powerful, austere evocation of a Russian peasant wedding to Stravinsky's music choreographed by Bronislava Nijinska for Diaghilev in 1923. Mason also invited five young choreographers to produce works inspired by Diaghilev and his legacy at the Linbury Studio Theatre at the Royal Opera House in June 2004.

ROYAL CREATIONS

The choreographic creativity that burgeoned under Diaghilev has been conspicuous by its absence from the Royal Ballet in recent years. Three new one-act works were presented in 2003–4. Broken Fall is a sterile, gymnastic piece by Russell Maliphant performed by the self-styled 'Ballet Boyz' (Michael Nunn and William Trevitt, both in their thirties) and Sylvie Guillem, once more showing us her remarkably flexible body. Qualia by Wayne McGregor is another example of how not to waste beautifully trained classical dancers. The most successful of the three works was an interesting and expressive pas de deux by William Tuckett, depicting a fragile relationship and stunningly danced by Adam Cooper and Zenaida Yanowsky. (The same dancers joined Matthew Hart and Will Kemp in Tuckett's highly successful production of The Soldier's Tale to Stravinsky's music and with designs by Lez Brotherston in the Linbury Studio Theatre in June 2004). The company also performed Christopher Wheeldon's Polyphonia for the first time; this was created in 2001 for New York City Ballet, and Balanchine's influence is evident in this as in much of Wheeldon's work; but it suffered badly from being programmed on the same bill as the vastly superior The Four Temperaments.

The company gave strong performances of a range of full-length works during the year, although a planned revival of MacMillan's Isadora was postponed at short notice. Ashton's 1948 production of Cinderella was performed in handsome new designs by Toer van Schayk and Christine Haworth, and outstanding performances of MacMillan's Mayerling were followed by a dismal revival of his Anastasia (in place of Isadora), the full-length version of which has not stood the test of time and has, in any case, been overtaken by the real-life revelation that Anna Anderson was not, in fact, the youngest daughter of the last Tsar.

Birmingham Royal Ballet marked Ashton's centenary by reviving two of his most popular full-length works, La fille mal gardée and The Two Pigeons, and the historic wartime work Dante Sonata; it also toured some of his smaller pieces to regional venues in April 2004. In July 2004 the company performed in New York as part of the Ashton centenary celebrations at the Metropolitan Opera House. Ashton and Balanchine were honoured by a gala, Sir Fred and Mr B, held at the Birmingham Hippodrome on 11 March 2004, and Balanchine's Apollo was brought into the repertoire at the beginning of the season.

BINTLEY'S BEAST

Unlike the Royal Ballet, the Birmingham company has seen no shortage of new works over the years, some supplied by its prolific director, David Bintley. In December 2003 he mounted a full-length production of The Beauty and the Beast to a score by Glen Buhr and with impressive designs by Philip Prowse. The cast worked hard but the ballet is over-complicated and choreographically weak; however it was well received by audiences. The other new work of the season was Krishna, a colourful but confused evocation of the life of the Hindu god by the kathak dancer and choreographer Nahid Siddiqui. Bintley's own far superior 1985 work, The Sons of Horus, based on Ancient Egyptian beliefs concerning death and the body, was introduced into the repertoire in September 2003.

English National Ballet dedicated its performances during the year to another dance pioneer whose centenary fell in July 2004 – Sir Anton Dolin, who was born in 1904 and died in 1983, and who danced under Diaghilev and de Valois and in the USA before co-founding the London Festival Ballet (now English National Ballet) with Dame Alicia Markova in 1950. The company appointed John Talbot as chairman in place of Angela Rippon in April 2004. Its repertoire during the year was heavily influenced by financial considerations and largely comprised two productions of Swan Lake joined by the ever-popular Nutcracker (albeit in the poor 2002 production by Christopher Hampson) and Michael Corder's stylish Cinderella.

Yet another Swan Lake was premièred by Northern Ballet Theatre in February 2004. Choreographed by the company's artistic director, David Nixon, it uses a score assembled by John Longstaff from various Tchaikovsky sources, and updates the action to 1912 New England while replacing the traditional scenario with a confused gay love story. More successful was Nixon's reworking of A Midsummer Night's Dream, mounted in September 2003 with stunning sets by Duncan Hayler and costumes by Nixon himself. Shakespeare's play is transposed to the late 1940s and the plot centres on a touring ballet company and the professional intrigues and romantic entanglements therein; the production was strongly performed and dramatically coherent as well as being an undoubted crowd-pleaser.

VISITORS

Visitors in 2003–4 included the first ever tour to the UK by the Royal New Zealand Ballet, which chose its first programme unwisely (a turgid triple bill of works by Christopher Hampson, Javier de Frutos and Mark Baldwin) but redeemed its season at Sadler's Wells with performances of Hampson's effective 2003 production of Romeo and Juliet, set in the 1960s. Other visitors came largely from across the Atlantic. The Martha Graham Company performed at Sadler's Wells for the first time in November 2003, and San Francisco Ballet appeared at the 2003 Edinburgh Festival. Dance Theatre of Harlem undertook a seven-week tour of the UK that opened at Sadler's Wells in March 2004. The Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane company celebrated its 20th anniversary with a season at Sadler's Wells in June 2004 that was disappointing in the quality of both dancing and choreography. Other visitors included: the National Ballet of China; Ballet Preljocaj; the eminent Russian ballerina Nina Ananiashvili and her own Moscow Dance Theatre in a short season of sub-standard contemporary works at Sadler's Wells in March 2004; and the Bolshoi Ballet in a lengthy season (the first in London under its new director, Alexei Ratmansky) at the Royal Opera House in summer 2004.

In February 2004 a new national organisation was set up by the Arts Council of England and the Department for Education and Skills to support and promote young people in dance. The National Youth Dance Agency, based at the Royal Academy of Dance, is directed by Linda Jasper; it will identify the full range of dance activities available to young people and will seek to create new partnerships across the various sectors involved in order to maximise and co-ordinate the opportunities offered to the dancers of the future.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

In April 2004 the Culture, Media and Sport Committee of the House of Commons announced an inquiry into the development of dance in the UK. It invited information and views from interested parties based around questions concerning the dance economy, the effect of public investment on the dance sector, and young people and dance. The committee received more than 70 written submissions from individuals, dance companies, national dance agencies, dance critics, community and support organisations, and funding bodies. It also held an evidence session in May 2004. Its report, published in July 2004, outlined the challenges facing the dance sector in relation to children's experience of dance, funding, working conditions for dancers, the physical infrastructure, and the problem of low salaries in the profession. It concluded that it was very important for the Government to set out 'a clear, overarching policy for dance', describing how it intended to achieve its objectives: excellence, access and contribution to healthy living. The committee emphasised the importance of raising the profile of dance and its potential to contribute to different policy areas. The Government's resulting strategy for dance is due to be revealed in October 2004, and could have long-term effects on the development of the art form in the UK.

FILM

In 2003–4 the world of film was decidedly political. In November 2004, Austrian-born film star Arnold Schwarzenegger fronted the recall campaign against the Democrat incumbent Governor of California, Gray Davis, culminating in the Republican's landslide victory. Schwarzenegger was sworn in as the 38th Governor on 17 November 2003, just months after he'd topped the box-office charts with Terminator 3.

Whatever one thinks of Schwarzenegger's politics it was hard not to see this as a victory of celebrity over substance, and an alarming indication of voter frustration. For Arnie to follow the late Ronald Reagan's career path all the way to the White House would require an amendment to the US constitution (which states that the President must be US-born), but that is not inconceivable. First though, he will have to patch up some significant holes in the state budget and for now, at least, his movie career is on indefinite hold.

Satirist Michael Moore could only dream of a left-wing candidate with Arnie's popular appeal to take on George W. Bush, and his preferred choice, General Wesley Clark, quickly limped out of the presidential race. Perhaps Moore should have stood as a candidate himself? The Democrat Party may take a lot of convincing but many people thought that Moore's non-fiction film Fahrenheit 9/11 mounted a better case against the President than John Kerry managed in six months of campaigning.

FAHRENHEIT 9/11

Against the backdrop of ongoing mayhem in Iraq this was always going to be a controversial film. Even then, it exceeded all expectations. In April, Moore publicly accused the Disney Corporation of refusing to distribute his movie for political reasons (Fahrenheit 9/11 was financed by Miramax, a subsidiary of Disney). The story made front page news around the world, and sent Disney into a spin of damage limitation.

In May, the movie premiered at the Cannes film festival. Short on facts but long on opinion and innuendo, Fahrenheit 9/11 was no conventional documentary. Rather, it was a polemical broadside aimed directly at Bush's re-election bid.

Contrary to popular opinion in the USA, Iraqis didn't have anything to do with the attack on the World Trade Centre – most of the terrorists were Saudis. In Fahrenheit 9/11, Moore duly recycles speculation that Saudi oil interests have bankrolled Bush since the early 1970s but fails to deliver any definitive evidence. This lack of evidence is the least impressive aspect of the film and Moore implies the war in Iraq was simply a diversion to spare the President's blushes – a thesis no more proven than Bush's contention that Saddam Hussein was in possession of weapons of mass destruction.

Moore is on safer ground satirising the President's syntactical infelicities, his leisurely style and his privileged background. Here, the selective use of archival footage is overtly provocative, and a legitimate corrective to the institutionalised distortions of the network news. Moore, for example, may be the first person to reveal the full extent of the protesting at Bush's inauguration. A section of footage showing the President's bewildered response to the breaking news of the destruction of the World Trade Centre is simply excruciating: caught on camera as he reads a children's book to pre-schoolers, Bush sits there for seven minutes apparently incapable of decisive action.

The movie's most substantial section addresses the so-called Patriot Act, and accuses the administration of fostering a climate of fear and paranoia – in effect, terrorising citizens while curtailing their civil liberties. Most of the second half of the film is dedicated to the fate of US troops in Iraq and Lila Lipscomb, a mother who proudly sent two of her children to Iraq, lost her son, and changed her mind about the validity of the war, emerges as the emotional core of the film. She subsequently became the focus for many Americans' scepticism and anger about the war, or about the film, depending on their politics.

In Cannes, the jury awarded Fahrenheit 9/11 the Palme d'Or on 'aesthetic grounds'. Released in the USA in June 2004 by a coalition of independent distribution companies (including Miramax, whose troubled relationship with Disney may soon be terminated), Fahrenheit 9/11 reached a far wider audience than had been expected, breaking the $100 million barrier to become the most successful documentary ever made (taking five times more than Moore's previous record-holder, Bowling for Columbine). Even then, the controversy continued, with singer Linda Ronstadt being booed and subsequently banned from a Las Vegas venue after she endorsed the film during one of her concerts.

Perhaps surprisingly, for a film calibrated to appeal directly to the middle-American voter (and which all but ignores Tony Blair), Fahrenheit also became the most successful documentary released in the UK.

STRANGER THAN FICTION

Fahrenheit 9/11 was inescapable but it wasn't the only prominent documentary to reach cinemas this year. Indeed, while television broadcasters are shying away from challenging non-fiction, documentary filmmakers are enjoying unprecedented success on the big screen.

In 2003 hits included Etre et Avoir, Dogtown and Z-Boys, The Kid Stays in the Picture and Spellbound. In 2004, there was no shortage of equivalents. Stacy Peralta returned with Riding Giants and Jorgen Leth met Lars von Trier's challenges head-on in the post-modern The Five Obstructions, while Kevin Macdonald's Touching the Void recreated the white-knuckle drama of a near-fatal mountain climb. But in the same vein as Fahrenheit 9/11, many of 2004's documentaries had a more political orientation. Nick Broomfield looked at the case of multiple-murderer Aileen Wuornos in Aileen: Life and Death of a Serial Killer (coincidentally also the subject of Monster, for which Charlize Theron won an Academy Award), and suggested that she was wrongfully executed by Florida Governor Jeb Bush.

Errol Morris teased out fascinating ironies, confessions and evasions from the former US Secretary of State for Defence, Robert McNamara, in the Oscar-winning The Fog of War, and any parallels between Vietnam and Iraq were left to the viewers' discretion.

Morgan Spurlock took on fast food giant McDonalds in the witty but cautionary tale Super Size Me. Spurlock ate nothing but McDonalds for a month which played havoc with his health. It was a stunt, but an effective one, and McDonalds discontinued its Super Size Me option within a month of the film's successful US release.

And so it continued: The Control Room painted a sympathetic portrait of the al-Jazeera news network; Outfoxed highlighted the alleged right-wing bias of Rupert Murdoch's Fox News; and The Corporation charted the rise of the business institution as an invincible entity.

Provocative and unabashedly partisan, these documentaries showed that where Michael Moore led, others were keen to follow. None of them had anything like Fahrenheit 9/11's commercial success (Super Size Me came closest with a domestic figure of about $10 million) but they all made waves and got people talking. Clearly there is an appetite for this kind of film-making which has not been stimulated before.

RETURN OF THE EPIC

In mainstream cinema, spectacle and escapism were the order of the day. In the year under review, the Academy Awards resembled a coronation, as Peter Jackson's The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King was duly rewarded with eleven statuettes including Oscars for Best Picture and Best Director. This haul puts it on a par with the biggest ever winners, Ben-Hur (1959) and Titanic (1997).

A fundamentally moralistic war story, The Lord of the Rings trilogy resonated with events in Afghanistan and Iraq but Tolkien's mythology is ultimately hermetic, and the film's appeal is largely based on the wonder of its CGI (Computer Generated Imagery). Not surprisingly, advances in CGI, coupled with the box office bonanza unearthed by the trilogy (and Gladiator before it), has inspired a return to epic film-making. The year 2004 saw Brad Pitt and Peter O'Toole in Troy, Clive Owen and Keira Knightley in a pagan King Arthur, and Colin Farrell as the great Alexander. There are many more epics in the making, including four potential films about Icenic queen, Boudicca.

There was even some hope of a return for that once dominant, now dormant, genre, the Western. Viggo Mortensen (Aragorn in Lord of the Rings) had a minor success in Hidalgo, and Kevin Costner's Open Range, while not on a par with Dances with Wolves, was a welcome comeback. However, The Missing went AWOL at the box office, despite being a gripping piece of storytelling with a formidable performance from Cate Blanchett. Lastly, the revisionist version of The Alamo was a financial disaster for Disney, which saw an initial return of just $22 million on an investment of $95 million.

KILL BILL

On the subject of returns, 2004 saw the much anticipated return of writer-director Quentin Tarantino, seven years after Jackie Brown. His long-gestating martial arts extravaganza Kill Bill finally emerged in two feature-length instalments, Kill Bill Vol. 1 and Kill Bill Vol. 2.

What at first looked like a panic measure (the combined running time would have put the film at more than four hours) turned out to be a master stroke. Critics raved about the panache and grace Tarantino brought to what is essentially a delirious sampler of great moments from American, Japanese and Chinese trash culture. Kill Bill Vol. 1 is style for style's sake. Toying with his audience, Tarantino didn't even bother to explain the backstory to the film's revenge plot, as the Bride (Uma Thurman) tracks down and eliminates her former colleagues from the Deadly Viper Squad. Her quest climaxes in a showdown with a hundred bodyguards, whom she leaves bleeding, clutching at lost limbs, or dead on the floor.

Kill Bill Vol. 2 made its predecessor look like the longest trailer ever made. Here were the answers Tarantino had left hanging, the rhyme and reason, and emotions more complex than pure hatred. Neither film enjoyed Pulp Fiction-type success but enough to vindicate Tarantino and production company Miramax.

Tarantino, however, failed to feature at the Academy Awards and despite Peter Jackson's clean sweep, none of the cast of Lord of the Rings was nominated either. This left some elbow room for the handful of serious dramas Hollywood produced this year: Peter Weir's superbly fashioned mariners' tale, Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World; Anthony Minghella's civil war love story Cold Mountain; Alejandro Gonzales Inarritu's soul-searching 21 Grams; Patty Jenkins' Monster; Vadim Perelman's gloomy House of Sand and Fog; and Clint Eastwood's Mystic River.

Along with Sofia Coppola's comic romance Lost in Translation, Mystic River was the best reviewed American film of the year. Neither would have been made but for the clout of their directors. Coppola went down the indie route, and shot her Tokyo story in less than 30 days. Eastwood persuaded enough stars to sign up (Sean Penn, Tim Robbins, Kevin Bacon, Laura Linney and Laurence Fishburne) that Warner had to relent, despite its misgivings: 'we're not in the business of making dramas anymore', one executive reportedly advised the astonished Eastwood. A depressing sign of the times. Mystic River features dark subject matter, including child abuse, but it is basically a suspense thriller, nothing more challenging than that. It was budgeted at $30 million, and made three times that at the US box office and if the studios aren't interested in this kind of film, what business are they in, exactly? The answer, probably, is either much more expensive films, or much cheaper, but preferably the former, because such juggernauts create their own momentum and the richest gravy train. Mystic River is not the kind of film to inspire marketing tie-ins, toys, or sponsorship deals.

HIT PARADE

The biggest hits of 2003 were Finding Nemo, Pirates of the Caribbean, Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King, Matrix Reloaded, Bruce Almighty, X2, Elf, Terminator 3, Bad Boys 2, and Matrix Revolutions. Apart from the comedies, they were all sequels, known brands, tried and tested. As one frustrated film-maker explained, 'the ideal studio movie is the sequel. The problem is, how to originate a sequel?'

With box-office returns for 2003 more or less flat, and audience figures down, the economics of the studios' approach would look shaky save for the DVD bonanza, which continues to boost everyone's profit margins. Last year's North American DVD revenue hit $17.5 billion, two-thirds of that in sales, one third rentals.

Take the case of Finding Nemo, the underwater tale of an anxious father who loses his son and has to cross the ocean to find him again. Another triumph from Pixar, who also made the Toy Story films, Finding Nemo generated $339 million in US cinemas but more than doubled that figure internationally, and then went on to sell eight million copies on the first day of its DVD release, heading for something in the region of another $400 million in home viewing revenue.

Not surprisingly, the problem on which the entertainment giants are focusing is not cutting back overheads, but cutting out digital piracy.

BRITISH FILM

In this high stakes business environment, how did the British film industry fare during 2003–4? Figures compiled by the UK Film Council paint a rosy picture: 173 films were made in Britain in 2003 (twice as many as in 2002), generating over $1 billion worldwide, and even taking a 5.7 per cent share of US ticket sales.

It should be noted that the UK Film Council claims the likes of Tomb Raider 2 as a British production – it was filmed here but is a US/UK/Japanese/German co-production. Nevertheless, more people are going to the cinema in the UK on a regular basis than at any time over the past 30 years (admissions of 167.3 million were the second highest in that period), and British films constitute a relatively healthy 14.8 per cent of what we watch.

Home-grown hits included Love Actually, Calendar Girls and Touching the Void. The latest Harry Potter instalment, Richard Eyre's Stage Beauty, and Working Title's Wimbledon should keep the figures up through 2004 but these 'British' films have a distinctly trans-Atlantic feel to them: Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban is made by Warner and directed by Mexican Alfonso Cuarón; Stage Beauty stars Americans Billy Crudup and Claire Danes, is based on an American play, and is a US/GB co-production; and Wimbledon is financed through Universal, co-stars Paul Bettany (who is British) and Kirsten Dunst (who isn't), and is written by an American, Adam Brooks.

Of course, there are authentic British films being made. Ken Loach's A Fond Kiss, Pawel Pawelkowski's My Summer of Love, Richard Jobson's Sixteen Years of Alcohol, Roger Michell's The Mother and David Mackenzie's Young Adam all fit the bill. Often these British films look less to the USA than to Europe for inspiration but in so doing, they're falling outside of the mainstream and struggling to find an audience. As the Film Council has acknowledged, this is a significant challenge which needs to be addressed.

As for the fortunes of European films on British screens, the situation could scarcely be worse. The most successful foreign language film released in the UK in 2003 was the Brazilian City of God which was by no means a box office success. The most popular French film was the animation Belleville Rendez-vous, followed by Francois Ozon's Swimming Pool and L'Homme du Train (co-financed by the Film Council). None of these made it into the box office top 100.

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

One subtitled film sure to figure in the top ten box office lists for 2004 is Mel Gibson's, The Passion of Christ which was, in one sense at least, a labour of love. Financed entirely by the actor-director, who also co-wrote the film, it detailed Christ's last hours, from the Garden of Gethsemane to his crucifixion and resurrection.

Like Fahrenheit 9/11, The Passion of Christ became a news item well before anyone had seen the film. The source of the controversy, fears that Gibson (a devout Catholic and whose father is an alleged Holocaust-denier) was making an anti-semitic film. By inviting Catholic Church leaders but not their Jewish counterparts to preview the film, Gibson fuelled the fear. He also got an endorsement from the Pope, who reportedly declared, 'It is as it was.'

Reviews were overwhelmingly negative. Gibson's film is brutally and relentlessly violent. It begins with words from Isaiah, 'He was wounded for our transgressions, crushed for our iniquities. By his wounds we are healed.' This interpretation of the Christ's last hours is one of guilt and atonement. Gibson wants viewers to experience Jesus being beaten and tortured for two hours because in sharing his suffering we have to acknowledge our own sin. Some are more guilty than others, however. While Gibson claimed biblical integrity, to the extent he shot the film in Aramaic and Latin (the language of the traditional Catholic Church, but not the language of the Roman Empire of the time), he admitted to inserting details from other sources, notably The Dolorous Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ by early nineteenth-century nun Anne Catherine Emmerich, and even claimed that 'the Holy Ghost worked through me' during the film's shooting.

Gibson's unhistorical interpretation relieves Pontius Pilate (and by extension the Romans) of their responsibility for the crucifixion, and lays the blame instead on the Jewish priests. The film does not make it clear that Jesus was himself Jewish. Unlike The Last Temptation of Christ, which religious groups picketed in 1988, The Passion of the Christ was embraced by the Catholic Church and evangelical Protestants, who accepted Gibson's evaluation that it was 'perhaps the best outreach opportunity in 2,000 years'. Despite (or because of) the violence, the subtitles, the bad reviews and the controversy, The Passion of the Christ enjoyed financial success, grossing $370 million in the US, £10 million in the UK, and much more in Catholic countries around the world.

LITERATURE

A book originally written as a children's book which was already one of the critical and commercial successes of 2003 went on to win a slew of prizes in 2004. Mark Haddon's The Curious Incident of The Dog in the Night-Time was acquired by children's publisher David Fickling, but taken up by sister imprint Cape and published in two editions, for adults and children. The children's edition was submitted for the Man Booker Prize, and chair of the judges, John Carey, confessed on television that he very much wanted it to be shortlisted, only to be thwarted, to his surprise, by others on the panel. Haddon's book, the narrative of a boy with Asperger's syndrome trying to solve the mystery of the murder of a neighbour's dog, nevertheless went on to win the novel (rather than the children's novel) category of the Whitbread Prize, then the overall Whitbread Book of the Year award, as well as both the literary novel and the children's novel categories at the book trade's British Book Awards, which take account of sales. It also won the Guardian Children's Fiction Prize and was shortlisted for the CILIP Carnegie Medal, the prestigious children's book prize chosen by librarians. The book sold 100,000 copies in hardback, with the adult edition outselling the children's by four to one.

BOOKER HIGHLIGHTS

The Man Booker Prize shortlist did have its surprises though. Alongside former winner Margaret Atwood's lauded vision of a futuristic dystopia, Oryx and Crake (Bloomsbury); Brick Lane (Doubleday), the acclaimed first novel by Monica Ali, selected in 2003 as one of Granta's Best of Young British novelists; and Zoe Heller's highly regarded Notes on a Scandal, were two works by lesser known authors, Damon Galgut's The Good Doctor (Atlantic), set in post-apartheid South Africa and a book from small, state-subsidised, Birmingham-based publisher Tindal Street Press, Clare Morrall's Astonishing Splashes of Colour, a narrative of a woman with an unresolved emotional history. There was also a first novel, Vernon God Little (Faber) written under the pseudonym DBC Pierre. When this book won, it caused a stir, not just for its style and subject – it is the story of a boy accused of a Columbine-style atrocity at a high school narrated in his own disaffected voice – but for the history of the author. The pseudonym was partly a joke: DBC stood for 'Dirty But Clean' and the author, Peter Finlay had a chequered past, which included substantial bad debts.

Two books by literary heavyweights Martin Amis and Peter Carey were unflatteringly reviewed – Yellow Dog (Cape) and My Life as a Fake (Faber) were missed off the Booker Prize shortlist. Tibor Fischer had livened up the silly season by trashing Yellow Dog. Fischer's own novel, Voyage to the End of the Room (Chatto), was published on the same day as Amis's; the online bookseller Amazon mischievously offered the two for sale together, at a saving of £7.

A Man Booker innovation for 2004 was the introduction of a specially programmed website to allow library users to select titles from the longlist using search terms defining their tastes. Categories included 'easy', 'disturbing', 'optimistic', and – one that ruled out several fancied candidates – 'no sex'.

Other Booker winners or shortlisted candidates of the past who had notable new novels out during the year were Peter Ackroyd with The Lambs of London (Chatto) about

Charles and Mary Lamb and the discovery of a document by Shakespeare; J. G. Ballard with a story of middle-class revolution, Millennium People (Perennial); Pat Barker with her tale of a war-reporter from Afghanistan finding human brutality closer to home, A Mind to Kill (Penguin); J. M. Coetzee with Elizabeth Costello (Secker), about a tired author on the lecture circuit; and Jim Crace with Six (Viking), a riff on conception, relationships and birth, whose hero had fathered six children by different mothers. John Updike paid a rare visit to Britain and was the star guest at the Guardian Hay Festival in May.

Margaret Atwood's Oryx and Crake appeared again on the shortlist for the Orange Prize for Fiction, but the judging panel, chaired by novelist and broadcaster Sandi Toksvig, selected as the winner Andrea Levy's Small Island, prompting an immediate reprint by publisher Headline of 12,000 copies. Small Island sold modestly before the announcement, but so too did last year's winner, Valerie Martin's Property (Time Warner), which went on to sell 50,000 copies.

The literary theme of the year turned out to be Henry James, who appeared in novels by Colm Toibin (The Master, Picador, which followed five years of James's life), Alan Hollinghurst (The Line of Beauty, Picador, whose protagonist was a postgraduate studying James), David Lodge (Author, Author, Secker, which chronicled James's middle years) and Toby Litt (Finding Myself, Penguin, in which James had a bit part).

Among the notable biographies were the culmination of a decade of research in Peter Parker's definitive life of Christopher Isherwood (Isherwood, Picador), which was widely and favourably reviewed in tandem with John Sutherland's life of Isherwood's associate, Stephen Spender, The Authorised Biography (Viking). Autumn 2003 saw the first overview of the life and work of children's author and illustrator Raymond Briggs, Blooming Books (Cape) with copious samples of Briggs' work and text by Nicolette Jones. Autumn 2004 saw Robert McCrum writing on P. G. Wodehouse (Viking), John Coldstream on Dirk Bogarde (Weidenfeld), and Patrick Marnham on Mary Wesley (Bantam Press); Marnham's book, entitled May I Borrow Your Husband for the Afternoon?, was billed as including material that would be revelatory even to the author's family.

CELEBRITY MEMOIRS

Autumn 2003–4 saw a profusion of celebrity memoirs, notably David Beckham: My Side, written 'with' the former EastEnders actor Tom Watt, for which HarperCollins reportedly paid £2m. My Side sold more than 86,000 copies in the first two days of publication, and over 150,000 copies in the first fortnight.

Footballer Paul Gascoigne's autobiography Gazza: My Story (Headline), written 'with' Hunter Davies, was launched with a print run of 200,000 copies and an eight-day signing tour in June. It sold 18,759 copies in its first two days on sale and a total of 32,702 copies in the first week, outselling the memoirs of former US president Bill Clinton, whose My Life (Hutchinson) was published at the same time and sold 21,690 copies through bookshops in that week. Clinton came to the UK to promote his book in July.

Robson Books did not wait for Wayne Rooney to prove himself one of the most valuable football players in the world at Euro 2004. In autumn 2003 the publisher thought that the 18-year-old already had enough achievements under his belt to justify a 260-page biography by Harry Harris. A revised version was published to coincide with the nation's obsession with the world cup. Meanwhile John Blake signed up Sue Evison's Wayne Rooney: England's Hero which was published in mid-August.

Sporting autobiographies included England rugby captain Martin Johnson's (Headline), and, in autumn 2004, books by marathon runner Paula Radcliffe (Simon & Schuster), commissioned before her disappointment at the Athens Olympics; by England rugby coach Clive Woodward, who published Winning! (Hodder) just as his team started losing; by members of that rugby World Cup-winning team Jonny Wilkinson (Headline) and Will Greenwood (Century); and by England cricket captain Nasser Hussain (Michael Joseph) and golfer Nick Faldo (Headline).

Media personalities had plenty to say for themselves. The memoirs of journalist and television presenter Joan Bakewell, The Centre of the Bed, attracted widespread attention, revealing as they did details of her affair with Harold Pinter (Hodder). The Success of Ricky, by Ricky Tomlinson, an actor of humble origins who had achieved a substantial following with the television series The Royle Family, helped to justify Time Warner's advance of £850,000. Glamour model Jordan, whose real name is Katie Price, appeared at the London Book Fair with a jacket-only mock-up of her book-to-be, Being Jordan (published by John Blake), thereby giving the papers the opportunity to make jokes about her book having nothing in it. It was nevertheless one of the year's highest sellers.

Other celebrity memoirs included the singer and television presenter Cilla Black's record of her sustained career (What's It All About?, Ebury), radio presenter Sir Jimmy Young's autobiography Forever Young (Hodder), pop musician Sting's Broken Music (Simon & Schuster), and actress Martine McCutcheon's Behind the Scenes – A Personal Diary (HarperCollins). There were books too from Eastenders star Shane Richie (From Rags to Richie, Contender), TV presenter Graham Norton (So Me, Hodder), actress Sheila Hancock, about her husband (The Two of Us: My Life with John Thaw, Bloomsbury), and from broadcasters Jon Snow (Shooting History, HarperCollins) and Michael Buerk (The Road Taken, Hutchinson). Straight after his headline-grabbing resignation from his role as Director-General of the BBC in the wake of the Hutton report, Greg Dyke was signed up to write his memoirs (HarperCollins). Pamela Stephenson, the comedian whose biography, Billy, of her husband, fellow comedian Billy Connolly, published by HarperCollins in 2001, had sold more than a million copies, produced a sequel: Bravemouth: A Year of Living with Billy Connolly (Headline). Other slightly less triumphant follow-ups to earlier bestsellers included a second television spin-off offering sartorial advice, Susannah Constantine and Trinny Woodall's What Not To Wear, Part 2 (Weidenfeld) and Schott's Original Food and Drink Miscellany (Bloomsbury), following the runaway success of Schott's Original Miscellany, a bijou collection of general knowledge and trivia.

RICHARD AND JUDY

The BBC's The Big Read, a promotion involving a series of programmes about the nation's favourite books, culminated in December 2003 in a vote predictably won by the bookmakers' favourite J. R. R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings. The Big Read gave rise to initiatives in libraries, schools and online, which enthused existing readers and enticed reluctant ones. Seventeen of the top 21 titles achieved combined extra sales of more than 750,000 copies. The biggest gainer was Daphne du Maurier's Rebecca, which moved to a new publisher, Time Warner, and improved its sales from 10,000 copies in 2002 to 95,000 copies in 2003.

Following this success, Channel 4's independently-made afternoon chat show Richard and Judy, whose distinguishing feature is that its presenters are married to each other, had an unexpectedly big impact on book sales. In January 2004 it launched its own book club, in the mould of Oprah Winfrey's which has been so successful in the USA, with a recommended list of ten titles. Each novel was featured on the show and one of the outstanding benefactors of the publicity was Joseph O'Connor's novel Star of the Sea (Vintage), which became a number one bestseller. Also included in the selection were Toast, a memoir by chef Nigel Slater (Fourth Estate), which doubled its sales in the week it was featured, and the novels Lucia, Lucia by Adriana Trigiani (Simon & Schuster), Brick Lane by Monica Ali (Doubleday), The Lovely Bones by Alice Sebold (Picador), Cecelia Ahern's PS I Love You (HarperCollins) and Starter for Ten by David Nicholls (Flame). Public libraries joined in the promotion of the Richard and Judy selections, and found the stock heavily borrowed. Viewers voted for a winner, presented in April at the British Book Awards; highlights from the awards dinner were broadcast on Richard and Judy. The first selection sold so well that the programme went on to choose a similar list of six paperbacks for summer reading.

Appearing in Richard and Judy's summer selection was American Jennifer Donnelly's remarkable novel A Gathering Light, which was originally published by Bloomsbury Children's Books for young adults but later issued in an adult edition. It told the story of a teenage farm girl in the Adirondacks in 1906 facing a timeless choice between career and family: a college education that would enable her to fulfil her ambitions as a writer or carrying out domestic duty to her father and her motherless siblings. After its Richard and Judy selection, A Gathering Light won the CILIP Carnegie Medal for children's fiction, beating to the prize not only Mark Haddon but former Whitbread winner David Almond, with his novel The Fire-Eaters, set at the time of the Cuban missile crisis and about a working-class Geordie boy going to grammar school (which went on to win a Smarties Prize gold award), and Children's Laureate Michael Morpurgo, whose Private Peaceful, a First World War tearjerker, was generally agreed to be one of his finest books to date, also with crossover appeal. Private Peaceful made the headlines because it concerned a soldier shot for cowardice: the 300 British soldiers to whom this happened have never been pardoned, despite flawed prosecutions and the evidence that what was then called cowardice was often shellshock. Morpurgo called, unsuccessfully, on the government to follow the example of other nations and issue posthumous pardons.

CELEBRITY KIDS' BOOKS

Just as a few years ago celebrities (Ivana Trump, Naomi Campbell) put their names to novels, and comedians (Ben Elton, Stephen Fry, Hugh Laurie, Adrian Edmondson, David Baddiel) wrote their own, so the fashionable genre of choice for celebs and comics alike became the children's book. After Madonna, whose first two of a series of six picture books were published in 2003, with the third, Jakov and the Seven Thieves out in 2004, Ricky

Gervais, star of the documentary-style sitcom The Office, was signed up by Faber to produce Flanimals, described as 'part Pokemon, part Dr Seuss, with a bit of Hilaire Belloc thrown in' for publication in autumn 2004. Paul McCartney also 'developed an idea' for Faber, High in the Clouds, in collaboration with author Philip Ardagh and illustrator Geoff Dunbar. Meanwhile, American thriller writer Elmore Leonard wrote his first children's book, A Coyote's In the House; Margaret Atwood and John Irving were signed up by Bloomsbury to write children's books for autumn 2004; journalist Julie Burchill wrote a novel for young adults with a lesbian theme, Sugar Rush; and former SAS serviceman Andy McNab followed his rival thriller writer Chris Ryan, author of the Alpha Force series for young readers, to sign up action adventure books for children, of which the first, Young Blood, is due to be published by Doubleday in spring 2005. Thriller writer Philip Kerr jumped on the J. K. Rowling bandwagon as P. B. Kerr, with a fantasy series called The Children of the Lamp, which sold film rights for seven figures to DreamWorks before publishers saw any written material and commanded a seven-figure advance for US and UK rights from Scholastic. The first volume, published in autumn 2004, was The Akhenaten Adventure.

Lynne Truss, novelist and journalist, produced an impassioned and entertaining volume about punctuation, Eats, Shoots and Leaves, which became an enormous and unexpected bestseller for independent publisher Profile Books, which began by printing 15,000 copies but had 100,000 copies in print within a fortnight, and went on to sell some three quarters of a million copies. The book was awarded the accolade Book of the Year at the British Book Awards in April 2004 and Truss's signings attracted round-the-block queues.

Penguin printed 300,000 copies of A Royal Duty, by Princess Diana's butler Paul Burrell. A court case accusing him of stealing some of Diana's possessions was called off at the last minute when the Queen recalled a conversation in which she was informed that Burrell had taken them for safekeeping. The book sold more than 77,000 in the first week, beaten only by Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix and David Beckham's My Side. Penguin is thought to have paid £1.3m for world rights in A Royal Duty, but the association with the book lost Penguin William Shawcross's authorised biography of the Queen Mother. Shawcross had signed a deal, reportedly for £1m, with Penguin, but took his project to Macmillan out of distaste for Burrell's book.

Penguin UK also signed up a book about the connections between the US Presidency and the Saudi Royal Family, House of Bush, House of Saud, by Craig Unger, but after legal advice decided not to publish. It was taken up by small publisher Gibson Square Books, but subsequently online bookseller Amazon took a decision not to stock it. The book went so far as to suggest that Americans turned a blind eye to Saudi complicity in the events of 9/11.

Transworld published Forbidden Love, the 'true' account of the honour killing of a Jordanian woman because of her relationship with a Catholic, written by her friend Norma Khouri. It was a bestseller and sold some 250,000 copies in the USA, before it came to light that not all the author's claims were true. Opinion was divided over whether the whole book was a dangerous fabrication suggesting that a sophisticated Islamic culture was barbaric; or whether it was merely an embellished account that usefully drew attention to an actual practice with victims around the world.

A non-fiction high seller of the year was A Short History of Nearly Everything by Bill Bryson (Black Swan), which won the Aventis Prize for Science Books and was shortlisted for the BBC Four Samuel Johnson Prize (it lost out to Anna Funder's Stasiland: Stories from Behind the Berlin Wall, Granta Books).

One of the fiction sensations of the year was Dan Brown's The Da Vinci Code (Corgi), a thriller concerned with a conspiracy in the Catholic church. Scottish author Alexander McCall Smith also struck a winning formula with his series of novels about a woman detective in Africa, Precious Ramotswe of the No. 1 Ladies' Detective Agency whose success earned McCall Smith the accolade Author of the year at the British Book Awards ('the Nibbies'). He was the third bestselling paperback author in British bookshops in 2003, behind only the international blockbusters John Grisham and James Patterson. In autumn 2004 he introduced a new heroine, Isabel Dalhousie, an Edinburgh philosopher and, like Precious Ramotswe, a crime fighter, in The Sunday Philosophy Club (Little, Brown). Robert Harris' bestselling novel Pompeii (Hutchinson) sold 18,000 copies in hardback in the first fortnight. Helen Fielding produced her first novel since Bridget Jones; the first print run of Olivia Joules and the Overactive Imagination (Picador) was 200,000 copies. 'Lad lit' author Tony Parsons aimed to show his sensitive side with his book The Family Way (HarperCollins), narrated by a woman. Meanwhile Jeffrey Archer's new paperback, Sons of Fortune (Pan), rose rapidly up the charts, despite declining sales of his books over the past few years.

Other high-selling commercial fiction included novels from Bernard Cornwell (Heretic, HarperCollins), Patricia Cornwell (Blow Fly/Trace, Little, Brown), James Patterson (The Big Bad Wolf, Headline), Terry Pratchett (Monstrous Regiment/The Wee Free Men/A Hat Full of Sky, Doubleday), Ian Rankin (A Question of Blood, Orion), Andy McNab (Dark Winter, Bantam Press), Marian Keyes (The Other Side of the Story, Michael Joseph), John Grisham (The King of Torts, Arrow/The Last Juror, Century), Frederick Forsyth (Avenger St Martin's Press), Jackie Collins (Hollywood Divorces, Pocket Books), Tom Clancy (Teeth of the Tiger, Penguin), James Herbert (Nobody True, Pan), Martina Cole (The Know, Headline), Ruth Rendell (The Rottweiler, Arrow), Stephen King (The Dark Tower: Wolves of the Calla/Song of Susannah, Hodder), and Michael Connolly (Lost Light/The Narrows, Orion).

Patricia Cornwell and Alexander McCall Smith were among the authors billed to feature in the trial run of a new code of practice for publication dates introduced by the book industry in September 2004, when a selection of lead titles were to hit bookshops on Mondays - and not before or after - thereby enjoying six days in the shops before the bestseller lists are compiled.

The fifth volume of J. K. Rowling's series, Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix (Bloomsbury), was published in paperback on 10 July 2004. By then, hardback sales had reached a total of 3.4 million copies, and the New England Journal of Medicine had identified 'Hogwarts Headache', a syndrome by which children experienced sore heads and necks as a result of reading the 766 pages too intensively. German children were even more at risk: their translation ran to more than 1,000 pages! After all this, the paperback sold like any other successful title. On its first day in the shops 37,000 copies were bought in adults' and children's editions, just failing to overtake the weekly sales of the two paperback editions, from Vintage and Red Fox, of Mark Haddon's The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-time.

MUSIC

CLASSICAL MUSIC

The £90 million refurbishment of the Royal Festival Hall (RFH) and its surroundings began in April 2004 with £71 million for the refurbishment of the RFH and £19 million for the renovation of the riverfront at ground level, as well as a new RFH extension building which will house cultural, staff and technical facilities. The extension building alongside Hungerford Bridge and the new river frontage of the RFH will be completed before the major refurbishment of the foyers and auditorium begins in July 2005. The hall will reopen to the public in late 2006 with the official opening of the auditorium in January 2007. The South Bank Centre aims to 'create a world-class venue for London, for artists and audiences for the 21st century'.

The year 2004 saw the inauguration of the South Bank Centre's major classical music festival, Omaggio: A Celebration of Luciano Berio. Devised in close consultation with Berio before his death in May 2003, the South Bank Centre, Royal Academy of Music and London Sinfonietta all collaborated on this festival which also featured the BBC Symphony Orchestra (BBCSO), the Philharmonia Orchestra and the Arditti Quartet. Homage was paid to Berio by presenting his music in the contexts he wanted, performed by the artists he chose. Highlights included all of Berio's music for string quartet (performed by the Arditti Quartet), plus the UK premiere of the Sequenza for solo cello, one of Berio's last works, written for Rohan de Saram, the cellist of the Quartet. Artists chosen by Berio and Royal Academy musicians performed all of his Sequenzas throughout the festival, and the UK premiere of Berio's last complete work, Stanze, for baritone and orchestra. The London Sinfonietta juxtaposed Naturale and Folk Songs with folk music from Sardinia, Armenia and the inimitable Kamkars from Kurdistan. There was also a 'Berio lounge' on the Ballroom floor, a major installation enabling people to experience and interact with Berio's music and work inspired by his legacy. The last filmed interview that Berio gave before his death, filmed by the South Bank Centre's education team, was also played.

In June 2004, in the presence of the Queen, Prince Philip and half the good burghers of the city, the London Symphony Orchestra presented the mother of all galas to celebrate its 100th birthday with a host of stars who have long associations with the Orchestra. A three-hour concert, broadcast live on BBC Radio and Television, featured 14 different items, exposing not only the history of the LSO but a list of past and present friends. Sir Colin Davis, the LSO's current music director, opened the concert with the last movement of Beethoven's Fifth, followed by Rostropovich conducting the 1st movement of Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante with Midori (violin) and Yuri Bashmet (viola). Michael Tilson Thomas continued with Sarasate's Carmen Fantasy and Ravel's La Valse, a show-stopper that demonstrated so palpably how the LSO loves the music it plays. Colin Matthew's Fanfare: Bravo LSO! opened the second half, conducted by Antonio Pappano, who then steered a breathtaking performance of Bernstein's 'Candide' Overture. Sir Colin was back with Mozart's rapturous Ch'io mi scordi di te, the voice of Susan Graham partnered by Alfred Brendel. In a switch of style Dave Brubeck performed a work by his brother Howard, conducted by Russell Gloyd. Film music has long provided a financial lifeline for the orchestra, and in Bliss's Things to Come and John T. Williams's Star Wars (conducted, respectively, by Richard Hickox and Daniel Harding), one could only marvel at the strength and energy of the playing. Quieter moments intervened, with John Williams caressing Rodrigo's Concierto de Aranjuez slow movement, and Hickox conducting a taste of Elgar's Enigma Variations. Britten's fugue from The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra was a fitting finale.

The London Sinfonietta's continued their dynamic programming, bold thinking, and unparalleled commitment to uniting new music and new audiences in their 2003–4 season, which combined a world-class concert series at the Queen Elizabeth Hall with an exciting range of performances in festivals nationwide and abroad. Throughout the season the ensemble performed premieres of Elliot Carter's Dialogues (specially commissioned by BBC Radio 3, written for pianist Nicolas Hodges and the London Sinfonietta), Harrison Birtwistle's major new work, Theseus Game (co-commissioned by the London Sinfonietta, SBC and Ensemble Modern), and Brian Ferneyhough's eagerly awaited new work, Seven 'Tableaux Vivants'. Oliver Knussen also conducted new works by Mauricio Kagel and Silvina Milstein. In a day of performances and workshops led by the London Sinfonietta, Arditti Quartet and the Society for the Promotion of New Music (spnm), at the Queen Elizabeth Hall and other RFH spaces, the ensemble performed premieres from young composers, including a new work by Royal Philharmonic Society Composition Prizewinner, Brian Herrington, and the first results of the London Sinfonietta's Blue Touch Paper Project. As part of the Ether Festival at the RFH in March 2004, the ensemble joined forces with sound experimenters from the Warp record label, continuing their highly successful collaboration and exploring modern classics from the 20th-century avant-garde. The world premiere of an ambitious project by Jonathan Harvey was featured, a work which uses live electronic transformations on a scale never attempted before, with individual sonic manipulation for each musician in the ensemble, and sound design by Sound Intermedia.

In January 2004, the London Sinfonietta took part in the BBC Symphony Orchestra's 'John Cage Uncaged' weekend with pianist Joanna MacGregor, revisiting the radical compositional developments from 1950s New York: a packed weekend of concerts, talks, films and 'happenings' to celebrate the life, influences and legacy of this maverick musician, writer, artist, mushroom expert and cultural icon who died in 1992. The BBCSO gave the first orchestral performance in the UK of John Cage's seminal silent work 4'33" in the opening concert which was broadcast live on BBC Radio 3 – the first broadcaster to risk airing nearly five minutes of ambient silence. BBC Radio 3's emergency backup systems, designed to cut in when there is apparent silence on air, were switched off.

The concert also featured work by musical pioneer Earle Brown, and other sonic collisions included Led Zeppelin's John Paul Jones playing a flashing bass guitar, members of the BBC Symphony Chorus having a dinner party on the foyer, amplified cacti (kindly lent to the BBC by Kew Gardens), one man playing five tubas connected by 16 feet of tubing and singers disguised as Barbican staff who sang information to the audience. Among the other highlights were an 18-hour performance of Erik Satie's marathon piano work Vexations given by more than 50 pianists from top classical performers and composers to jazz stars Django Bates and Julian Joseph. There was also a performance of material from Cage's Songbooks which involved sopranos Frances M. Lynch and Nicole Tibbels, along with pianist Rolf Hind, drinking gin, eating crisps, playing cards and having a party, as well as singing.

The Barbican's 80th-birthday tribute to Ligeti in October 2004, provided an orchestral showcase of Ligeti's four concertos, spanning 50 years of his creative career, with the London Sinfonietta conducted by George Benjamin, and a performance of his only full-length opera, Le Grand Macabre, with the BBC Symphony Orchestra under Alexander Rumpf. Le Grand Macabre, an opera about death and an end to the world that turns out to be not quite as final as everyone expects, is nearly a repertory work now, and certainly one of Ligeti's masterpieces. Gyorgy Ligeti's folk-inspired Romanian Concerto also received its UK premiere at the Barbican. Other season highlights included a weekend of concerts to mark Bernard Haitink's 75th birthday, in which the Barbican revisited some of his fondest associations with Europe's leading orchestras, the Berliner Philharmoniker, the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, the Dresden Staatskapelle and the LSO. The programme included some of his favourite orchestral repertoire, much of which he has recorded to great acclaim.

OUTSIDE LONDON

The Birmingham Contemporary Music Group (BCMG) 2003–4 season began with the return of charismatic Scottish composer James MacMillan conducting BCMG in a concert of his own work and that of the visionary and reclusive Russian Galina Ustvolskaya. BCMG's Sound Investment scheme, through which BCMG's audiences have contributed nearly £100,000 towards new works, brought its 2003–4 series to a tumultuous close in May with the unveiling of two new commissions – the UK premiere of Mark-Anthony Turnage's The Torn Fields with renowned Canadian baritone Gerald Finley, and the World Premiere of a large-scale work by Philip Cashian. The concert, which was in association with BBC Radio 3, also featured Franco Donatoni's composition Hot with the celebrated jazz saxophonist John Harle as soloist. The big theatrical event of the season was Simon Holt's gripping chamber opera Who put Bella in the Wych elm? in which BCMG joined forces with Almeida Opera to revisit a Black Country mystery that has remained unanswered for over half a century: The tale of a woman's body found stuffed inside a tree in Hagley Woods. The opera, in a double-bill with Salvatore Sciarrino's Infinito Nero, also toured nationally.

Sonorities Festival of Contemporary Music in Belfast featured a visit by Karlheinz Stockhausen. The first weekend of the festival included three concerts of his electronic works traversing a creative span of nearly fifty years, from the pioneering Electronic Studies I & II of 1953–4 right up to the world premiere of the large-scale multichannel piece Mittwochs-Gruss written in the late 1990s. The second weekend focused on a celebration of Sonic Arts Network's (the UK's main organisation for promoting work at the cutting edge of music and technology) 25th anniversary, with a major concert featuring the work of leading UK composers over that period. The weekend also included a Cut & Splice event (co-promoted by SARC, the BBC and Sonic Arts Network) with international performance artists exploring the concept of 'grains and clouds' inspired by Xenakis. Other premieres included Sonorities commissions by Cort Lippe, Natasha Barrett, Ludger Brümmer and Denis Smalley.

The City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra's (CBSO) 2003–4 season featured a rich mixture of music from Beethoven to Bollywood. In Sakari Oramo's sixth season as Music Director of the CBSO, he was joined by over 70 visiting artists and conductors. The major theme running through this season was the influence of South Asian (particularly Indian) music and cultures on Western classical music. In January the CBSO performed Messiaen's 'Turangalila' Symphony, alongside premieres of two scores by the British composer, John Foulds, whose dream was to fuse the music of Europe and India, plus performances of his rarely performed Three Mantras, and Holst's short opera Savitri. Also featured were the Bollywood soundtracks of A. R. Rahman, the world famous conductor and composer, perhaps best known to British audiences through his hit West End musical Bombay Dreams. In addition, the CBSO continued to attract new audiences with a night of classic silent movies in the Symphony Hall with a huge screen suspended over the stage.

The Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra certainly had another successful year of Brahms, Beethoven and Shostakovich. The orchestra gave some passionate yet disciplined performances with a full-bodied sonority under the skilful direction of Kurt Masur.

FESTIVALS

With 14 world premieres, 34 UK premieres and three new commissions, the Huddersfield Contemporary Music Festival (HCMF) 2003 was again a remarkable success. Along with a number of overseas performers who made their UK debuts, HCMF welcomed visits by Sir Harrison Birtwistle, Simon Holt, Brian Ferneyhough, Judith Weir, Michael Finnissy and Gavin Bryars. Representing the younger generation of British composers and performers were Jonathan Powell, Bernard Hughes, Luke Stoneham, Hilary Robinson and Bryn Harrison. As ever, the festival balanced its international perspective by giving opportunities to the best and most creative British and international artists. Many of these composers were from the younger generation, and their fresh outlook on composition was inspiring. The festival presented a 60th birthday tribute to the California-based British composer Brian Ferneyhough, by making an important body of work by the leading figure of 'new complexity' available to British audiences, performed by some of the artists most closely associated with him, most notably the Arditti Quartet. Two concerts in the festival commemorated the life and works of Luciano Berio, who died on 27 May 2004. The Italian Ex Novo Ensemble performed Sequenzas I and IV in a programme of contemporary Italian music that also included works by Donatoni and rising star Emanuele Casale. The Neue Vocalsolisten Stuttgart, Europe's leading contemporary vocal ensemble, made a welcome return with a programme that included Berio's classic A-Ronne. A focus on new music for voices brought the UK debut of the 40-strong Tapiola Chamber Choir from Finland, with a programme of beautifully atmospheric Finnish and Estonian choral music, including UK premieres by Kaija Saariaho and Einojuhani Rautavaara. The young and dynamic EXAUDI Vocal Ensemble appeared followed by York-based ensemble Red Byrd who performed the world premiere of the HCMF-commissioned madrigals by Gavin Bryars, and the BBC Singers performed the UK premiere of James Dillon's ...residue, a rare interpretation of Mauricio Kagel's Rrrrrr..., and the world premiere of a new commission by young composer Bernard Hughes.

The Edinburgh International Festival 2004 under the direction of Brian McMaster attracted audiences from far and wide with another popular programme of opera, music, theatre and dance. The music programme offered variety and diversity from Hanover Opera to a one-woman show from Beirut and from an in-depth look at the great choreographer Antony Tudor to Akram Khan's latest dance work. Music featured large-scale classical and choral concerts, intimate chamber music, traditional Gaelic song and contemporary music from around the world. Opening with Honegger's moving oratorio Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher, and closing with the Bank of Scotland Fireworks Concert in September, in between there were visits from Ensemble Intercontemporain, The Cleveland Orchestra, Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, London Philharmonic Orchestra and Dresden Staatskapelle, and some of the world's major singers, pianists and instrumentalists, including Richard Goode, Violeta Urmana, Elisabeth Leonskaja, Robert Holl, Leonidas Kavakos and Steven Osborne.

The 2004 series of Promenade Concerts in London, under the directorship of Nicholas Kenyon, remained one of the largest music festivals anywhere, with over 70 concerts. As well as being broadcast live on BBC Radio 3 every evening, each concert was audio-streamed onto the internet. In addition a selection of concerts were shown on BBC Television, on the BBC's digital TV channel BBC4, and video-streamed onto an interactive website. As always the Proms attracted some of the biggest names in the classical music world. This series saw appearances from bass-baritone Willard W. White, violinists Sarah Chang, Joshua Bell and Maxim Vengerov, pianist Alfred Brendel, percussionist Evelyn Glennie and conductors Sir Simon Rattle and Bernard Haitink. There was also a number of world premieres performed, including a new symphony by John Casken, Judith Bingham's The Secret Garden, and League of Gentlemen composer Joby Talbot's Sneaker Wave, all commissioned by the BBC. Each year the BBC Proms explores a different theme, as a way of bringing together music that spans many centuries and different styles. This year's main themes were 'Back to Bohemia', 'East meets West' and 'England in 1934'. The year 2004 marks the centenary of the death of the great Czech composer Dvorak, and the Proms offered a feast of music by Czech composers, including works by Martinu, Novak, Janacek, Biber, Zelenka, Vejvanovsky, Myslivecek, Eben and Smetana. A performance of Dvorak's lesser-known opera Dimirij celebrated his centenary in style, as well as the popular Cello Concerto with Truls Mork and the BBC National Orchestra of Wales, and also four of his nine symphonies.

The year 1934 is a crucial date in the history of English music, the year in which three of the great patriarchs of the English musical renaissance, Elgar, Holst and Delius, died, and two of our most important and internationally celebrated living composers, Harrison Birtwistle and Peter Maxwell Davies, were born. 1934 also saw the sensationally successful premiere of the (still incomplete) First Symphony by the 32-year-old William Walton, and the completion of another symphony that was to be just as enthusiastically received when it was heard the following year, Vaughan Williams's Fourth – its violent modernism marking an invigorating new development for a composer already in his sixties. The Proms' East/West theme brought the charismatic cellist Yo-Yo Ma and his Silk Road Ensemble to the Proms for the first time, as well as new music by Chinese-American composers Tan Dun, Zhou Long and Bright Sheng. Many of the finest works of Western music by composers such as Britten, Debussy, Mahler, Messiaen and Ravel were also heard. Yo-Yo Ma and his Silk Road Ensemble explored yet more musical links between the Orient and the Occident. In a colourful and evocative programme including music and artists from China, India, Persia, Armenia and Kyrgyzstan, the extraordinary Indian tabla player Sandeep Das and Iranian spike-fiddle master Kayhan Kalhor feature in their own compositions, and Chinese pipa virtuoso Wu Man performed arrangements of Armenian folk songs and music of the Roma. The ensemble also performed a new quadruple concerto specially written for them by Chinese-American composer Bright Sheng. An expanded London Sinfonietta continued the survey of Messiaen's most monumental scores with his erotically-charged, Eastern-influenced 'Turangalia' Symphony.

AWARDS AND COMPETITIONS

Presented at the Dorchester Hotel on Wednesday 5 May 2004 by the celebrated bass John Tomlinson and hosted by BBC Radio 3's Stephanie Hughes, the Royal Philharmonic Society Awards honoured achievement and excellence during 2003. Winners included the Belcea Quartet in the Chamber Ensemble category for 'giving great performances of standard repertoire as well as showing a passionate commitment to contemporary music and to their creative educational programmes'. The award for Chamber scale composition went to Helmut Lachenmann for Grido – 'a radical and masterful contribution to the string quartet repertoire. The piece conjures a rich, poetic and sensual soundworld, and reveals the range and depth of Lachenmann's unique and uncompromising compositional language.' Also commended in this category were George Benjamin's Shadowlines and Jonathan Harvey's String Quartet no. 4. The Concert Series and Festivals award went to 'LSO: By George!' an extensive series where the LSO 'gave George Benjamin the rare opportunity to present his own works, juxtaposed with a range of composers whose music he most admires. These concerts were complemented by a wide variety of ancillary events, which drew large and enthusiastic audiences'. The Award for best Conductor went to Mariss Jansons for his final UK concerts with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra at the Barbican and the BBC Proms. The jury commended him for the 'revealing performances, innately truthful to the score yet continually animated with fresh insights and ideas, superlatively played by an orchestra totally at one with its conductor.'

Welsh National Opera's 'Max's Katerina Project' won the Education Award for its work in 'involving 500 children in Merthyr Tydfil, together with composer Ruth Brychmore and librettist Alan Osborne, who developed and performed their own opera, inspired by the story of Katya Kabanova. Since then the project has forged partnerships with Denbighshire and Gwynedd County Councils, involved children and teachers from six primary schools, and demonstrated a true connection between the work of Welsh National Opera and the children's learning and performance.' Other winners included the West-Eastern Divan Orchestra and Daniel Barenboim for the Large Ensemble award, given 'to a unique orchestra for a single concert in the UK, whose influence far outweighs its singularity. The West-Eastern Divan Orchestra was courageously founded by conductor Daniel Barenboim and the late Edward Said, and formed from both Israeli and Palestinian musicians, who sit and play side by side. Their appearance at the Proms in 2003 acted as a powerful reminder that idealism and optimism are still very much alive, even in our jaded, violent and crisis-ridden times. Music making like this can and does change lives.'

The jury unanimously gave the Large-Scale Composition award to Harrison Birtwistle for his The Shadow of Night, inspired by a Dürer engraving, a Dowland lute-song and a poem by the Elizabethan George Chapman. The jury were drawn to 'this poised and eloquent work' which 'draws the listener into a world of extraordinary sonorities, haunting melody and interlocking mechanisms.' Mitsuko Uchida won the award for best instrumentalist, 'for the profound musicality and intellectual rigour which she pursues with such vigour and joy in a wide range of music-making, and in particular for her intense, questioning performances of the last Beethoven Sonatas and of Schubert's Die Schöne Mullerin with Ian Bostridge'. The Best Singer award went to Susan Chilcott 'for her searing vocal and dramatic performances, in particular in the role of Jenufa for Welsh National Opera. The Young Artist award went to the conductor, Ilan Volkov. 'The BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra took a brave and far-sighted decision in appointing such a young chief conductor. This was his first season: he has vision and a huge desire to communicate, and is making bold and imaginative programmes: a truly exciting newcomer.'

The Audience Development Award went to Operatunity (English National Opera and Diverse Production for Channel 4) for a project which has 'caught the public imagination and gripped a mass audience. It demystifies the art form, captures the thrill of performance and gives a rare insight into the challenge of live music making'. Also shortlisted for this award were the Hallé and London Sinfonietta for the 3D Music and Warpworks projects, (collaborations with Braunarts and Warp Records and South Bank Centre respectively). The BBC Radio 3 Listeners Award went to Thomas Allen for 'superb recitals and a variety of brilliant stage roles, notably in Die Fledermaus at Glyndebourne and Sweeney Todd at the Royal Opera House'.

POP MUSIC

This year, music fans of a certain vintage could be forgiven for thinking it was 1984, not 2004, as two new British rock groups whose music and appearance owe much to that period in pop captured the record-buying public's imagination, heralding a return to fashion for guitar bands. Viewed by their detractors as a kitsch novelty act, Lowestoft quartet, The Darkness, combined clichéd rock'n'roll with histrionic crowd-pleasing performances, exemplified by singer and unlikely sex symbol Justin Hawkins' penchant for capes, catsuits and falsetto singing. Evoking the flamboyant stadium rock of Kiss, Marillion and Queen, The Darkness' debut album, Permission To Land, topped the charts, selling over 1.2 million copies in the UK. Their tongue-in-cheek festive single, Christmas Time (Don't Let The Bells End), was kept from the number one spot by the year's best-selling British single, a version of Tears For Fears' Mad World performed by Michael Andrews and Gary Jules, belatedly lifted from the Donnie Darko film soundtrack. In February 2004, The Darkness won three BRIT Awards for Best British Group, Best Rock Act and Best Album, later winning a prestigious Ivor Novello Award for Songwriters Of The Year – which amused critics who had lampooned the band for their derivative music and insincere manner.

In contrast, critics adored Franz Ferdinand, a sharp-suited, charismatic four-piece from Glasgow whose infectious blend of upbeat angular rock and sexually ambiguous lyrics are reminiscent of The Smiths and cult Leeds band Gang Of Four. Even Morrissey, avuncular former The Smiths' singer who staged a comeback this year with his well-received album, You Are The Quarry, deigned to patronise his debonair disciples by offering them a support slot at one of his concerts in Manchester, presumably so he could bask in the reflected glory. Though pretentious and erudite, Franz Ferdinand rapidly became a mainstream concern when their second single Take Me Out and eponymous debut album both entered the top three in January, providing the decade-old independent record label Domino with its first million-selling release. Not since Oasis' unrivalled dominance of the mid-1990s during Britpop's heyday has a homegrown band so comprehensively captivated a nation.

Elsewhere, it proved another good year for Dido, the unassuming English MOR chanteuse. Her inescapable second album, Life For Rent, while seemingly indistinguishable from her last, No Angel, was the biggest-selling British long-player of 2003, shifting 2.2 million copies in its first three months. Encouraged by the success of contemporary easy listening artists such as Dido and dulcet American jazz vocalist Norah Jones, major record companies this year unveiled a new batch of talented telegenic young British performers aimed squarely at the solvent BBC Radio 2-listening demographic. Katie Melua's Call Off The Search, Jamie Callum's Twentysomething, Amy Winehouse's Frank, and The Soul Sessions by teenager Joss Stone were heavily marketed and sold respectably, leading to more lucrative acclaim across the Atlantic. Their generic music, which ranged from insipid ballads to polite dinner jazz, ersatz soul and Sinatra-style crooning, was the antithesis of modern pop, yet the rewards reaped assuaged a troubled industry ever wary of taking risks.

The two main reality TV pop series, ITV's Pop Idol and the BBC's Fame Academy, annual competitions that ruthlessly demystify the star-making process, both showed signs of fatigue this year as fickle audiences ultimately displayed indifference to the eventual winners. The controversial victor of Pop Idol's second series, larger-than-life Scot Michelle McManus, scored an inevitable number one with her debut single, All This Time, in early January, but was forgotten by March when her album, The Meaning Of Love, limped into the shops. Alex Parks, the 19-year-old Cornish singer who triumphed on Fame Academy 2, reached number three with Maybe That's What It Takes immediately after her win in November, and her album of covers and original songs, Introduction, also sold well. Her profile in 2004 was negligible, however.

An 18-year-old from a deprived east London council estate won this year's Mercury Music Prize, now an established ceremony in its 12th year rewarding excellence in British music. Boy In Da Corner by newcomer Dizze Rascal, the musical alias of Dylan Mills, was an innovative and vibrant example of UK garage or two-step, an aggressive style of dance music derived from US hip-hop and Jamaican dancehall, emanating almost exclusively from London. The record sold 250,000 copies in the UK, catapulting this daring electronic music into the mainstream and thrusting Mills reluctantly into the limelight. Similar musically to Dizze Rascal, Londoner Mike Skinner's celebrated project, The Streets, returned this year with his widely acclaimed second album, A Grand Don't Come For Free, a concept record in which Skinner's search for mislaid cash provides an illuminating, meandering narrative. For one week in July, this quintessentially English act topped the UK albums chart (it sold 700,000 copies in four months) and the singles chart, with Dry Your Eyes.

THE US INFLUENCE

For the first time, US acts outperformed British artists in the UK album charts, according to figures for 2003 from the British Phonographic Industry (BPI). American artists sold 45.4 per cent of albums compared with the UK's 42.3 per cent. In 1997, the US share was only 28.4 per cent against the UK's 58.3 per cent. The rise could be attributed to the increasing prevalence of US hip-hop, R&B and pop acts on radio playlists, as well as on terrestrial TV programmes such as Top Of The Pops and myriad dedicated satellite music channels like MTV, MTV2, VIVA, VH1 and The Box. Although the British Academy of Songwriters lamented these statistics, voicing concern that not enough British music was being promoted in Britain, this trend is set to continue in tandem with the steady Americanisation of British cultural values and attitudes.

Glamorous American artists enjoying aspirational lifestyles were responsible for many of the year's defining pop moments. 'Urban' music, the media's questionable catch-all term for modern black music, encompassing hip-hop, soul and their fertile hybrid R&B, had an excellent 12 months. With 610,000 copies sold, Where Is The Love? by hip-hop collective Black Eyed Peas was 2003's biggest-selling single, while 21-year-old Beyoncé Knowles' ubiquitous Crazy In Love smash resulted in the former Destiny's Child singer winning a BRIT for Best International Female. Hard-boiled New York rapper 50 Cent, who has been shot nine times in his eventful life, took home a BRIT for International Breakthrough Artist. The protégé of Eminem and influential producer Dr Dre, 50 Cent's multi-million-selling Get Rich Or Die Tryin' album spawned the Top Ten singles In Da Club and P.I.M.P. His 'thugged-out' lifestyle, sluggish demeanour and routine endorsement of streetwear products, now standard in hip-hop, appealed to impressionable rap fans world-wide.

Fanciful Atlanta duo Outkast cemented their reputation as masters of the hip-hop/pop crossover with the addictive Hey Ya! single, taken from their double-album Speakerboxx/The Love Below (unusually, both members contributed one solo disc each) which sold nine million copies, 730,000 of those in the UK. One of the year's most downloaded tracks, Hey Ya!, included the line, 'Shake it like a Polaroid!', prompting a sudden upturn in sales of the camera, though the manufacturer insisted that shaking the photograph was not technically necessary. In a bizarre move, US hip-hop icon Jay-Z announced his retirement from the rap world following the November release of his supposedly final LP, The Black Album. Six months later he was coaxed out of retirement and appeared on stage at London's Earls Court, headlining the Prince's Trust Urban Music Foundation event before an audience that included Princes Charles, William and Harry. Meanwhile, underground New York hip-hop producer Dangermouse made headlines when he mixed elements of The Black Album with parts of The Beatles' classic White Album, creating a bootleg LP entitled The Grey Album, much to the chagrin of EMI, owners of the White Album's copyright. While only 3,000 promotional vinyl copies were pressed, the album's availability online meant hundreds of thousands of curious fans were able to download it for free.

Other US hip-hop artists whose success at home translated into significant sales in the UK included Kanye West, a New York producer-turned-rapper whose likeable College Dropout debut addressed more thoughtful issues normally neglected in gangster rap's traditional mantra of girls, guns and drugs; and Pharrell Williams, the 31-year-old Virginia Beach, Virginia native, whose influence on pop music this century has been remarkable. Williams is the more media-friendly half of prolific production duo The Neptunes, which he formed with childhood friend Chad Hugo, who prefers to shun the spotlight. The pair produced cutting-edge yet accessible hit songs this year for stars such as Justin Timberlake, Kelis, Jay-Z, Britney Spears and Ludacris. They also released a successful multi-artist collaborative album, The Neptunes Present... Clones, and, with N*E*R*D, their rock-based studio project, sold 250,000 copies of their second album, Fly Or Die, in the UK alone. At one point during the summer of 2003, it was estimated that 20 per cent of all pop records played on British radio were produced by Williams and Hugo. Furthermore, Williams penned fast-food giant McDonalds' 'I'm lovin' it' global advertising jingle, sung by BRIT winner Justin Timberlake, whose Justified album was the second biggest selling LP of 2003. US rock acts, spearheaded by Detroit neo-blues duo The White Stripes and rejuvenated LA funk-pop veterans Red Hot Chili Peppers, found considerable success in Britain. The former's Elephant album sold 750,000 copies, the latter rounded off a fine year with two capacity summer shows in London's Hyde Park.

THE DIGITAL REVOLUTION

The arrival this year of legal digital download music services such as Apple's iTunes Music Store (ITMS) and Napster has revolutionised the way the global music industry sells, distributes and markets its products. These online shops, which in Apple's case offers 700,000 tracks available to download at 79p each (or £7.99 for LPs) using its iTunes software on to its popular portable iPod listening device, aimed to combat the dramatic increase in illegal downloading and physical piracy. In addition, they provided record companies with a new means of re-selling their valuable back catalogues. BPI figures stated that UK music piracy grew by 13 per cent in 2003, six times the growth in legal CD sales, and that illegal music sales in the UK reached £56.1 million, equivalent to 4.2 per cent of the legal market. Most culpable were the millions of internet users who freely swap MP3s of tracks via peer-to-peer file-sharing networks without the record labels' consent.

Launched in Europe in June 2004, Apple's ITMS was an instant success, selling 450,000 tracks in the UK in its first seven days, and more than 800,000 in Europe on what it calls 'the biggest jukebox in the world'. Prior to ITMS, the number of legal downloads sold in the first five months of 2004 was 500,000, according to figures from the Official UK Chart Company. Apple was the market leader primarily because its iPod, which is only compatible with iTunes, has sold over 3 million in the UK and has been hailed as the Walkman for the 21st century. Other electronics companies such as Sony are developing similar MP3-storage and listening devices. Apple's share is expected to decline as increased competition from sites operated by Coca-Cola, Napster and Microsoft muscle in on this lucrative market.

Major record companies were initially slow to embrace this new technology. While digital singles releases are now common, they are not yet standard. EastWest Records released the UK's best-selling legitimate download-only single of 2003 with Stockholm Syndrome by the rock band Muse, which sold 8,000 copies. However, the sheer volume of legal download sales this year lead to an official weekly Download Chart being set up in June by the Official UK Chart Company. Radio 1 began broadcasting this in September 2004. The first chart in June included Top Ten entrants by Outkast and Dido with tracks that were released up to nine months earlier.

A fortnightly chart compiling the 20 most popular downloaded musical mobile phone ringtones was also established this year. Compiled by accountancy firm KPMG using information supplied by mobile phone companies, the chart reflected the increasing popularity of downloadable ringtones, an estimated £70 million of which were sold in the UK in 2003, up from £40 million in 2002, according to the Mobile Data Association (MDA). According to the MDA, sales of ringtones were expected to rise by 60 per cent in 2004. Advances in mobile phone technology meant that samples of actual music, such as best-selling singles, rather than polyphonic synthesised sounds could be used as ringtones. Sites sell ringtones of pop hits for between £1.50 and £3.50. However, the BPI pointed out, record companies do not make money from ringtones as royalties are paid directly to music publishers. 'Record companies invest an enormous amount of money in creating recorded content. It's only fair that they have a right to decide how and where that content is used,' said a BPI spokesman.

OPERA

Co-productions are an economic fact of life in the opera world today. Of the nine so-called new productions presented by the Royal Opera this season, five had already been performed in other theatres, but the three finest, most interesting and original productions of the year originated in the Royal Opera, though two of them had, of necessity, co-producers. Possibly the best, and certainly the most overwhelming, was Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk, the original version of Shostakovich's opera, receiving its first production at Covent Garden, directed by Richard Jones. Conducted by the music director, Antonio Pappano, with Swedish soprano Katarina Dalayman in the title role, and bass John Tomlinson as Boris Ismailov, this was a magnificent experience, and notably, £75 was the top ticket price, with many tickets selling for £50 or less.

For the world premiere of The Tempest (with libretto based on Shakespeare's play) by Meredith Oakes and music by Thomas Adès, tickets were all £50 or less and six performances sold out. Adès, in his early thirties, conducted his brilliant score with great aplomb. Directed by Tom Cairns, the production vividly brought to life the 'enchanted isle' and its inhabitants. The performance was rightly dominated by baritone Simon Keenlyside's Prospero, while tenor Ian Bostridge as Caliban and high soprano Cyndia Sieden as Ariel both impressed with their amazing virtuosity at the top of their vocal ranges. Another treat of a somewhat different, and very much more expensive kind, was offered by David McVicar's new production of Gounod's Faust, conducted by Pappano and starring Roberto Alagno as Faust, Angela Gheorghiu as Marguerite and Bryn Terfel as Mephistophélès. By setting Goethe's legend in Paris at the time of the Franco-Prussian War and emphasising the theatrical nature of the plot, McVicar proved that there was still plenty of life in the much-loved work. It was televised and shown on the big screen in Covent Garden Piazza and at several other locations.

The season ended with the last revival of the 1964 production of Tosca originally directed by Franco Zeffirelli, with Maria Callas in the title role and Tito Gobbi as Scarpia. Staged by John Cox, with two casts that gave seven performances in eight days, the production gave pleasure that was not merely nostalgic. Tosca was also broadcast on the big screen in the Piazza and at Canary Wharf, Sherwood Forest Center Parc and the Botanical Gardens, Belfast. The final performance was the 242nd of the production.

In the Linbury Studio Theatre the Royal Opera presented a new production of Britten's The Rape of Lucretia, sung by members (and one ex-member) of the Vilar Young Artists. Music Theatre Wales (MTW) gave the British premiere of Ion by Parham Vir, born in India but now resident in England. His chamber opera is based on the play by Euripides, translated by David Lan, and has a rich, finely worked score for 17 players. Staged by Michael McCarthy and designed by Simon Banham, it was conducted by Michael Rafferty, MTW's music director.

After a short autumn season at the Barbican, using both the Theatre and the Hall, English National Opera (ENO) finally returned to its home, the London Coliseum, on 21

February 2004, when a concert was given for those who had been instrumental in restoring the theatre to its original glory. Opened in 1904, the Coliseum seems set for at least another hundred years of musical life. ENO has acquired two valuable new sponsors, Sky and Arts World, for the next three years, and communications company O<sub>2</sub> to help the company reach new audiences. The first new production was The Rhinegold, the beginning of Phyllida Lloyd's staging of Wagner's Ring Cycle, designed by Richard Hudson. Dramatically, this proved something of a disappointment, with the gods emulating an ordinary suburban family. In The Valkyrie matters improved greatly and Wotan turned out to be a god after all. Musically, both operas were fine, with Andrew Shore's Alberich towering over The Rhinegold and Kathleen Broderick's magnificent Brunnhilde illuminating The Valkyrie.

Act III of The Valkyrie was performed by ENO at the Glastonbury Festival, the first operatic music ever heard there, and enjoyed a huge success. This was the first fruit of O<sub>2</sub>'s collaboration. The second should have been a complete performance of Puccini's La Bohème in Trafalgar Square, which was to be carpeted in astroturf for the occasion. Tickets were free and 6,500 had been distributed. Unfortunately, torrential rain and high winds prevented any performance in Trafalgar Square, but some ticket-holders were admitted to the Coliseum for an impromptu performance of La Bohème. Paul Daniel, the music director, conducted both these events. He also conducted the most enjoyable revival of the season, Robert Carsen's magical production of Britten's A Midsummer Night's Dream. A revival of John Adams's Nixon in China, which should have been the opening production at the Coliseum, unfortunately had to be cancelled, but was promised for future performance.

An attempt by the impresario Raymond Gubbay to inaugurate a low-price London opera company at the Savoy Theatre was unsuccessful and closed after two months because of poor ticket sales. The most expensive ticket was £49.50 but both the Royal Opera and English National Opera could offer cheaper seats. There was also the question of quality: the productions of the two operas staged, Rossini's Barber of Seville and Mozart's Marriage of Figaro, were judged as poor, although many singers received individual praise. There is no doubt that London would benefit from a company using a small theatre, perfect for the operas of Mozart and Rossini, as a training ground for young singers, but the Savoy Opera, unfortunately, did not fill the gap.

Opera North celebrated its 25th birthday with a most unusual season, Eight Little Greats, which consisted of eight short operas given in various combinations of two per performance. Opera-goers could attend only one if they preferred, at half the usual price, or they could buy four tickets for the price of three, or eight for the price of six. The eight productions, all new, had two directors, David Pountney and Christopher Alden, and one designer, Johan Engels. There was an ensemble of 21 singers. Only two of the operas were well known; Leoncavallo's Pagliacci and Puccini's Il tabarro. The others included Alexander Zemlinsky's The Dwarf (also known as The Birthday of the Infanta), Bizet's Djamileh, Rachmaninov's Francesca da Rimini, and La vida breve by Manuel de Falla. The company brought the Eight Little Greats to Sadler's Wells Theatre in London at the end of June, where they attracted large audiences. Outstanding performances were given by baritone Jonathan Summers as Tonio in Pagliacci and Michele in Il tabarro, while Pountney's production of The Dwarf, in which the protagonist was the 'normal' person and the Infanta and her friends the 'monsters', was the most original.

Scottish Opera's Ring Cycle was nominated for the South Bank Show Award, and the Opera Award by the Manchester Evening News, the latter after the Company's visit to The Lowry, Salford. Sir Richard Armstrong, Scottish Opera's music director, who conducted the Ring Cycle, was both knighted and received the Royal Philharmonic Society Music Award in early 2004. He has renewed his contract with Scottish Opera until July 2005. Despite this great artistic and popular success, Scottish Opera was in dire financial trouble. The £4.5 million advanced by the Scottish Arts Council for 2003–4 was insufficient for the company to continue with its large-scale productions as well as its commitments to education and small-scale touring. In June 2004 Scottish Opera proposed a plan, accepted by the Scottish Executive, by which the latter would provide up to £7 million towards restructuring costs while the Company repays the Scottish Arts Council over four years. The number of personnel will be reduced from 208 to 120, with cuts mainly from the technical and administration departments, but also from the chorus. The orchestra will be retained.

Meanwhile The Minotaur, a children's opera with music by Julian Evans and libretto by Allan Dunn, based on the Greek myth of Theseus and the Minotaur, was successfully launched by Scottish Opera for All in May 2004 and toured five cities. Earlier, some 10,000 children from over one hundred schools across Scotland participated in a series of Scottish Opera for All workshops. By the time the children actually saw and heard The Minotaur in the theatre, they knew all about the story of Theseus, Ariadne and the Minotaur, as well as the mechanics of staging an opera. The opera itself was performed by seven singers and a dancer (as the Minotaur), with seven players in the orchestra. It was widely praised by local and national press.

Welsh National Opera's (WNO) splendid new production of Eugene Onegin was conducted by Tugan Sokhiev, the company's young Russian music director, who was obviously in perfect rapport with Tchaikovsky's opera. However, later in the season he attempted Verdi's La traviata (also a new production) with rather less success, and after one performance, relinquished the baton for the remaining performances. In August 2004 Sokhiev resigned as music director and WNO announced that Carlo Rizzi, music director from 1992–2001, would return for the next two seasons. WNO paid a very welcome visit to London's Sadler's Wells Theatre, where the repertory included Eugene Onegin and a revival of Madama Butterfly, originally directed by Joachim Hertz in 1978. WNO is due to move into its new home at the Wales Millennium Centre in Cardiff Bay in spring 2005. As Anthony Freud, General Director of WNO, declared at a press conference, 'The WMC . . . will allow us a firmer base from which to tour throughout the UK and internationally. With our rehearsal and administrative base, and a significant proportion of our technical production work, being contained within the WMC, we will be . . . at the heart of one of the most exciting arts buildings to have been created in Europe in decades.'

Glyndebourne Festival Opera offered two new productions in the 2004 season. First came Mozart's Die Zauberflöte, a perennial favourite with Sussex opera goers, staged by Adrian Noble, former artistic director of the Royal Shakespeare Company. The second novelty was a double bill with Rachmaninov's The Miserly Knight and Puccini's Gianni Schicchi. At first sight these two operas, one a 'little tragedy', as Pushkin's story, the basis of the libretto, is called, and the other a riotous black comedy, have little or nothing in common. However, they do share a theme, namely greed for money and power. Staged by Annabel Arden and conducted by music director Vladimir Jurowski (who also conducted Die Zauberflöte), these two fascinating variations on a theme were dominated by the singers of the title roles – Russian baritone Sergei Leiferkus in Rachmaninov and Italian baritone Alessandro Corbelli in Puccini – who provided a most rewarding evening's entertainment.

Other summer festivals also provided interesting and original work. At Aldeburgh there was the world premiere of Harrison Birtwistle's The Io Passion in June, repeated in London by Almeida Opera a month later. Almeida also presented a new opera, Man and Boy: Dada by Michael Nyman, on the passion for collecting bus-tickets and a fictitious friendship between the émigré German artist Kurt Schwitters and a young boy in WW2 London. Cheltenham, in July, offered Britten's Death in Venice and The Turn of the Screw, as well as the first performance of Birds, Bones, Barks: a Trojan Trilogy by Edward Rushton. At Grange Park during June and July, Tchaikovsky's The Enchantress was a welcome rarity, while Garsington offered an even rarer Tchaikovsky opera, Cherevichki. In July, Buxton put on an amusing production of Rossini's Turk in Italy as well as the first full staging of Will Todd's The Blackened Man. Holland Park Opera, running from early June to early August, performed Bellini's Norma, with a fine performance in the title role from Nelly Miriciou, Puccini's La fanciulla del West and Verdi's Luisa Miller. Most enterprising of all, Loughborough Festival staged a complete Ring Cycle, with Donald McIntyre, now 70 but still in excellent form, as Wotan.

At the 2004 Edinburgh Festival, Hanover State Opera brought productions of Pelléas et Mélisande and Luigi Nono's Al gran sole carico d'amore, as well as a concert performance of Strauss's Capriccio. There were also concert performances of Weber's three major operas, Der Freischütz, Oberon and Euryanthe. Operatic items in the Promenade Concerts at the Albert Hall, all broadcast by BBC Radio 3 and some televised, included Dvořák's Dimitry, in celebration of the centenary of the composer's death. Other Proms ranged from Britten's church-parable Curlew River to Wagner's The Ringgold, played by the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment conducted by Simon Rattle, and from Holst's Savitri and Bartók's Duke Bluebeard's Castle to Glyndebourne's Rachmaninov/Puccini double bill.

GONE BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

The great German bass-baritone Hans Hotter died on 6 December 2003 at the age of 94. The finest Wotan of his generation, he first appeared at Covent Garden in 1947 with the Vienna State Opera, singing the Count in Le nozze di Figaro and the title role of Don Giovanni. He returned the following year to sing with the fledgling Covent Garden Opera Company (later to become the Royal Opera) as Wotan (Die Walküre), Hans Sachs (Die Meistersinger) and Kurwenal (Tristan und Isolde). He continued to visit Covent Garden for many years and directed a Ring Cycle there. His roles included Amfortas and later Gurnemanz in Parsifal, and King Mark as well as Amfortas in Tristan. His career lasted well into his eighties, and Schigolch in Berg's Lulu became a favourite role. In sharp contrast, the career of British soprano Susan Chilcott, who died on 4 September 2003 aged only 40, was tragically short. She sang with all the British opera companies, making her debut at Covent Garden in 2002 as Lisa in Tchaikovsky's Queen of Spades, opposite Plácido Domingo as Hermann. She sang regularly in Europe and the USA, making her Metropolitan debut in New York as Helena, in Britten's A Midsummer Night's Dream, in 2002. Other roles she sang included Ellen Orford (Peter Grimes), the Governess (The Turn of the Screw), Fiordiligi (Così fan tutte), Blanche (Poulenc's Dialogues des Carmélites) and the title roles of Dvořák's Rusalka and Janáček's Jenufa.

Julia Trevelyan Oman, British stage designer, died on 10 October 2003, aged 73. Her designs for opera included three very fine productions for Covent Garden: Eugene Onegin (1971); La Bohème (1974), which is still in the repertory, and; Die Fledermaus (1977). She also designed Richard Strauss's Arabella for Glyndebourne (1984). As a boy soprano, David Hemmings, the British actor who died aged 62 on 3 December 2003, created the role of Miles at the premiere in 1954 of Britten's The Turn of the Screw at the Teatro la Fenice in Venice. Norman Platt, founder and for twenty years artistic director of Kent Opera, died on 4 January 2004, aged 84. He started his career as a baritone singer at Sadler's Wells and with the English Opera Group. In 1969 he founded Kent Opera, which he successfully ran as a touring company, performing works by Monteverdi and Mozart that did not need very large orchestras. He employed Nicholas Hytner and Jonathan Miller in their first roles as opera directors, and in 1987 commissioned Judith Weir's A Night at the Chinese Opera, which was greatly admired. In 1989, Kent Opera's subsidy from the Arts Council was withdrawn, and the Company had to close.

Bernard Dickerson, the British tenor who died on 13 February 2004, aged 69, sang for many years with the English Opera Group, creating roles in Gordon Crosse's Purgatory (1966) and Thea Musgrave's The Voice of Ariadne (1974). He also sang in Britten's church-operas The Prodigal Son and Curlew River, and was a riotously funny Flute in A Midsummer Night's Dream. In 1973 he took the title role at the British premiere of Shostakovich's The Nose for the New Opera Company. He also sang at Glyndebourne, Covent Garden and with Opera North. William McAlpine, the Scottish tenor who died on 2 February 2004, aged 81, made his debut in 1952 at Covent Garden as Andres in the first British stage performance of Berg's Wozzeck. The following year he created the Spirit of the Masque in Britten's Gloriana. In 1955 he moved to Sadler's Wells, where he sang major roles for over a decade. At Glyndebourne he sang Idamante in Idomeneo and Bacchus in Ariadne auf Naxos. He returned to Covent Garden for the title role of Les Contes d'Hoffmann. Adele Leigh, the British soprano who died on the 25 May 2004, aged 76, joined Covent Garden Opera Company in 1948. Her first major role was Cherubino in The Marriage of Figaro. She later sang Susanna in that opera, Sophie and Octavian in Der Rosenkavalier and many other roles. In 1955 she created Bella in Michael Tippett's The Midsummer Marriage, scoring a great success. In 1963 she moved to Vienna to sing at the Volksoper.

PARLIAMENT

Prime Minister Tony Blair faced another turbulent year caused by the ramifications of the war with Iraq, the UK's close support for the USA and his perceived style of leadership. The issue of his handling of a possible new Constitution for Europe also brought his critics to the fore and he was even the subject of a flour bomb attack in the Chamber on 19 May (though this was to do with the campaign group Fathers 4 Justice). He survived the publication of two reports (Hutton and Butler) on the Iraq conflict and despite seeing his Commons majority reduced to just 5 on the second reading of the Higher Education Bill in January, having a difficult spring and early summer and losing a by-election in what should have been a safe Labour seat in Leicester South in July, he was in a strong enough position to see off the Opposition in a debate on the Butler report on 20 July and then nominate his close ally Peter Mandelson as Britain's choice for the next European Commissioner. This was despite widespread backbench dissent, just as Parliament went off for their summer break on 23 July. The Conservative stance on the conflict seemed to do no favours for the new Conservative leader Michael Howard (November 2003), who claimed in July that if he had known there were no Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) in Iraq he might not have voted for the war. Liberal Democrat leader Charles Kennedy was constant in his opposition to the war and criticism of the handling of the post conflict issues and this stance seemed to go down well with the electors in the July by-elections.

IRAQ AND THE MIDDLE EAST

It was this issue that continued to dominate British politics. Returning for the short pre-conference session of Parliament on 8 September 2003, Foreign Secretary Jack Straw updated MPs on developments in Iraq and the Middle East over the summer. Nine Britons had lost their lives in Iraq since he last spoke in the House on 17 July, but he claimed 'we are determined to work with the international community to establish peace and security across the whole region.' Conservative Foreign Affairs spokesman Michael Ancram supported the Government saying 'What we did in the war was right. What we must not do now is squander the peace for lack of political direction.' In an Opposition debate on the military Situation in Iraq on 9 September, Conservative Defence spokesman Bernard Jenkin felt 'the Government must convince the British people that the prize of democracy and prosperity for the Iraqi people are prizes worth the money, sweat and even the lives of the hard-pressed men and women of our armed forces.' Defence Secretary Geoff Hoon reiterated that 'our commitment to a stable, united and law-abiding Iraqi state, welcomed back into the international community and providing effective and representative government for its own people, remains constant.' Liberal Democrat Defence spokesperson Paul Keetch turned on the Conservative Party, as well as the Government, 'I find it surprising that the Conservatives, who supported the decision to go to war and were the only people more vociferous in their support for the US than the Government, should now complain so bitterly about its aftermath.' One of the leading backbench Labour critics of the war Alice Mahon stated 'we are right to concentrate on the misleading devices that were employed to get the country to go to war.' SNP Westminster leader Alex Salmond felt that the people 'deeply resent being gathered into a conflict on a trail of deception.'

On 12 November 2003 Secretary of State for International Development Hilary Benn made a statement on progress of reconstruction in Iraq, 'we must all remain committed to the economic and social reconstruction of Iraq and to a better life for its people.' Conservative International Development spokesman John Bercow felt, 'Is it not the truth that, whereas the Government, notably in the form of the Prime Minister, displayed courage and statesmanship in the conduct of war, the reality is that they have been guilty of dithering and abdication of responsibility in failing to prepare for the peace?'

On 20 November Jack Straw made a statement on the bomb explosion in Istanbul, which appeared to target British interests and confirmed that 'we shall stand united with the international community in the fight against this appalling global terrorism.'

On 11 December Geoff Hoon published the Defence White Paper – Delivering Security in a Changing World, and a separate report – Operations in Iraq: Lessons for the Future.

Returning after the Christmas Recess on 5 January 2004, Jack Straw made a statement on Libya and its decision, announced on 19 December to eliminate its weapons of mass destruction – 'an important step forward . . . to enhancing international peace and security.'

On 28 January Tony Blair made a statement on the publication of Lord Hutton's report into the death of Ministry of Defence special adviser Dr David Kelly, which the Government 'accepted in full.' 'Over the last six or more months, allegations have been made that go to the heart of the integrity of the Government, our intelligence services and me personally as Prime Minister . . . The allegation that I or anyone else lied to this House or deliberately misled the country by falsifying intelligence on WMD is itself the real lie. Lord Hutton concluded 'false accusations of fact impugning the integrity of others should not be made.' Michael Howard also accepted the conclusions of the report but called for a full independent inquiry into the wider questions of the affair. He felt 'what will remain in people's minds is the blinding light that this inquiry has shed on the innermost workings of the Prime Minister and his Government.' Charles Kennedy commented, 'the Prime Minister cannot therefore dodge or escape profound questions about the basis on which his judgement (to go to war) was made.' Labour MP Gerald Kaufman (Manchester Gorton) posed the question that in light of the criticisms of the BBC in the report, 'how can the BBC continue as a public service broadcasting operation, funded by a tax, unless people are cleared out and a new regime appointed?'

On 2 February 2004 Culture Secretary Tessa Jowell answered an Urgent Notice Question from Labour MP David Winnick on the procedure for appointing a new Chair of the BBC Governors following the resignation of Gavyn Davies and the Director-General Greg Dyke over the Hutton report. 'We all want a strong BBC that is independent of government and anyone who cares about
